THE PRACTICE AND THEORY OF LAWYER DISQUALIFICATION

Copyright © 2014 by Keith Swisher

Lawyer disqualification is commonly feared--as a "strategic," "tactical," and "harassing" "potent weapon" depriving clients of their trusted counsel of choice. Although disqualification comes with costs, fundamental misunderstandings fuel this common fear. This Article finds that disqualification is a uniquely effective remedy for lawyer misconduct and makes the following contributions to the law and practice of lawyer disqualification: (1) an exhaustive study surveying disqualification cases and refuting the common misconception that disqualification motions are uncontrollably on the rise and uncontrollably bad; (2) an accessible analysis of lawyer disqualification doctrine that permits lawyers and judges to begin assessing common disqualification questions efficiently and comprehensively; and (3) specific suggestions for practical improvements, including cost-shifting, legal presumptions, and better procedures in disqualification proceedings.

at issue. Because many courts and commentators generally disdain disqualification motions and fear that such motions are increasing significantly,<sup>61</sup> courts apply heightened scrutiny to the movant's motivations and conduct. Courts will analyze the movant's: (1) standing to challenge the lawyer's conduct; (2) diligence in bringing the motion; (3) knowledge of the circumstances; (4) fault or misconduct; (5) motive in bringing the motion; and (6) potential prejudice if the motion is denied. These inquiries are addressed in order below.

First, courts scrutinize whether the movant has standing to assert the conflict of interest (or other basis) justifying disqualification. The movant might lack standing if the movant is not a current or former client of the lawyer and the movant cannot show concrete harm to itself or the proceedings.<sup>62</sup> Although *89 courts rarely say so explicitly, a non-client movant might also face a higher burden of proof.<sup>63</sup>

Second, courts heavily scrutinize the movant's diligence in bringing the disqualification issue to the court's attention.<sup>64</sup> Importantly, any significant delay between the time that the movant learns of the lawyer's misconduct and the filing of the motion to disqualify often results in a "waiver" of the movant's right to seek disqualification.<sup>65</sup> A key piece of advice for movants (and their lawyers) considering whether to file a motion to disqualify is to do so promptly. Whether courts will consider the motion timely filed "depends on such circumstances as the length of delay from the time when the conflict was reasonably apparent, whether the movant was represented by counsel at relevant times, why the delay occurred, and whether acting now would result in prejudice to the responding party."<sup>66</sup>

Third, courts are also interested, although less frequently, in the movant's preexisting knowledge about the underlying conflict or other misconduct. This knowledge could concern legal services generally, law firm conflicts, and waiver agreements, among other areas.<sup>67</sup> If the movant is "sophisticated" in these *90 matters, for example, this factor could weigh against disqualification.<sup>68</sup> Of course, if the movant's specific state of knowledge rises to the level of informed consent to the alleged conflict, that fact will usually be dispositive, and the motion will fail accordingly.<sup>69</sup>

Fourth, courts will consider whether the movant is at fault or committed misconduct, either in the underlying conflict of interest (or other violation) or in bringing the motion to disqualify.<sup>70</sup> Perhaps, for example, the movant had misled the lawyer as to what entity the lawyer was actually representing,<sup>71</sup> or the movant's careless handling of privileged emails caused the emails to wind up in *91 the opposing counsel's inbox.<sup>72</sup> Such fault or misconduct on the movant's part generally weighs against disqualification.

Fifth, the movant's motive is one of the most salient factors to courts considering disqualification.<sup>73</sup> Courts often try to discern whether the movant is using the disqualification motion as a tool simply to delay the proceedings, harass the lawyer or lawyer's client, or otherwise seek an unfair advantage in the litigation. Any suggestion of these tactics--no matter how slight or speculative--will usually weigh heavily against disqualification.<sup>74</sup>

Sixth, and finally, courts consider the prejudice that might flow to the movant *92 were they to deny disqualification. The most common concern is that, but for disqualification, the lawyer would be in a position to use the movant's confidential information against the movant (who is often a former client).<sup>75</sup> There are other forms of prejudice (e.g., betrayal), however, and courts will generally consider those as well.<sup>76</sup> Perhaps obviously, more prejudice means disqualification is more likely; less prejudice means that disqualification is less likely.

2. FACTORS FOCUSING ON THE LAWYER

Both the movant and, more obviously, the challenged lawyer face the most court scrutiny in disqualification analysis. This Subsection contains the specific factors relating to the lawyer and the lawyer's conduct that courts will examine when making their disqualification determinations. To the extent the following factors are present and discernible in a given case, courts will analyze the lawyer's: (1) knowledge about the conflict of interest or other misconduct; (2) motives; (3) ethical violation or appearance of impropriety; (4) violation's severity; and (5) occasionally, potential prejudice (flowing to the lawyer or lawyer's firm) should the court grant the disqualification motion.<sup>77</sup>

First, courts consider the state of the lawyer's knowledge about the conflict or other violation. The lawyer might have inadvertently engaged in the conflict of interest, or the conflict might have been unforeseeable until it was unavoidable.<sup>78</sup> *93 If so, this will generally weigh against disqualification; if to the contrary the lawyer foresaw the issue and disregarded it, this

- <sup>70</sup> See FLAMM, supra note 4, at § 24.5 (noting that courts will weigh against disqualification “a situation where the ethical problem that is alleged to warrant counsel’s disqualification was created by the moving party or its counsel”). Although not necessarily “misconduct,” the client’s responsibility for creating the conflict might affect the court’s analysis. See Ex parte AmSouth Bank, N.A., 589 So. 2d 715, 722 (Ala. 1991) (refusing to disqualify law firm that had violated the rule against concurrent client conflicts of interest in part because the firm “did not by its own actions create the conflict of interest;” the conflict was created when one client, represented by a different lawyer, sued the law firm’s other client); In re Meador, 968 S.W.2d 346, 351-52 (Tex. 1998) (noting that “a trial court should consider ... the extent to which movant may be at fault for the unauthorized disclosure”).
- <sup>71</sup> Boston Scientific Corp. v. Johnson & Johnson Inc., 647 F. Supp. 2d 369, 374-75 (D. Del. 2009) (“Howrey’s failure to comply with Model Rule 1.7 is, to a significant degree, due to Wyeth’s conduct. Among other things, Wyeth’s naming conventions, its use of the same in-house attorneys on matters involving different subsidiaries without consistently identifying to Howrey which entity those in-house attorneys were representing, and the willingness of it and its subsidiaries to receive billing invoices for matters on which they were not directly engaged with Howrey, together created significant confusion for Howrey as to which entity or entities it was representing .... Wyeth should not now benefit from such obfuscatory conduct. Accordingly, the court declines to disqualify Howrey from the instant suits and instead orders Howrey to maintain its ethical wall.”). But see Wyeth v. Abbott Labs., 692 F. Supp. 2d 453, 460 (D.N.J. 2010) (noting that, although “Wyeth does bear some responsibility for creating the conflict and, therefore, should not necessarily benefit from that conduct,” “[i]t is the attorney’s responsibility to avoid conflicts of interest”).
- <sup>72</sup> See In re Meador, 968 S.W.2d at 351-52 (noting that courts should consider in similar circumstances “the extent to which movant may be at fault for the unauthorized disclosure” of privileged information).
- <sup>73</sup> See generally FLAMM, supra note 4, at §§ 25.8, 25.9 (footnotes omitted) (discussing the “significance of the moving party’s motivation” and noting that courts are “likely to infer a strategic motivation in a case where the moving party effectively created the ethical problem that provides the basis for the motion; as where the moving party named the challenged lawyer as a party to the lawsuit, imparted confidential information to counsel after becoming aware that he was representing an adversary, or filed a motion for consolidation which, if granted, would inject a conflict issue into the case,” and when the movant delayed in bringing the motion); FLAMM, supra note 4, at § 25.7 (discussing “strategic motivations for seeking disqualification”); ABA/BNA LAWYERS’ MANUAL ON PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT § 51:1905 (noting that courts will consider “[w]hether the motion appears to have been filed for tactical purposes”).
- <sup>74</sup> See, e.g., Vegetable Kingdom, Inc. v. Katzen, 653 F. Supp. 917, 919, 925-26 (N.D.N.Y. 1987) (denying disqualification motion and imposing sanctions because the court did “not harbor a scintilla of doubt that the attorneys ... brought this motion purely to harass their opponent”); see also id. (“The court is well aware that disqualification motions are often interposed for tactical reasons wholly unrelated to concerns for the maintenance of the ethical standards of the legal profession. Such motions are often designed to harass opposing counsel, cause delay, or needlessly increase the cost of pursuing a cause of action. Because of this, in part, the courts in this circuit have been reluctant to disqualify attorneys on the motion of opposing counsel .... The court finds this cynical perversion of the commendable objectives which inspired the promulgation of codes of conduct designed to guide an attorney through difficult ethical dilemmas particularly offensive.”); N. Am. Foreign Trading Corp. v. Zale Corp., 83 F.R.D. 293, 296-97 (S.D.N.Y. 1979) (“The method employed by counsel here certainly supports the oft-expressed public view that lawyers are causing their clients needless expenses in the conduct of litigation. No purpose has been served by the instant motion other than to harass plaintiff and his counsel and to delay these proceedings further .... The motion was a ploy and it was designed as a vexatious and oppressive tactic against plaintiff and its counsel.”); Alexander v. Super. Ct., 685 P.2d 1309, 1317 (Ariz. 1984) (denying motion to disqualify in part because movant appeared to be using the motion as a “tactical tool” for the “purpose of harassing”); Centra, Inc. v. Chandler Ins. Co., 540 N.W.2d 318, 326 (Neb. 1995) (denying disqualification and noting that “[t]he potential to gain an advantage in litigation through collateral attack cannot be lost on applicants. Applicants have raised no objections to the department’s findings on the merits, and yet applicants ask this court to remand this cause for a second bite at the apple versus different opposing counsel.”); Kenneth L. Penegar, The Loss of Innocence: A Brief History of Law Firm Disqualification In the Courts, 8 GEO. J. LEGAL ETHICS 831, 833 (1995) (noting Supreme Court and lower court decisions that sought to discourage such motions on the suspicion that the motions “were made to achieve a tactical advantage in the pending litigation and not for the loftier professional responsibility concerns asserted”); RICHARD E. FLAMM, LAWYER DISQUALIFICATION: CONFLICTS OF INTEREST AND OTHER BASES 16 (2003) (“The proliferation of [disqualification] motions may be explained, in part, by the decreasing reluctance on the part of some counsel to resort to disqualification in an effort to secure a strategic advantage for their client.”). A few courts have resisted considering the movant’s motivation, deeming it to be irrelevant. See, e.g., In re Cendant Corp. Sec. Litig., 124 F. Supp. 2d 235, 250 n.10 (D.N.J. 2000) (denying request to permit conflicted attorney to continue representation and noting that even if the motion was “vexatious,” the movant’s motive was irrelevant). I return to this suggestion in Part III.A.1 below.
