DEP'T OF LABOR & INDUS., Petitioner, v. LABORWORKS INDUS. STAFFING SPECIALISTS, INC., Respondent.	(CORRECTED) MOTION TO CONSOLIDATE
DEP'T OF LABOR & INDUS., Petitioner, v. TRADESMEN INT'L, LLC, Respondent.

I. INTRODUCTION & IDENTITY OF MOVING PARTY

The moving party, Petitioner Department of Labor and Industries (L&I), seeks to consolidate two cases, Laborworks and Tradesmen. Dep't of Labor & Indus. v. Laborworks Indus. Staffing Specialists, Inc., No. 79717-4-I, 2 (Wash. Ct. App. Aug. 17, 2020) (Laborworks slip op.) (Appendix A); Dep't of Labor & Indus. v. Tradesmen Int'l, LLC, No.

79634-8-I, 3 (Wash. Ct. App. Aug. 17, 2020) (Tradesmen slip op.) (Appendix B). L&I filed petitions for discretionary review in these cases on September 16, 2020.

Both cases address the same subject matter: whether a staffing agency is an employer of temporary workers under the economic realities test for the purposes of the Washington Industrial Health & Safety Act (WISHA) when it knew of the hazards at the worksite. Both cases were considered on the same day and by the same panel at the Court of Appeals. It would save time and expense and provide for a fair review of the cases to consider them together.

II. STATEMENT OF RELIEF SOUGHT

L&I requests that Laborworks and Tradesmen be consolidated and considered by the same panel to determine if review should be granted and, if review is granted, then considered together by the Court.

III. FACTS RELEVANT TO MOTION

On August 17, 2020, the Court of Appeals issued two decisions about temporary workers: Laborworks and Tradesmen. In Laborworks, the company leased employees to customer Strategic Materials, which operated a recycling plant that sorts waste, including glass and used hypodermic needles. Laborworks slip op. 2. Employees at the site had been “poked” by sharp objects, making them vulnerable to contract Hepatitis B. Id. at 3. L&I cited Laborworks for the failure to follow blood-borne pathogen regulations after knowing that employees had been “poked” with sharp objects. Laborworks slip op. at 3-4. The Board ruled against the Department because it found that Strategic controlled the work environment, not Laborworks. Id. at 4. The Court of Appeals upheld the Board. It ruled that Laborworks was not an employer because it did not control the work environment or work activity. Id. at 7-9. It did not give credence to L&I’s argument that Laborworks was an employer because it knew about the hazards at the worksite. Id. at 6, n.2. It cited to Tradesmen. Id.

In Tradesmen, the company leased its employee Reti Sienafo to customer Dochnahl Construction. Tradesmen slip op. 3. Although it inspected jobsites at the beginning of a job, it did not inspect the site that Sienafo had been moved to. Id. at 3. This was because Dochnahl had not informed Tradesmen of the job switch. Tradesmen did not have a contractual arrangement to prevent their customers from switching job sites, and it did not enforce its informal policy that there should be notification. Id.; AR 680, 743. Tradesmen knew that customers switched employees and did nothing to stop it. Id.; AR 680-81 (for one manager switches made once a month). L&I issued a WISHA citation for Tradesmen's failure of to require that its customer provide fall protection to its employee. Tradesmen slip op. at 4. L&I determined that Tradesmen did not exercise due diligence in ensuring their customers notified Tradesmen before moving a worker and because Tradesmen knew that customers moved workers without such notification. AR 681. L&I alleges that because Tradesmen should have known about the hazards at Dochnahl, it was a liable employer. Tradesmen slip op. at 6-7. Tradesmen appealed to the Board of Industrial Insurance Appeals. Id. at 4.

The Board ruled against the Department because Tradesmen did not control the work environment. Id. at 5. The Court of Appeals upheld the Board. Id. at 13. It ruled that Tradesmen was not an employer because it did not control the work environment or work activity. Id. at 10-12. It did not accept the Department's argument that Tradesmen was an employer because it should have known about the hazards at the worksite. Id. at. 6-8.

IV. GROUNDS FOR RELIEF

The Court may consolidate these matters under RAP 3.3. It would save time and expense, and would provide for a fair review of the cases.

Both Laborworks and Tradesmen have the same issue involving whether a staffing agency is an employer under WISHA. Both cases involve the issue of knowledge under the economic realities test. L&I argues in both cases that it would hurt workers to have a rule that a staffing agency with knowledge does not have to comply with WISHA regulations. Laborworks has an additional issue about whether the permanent nature of the relationship with the staffing agency makes it responsible for regulations like blood-borne pathogens that apply from worksite to worksite. L&I argues that Becarra v. Expert Janitorial, LLC, 181 Wn.2d 186, 198, 332 P.3d 415 (2014), permits both knowledge and permanency to be considered under the economic realities test.

It will save time and expense to consider these cases together, with a fair review of the issues, because they have overlapping issues. Context in one case will aid the context in the other case. It will also service judicial economy because the reviewers for the petition for review will consolidate their efforts. For oral argument, if review is granted, it will allow complete, efficient, fair consideration of the issues.

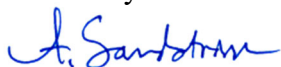

V. CONCLUSION

For the above reasons, the Department requests the matters be consolidated.

DATED this 17th day of September 2020.

LABORWORKS INDUSTRIAL
STAFFING SPECIALISTS, INC.,

Appellant.

No. 79717-4-I

DIVISION ONE

UNPUBLISHED OPINION

CHUN, J. — Laborworks Industrial Staffing Specialists, Inc., assigned temporary workers to Strategic Materials, which operated a recycling plant. The Department of Labor and Industries cited Laborworks for violations of the Washington Industrial Safety and Health Act (WISHA) at the plant. Laborworks appealed to an industrial appeals judge and then to the Board of Industrial Insurance Appeals, arguing that, as a staffing company, with respect to the violations, it was not an employer subject to WISHA. The Board agreed and vacated the citation. The Department then appealed to the superior court, which reversed the Board's decision. Laborworks appeals. We conclude that, under the economic realities test, Laborworks did not constitute an employer for purposes of the citation and reverse the superior court's decision.

I. BACKGROUND

Laborworks, a staffing company, assigns temporary workers to clients in the light industrial sector.

In June 2014, Laborworks signed a General Staffing Agreement to assign temporary workers to Strategic Materials, which operates a facility that recycles and sorts waste including glass and used hypodermic needles. In the Agreement, Strategic Materials agreed to supervise the workers and to provide a safe job site:

CLIENT's Duties and Responsibilities

2. CLIENT will

- a. Properly supervise Assigned Employees performing its work and be responsible for its business operations, products, services, and intellectual property;
- b. Properly supervise, control, and safeguard its premises, processes, or systems, and not permit Assigned Employees to operate any vehicle or mobile equipment, or entrust them with unattended premises, cash, checks, keys, credit cards, merchandise, confidential or trade secret information, negotiable instruments, or other valuables without STAFFING FIRM's express prior written approval or as strictly required by the job description provided to STAFFING FIRM;
- c. Provide Assigned Employees with a safe work site, comply with all governmental laws as they may apply, including but not limited to the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 (OSHA), United States Longshoremen's and Harborworker's Compensation Act, Jones Act, Equal Opportunity Act (EEO), and Immigration laws, and provide appropriate information, training, and safety equipment with respect to any hazardous substances or conditions to which they may be exposed at the work site;
- d. Not change Assigned Employees' job duties without STAFFING FIRM's express prior written approval.

Laborworks then conducted a safety walk through at the Strategic Materials job site and completed a Job Site Safety Evaluation Report. In the Report, Laborworks verified that Strategic Materials had a written safety program and hazard communication program, and would provide safety gear to the temporary workers. Strategic Materials also agreed to allow Laborworks to conduct site investigations of injuries and accidents. Laborworks provided its temporary workers assigned to the site with the Department's online blood-borne pathogens training and offered Hepatitis B vaccinations to some of the workers.

Laborworks paid the temporary workers daily based on the number of hours worked. Strategic Materials kept track of the hours worked and reported the hours to Laborworks. Strategic Materials set the base rate of pay, which Laborworks then used to determine the amount for workers' compensation premiums, unemployment compensation premiums, and commission payments. Strategic Materials also directed the temporary workers' activities and could terminate temporary workers from the job site. Laborworks could terminate the workers' employment from its staffing agency.

Laborworks learned about a February 2016 incident where a temporary worker "was poked in some way" at Strategic Materials. Another temporary worker suffered an injury in a "needle-stick incident" in July 2016.

In 2017, the Department cited Laborworks with three serious and two general violations of the Washington Administrative Code (WAC) section 296-823, which concerns occupational exposure to blood-borne pathogens. The Department later issued a Corrective Notice of Redetermination (CNR) affirming the violations issued in the citation.

Laborworks appealed the CNR to an industrial appeals judge. Laborworks argued that it was not an employer for purposes of the WISHA and that “the Department failed to establish that any employees were exposed to blood or any other, potentially-infectious material.” The industrial appeals judge affirmed the CNR.

Laborworks appealed to the Board. The Board issued a Decision and Order vacating the CNR. The Board made two findings of fact on the issue of whether Laborworks was an employer in relation to the citation:

4. LaborWorks, a temporary staffing company, contracted with Strategic to provide workers to work at a Strategic recycling facility. LaborWorks paid workers’ compensation, unemployment insurance, and wages for workers it provided to Strategic, but Strategic determined the base wage rate. LaborWorks also provided initial training to workers it sent to Strategic but performed no random site checks at the premises.
5. Both LaborWorks and Strategic maintained the right to terminate workers. However, Strategic exerted daily control over the employees by assigning work and providing supervision over the LaborWorks workers.

Based on these findings, the Board concluded (2-1) that Laborworks was not an “employer” for WISHA purposes.¹

The Department then appealed the Decision and Order to the superior court. Though the superior court determined that substantial evidence supported the Board's findings, it concluded that Laborworks was an employer and reversed the Board's decision.

Laborworks appeals.

II. ANALYSIS

In WISHA appeals, this court reviews the Board's decision based on the record before the agency. Erection Co. v. Dep't of Labor & Indus., 160 Wn. App. 194, 201, 248 P.3d 1085 (2011). We review the Board's findings of fact to determine whether substantial evidence supports them. Potelco, Inc. v. Dep't of Labor & Indus., 191 Wn. App. 9, 21, 361 P.3d 767 (2015). Substantial evidence is what "would persuade a fair-minded person of the truth or correctness of the matter." Erection Co., 160 Wn. App. at 202. If substantial evidence supports the factual findings, then the findings are conclusive and the panel next determines whether the findings support the conclusions of law. Erection Co., 160 Wn. App. at 202. We view the evidence and its reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the prevailing party in the highest forum that exercised fact finding authority. See id. at 202. Here, we do so in the light most favorable to Laborworks, which prevailed before the Board.

"The legislature enacted [WISHA] 'to assure, insofar as may reasonably be possible, safe and healthful working conditions for every [worker] in the state of Washington.'" Erection Co., 160 Wn. App. at 201 (quoting RCW 49.17.010). We liberally interpret WISHA statutes and regulations to achieve their purpose of providing safe working conditions for every Washington worker. Erection Co., 160 Wn. App. at 202.

WISHA renders employers responsible for the health and safety of their employees. Potelco, 191 Wn. App. at 30. “Any entity that engages in any business and employs one or more employees is an employer for WISHA purposes.” Martinez Melgoza & Assocs. Inc. v. Dep’t of Labor & Indus., 125 Wn. App. 843, 848, 106 P.3d 776 (2005) (citing RCW 49.17.020(4)). To promote WISHA’s safety objectives, if two or more employers share responsibility for the same employee, “the Department may cite multiple employers for violating workplace safety standards.” Potelco, 191 Wn. App. at 30.

The Department argues that Laborworks is a liable employer under the economic realities test.² Laborworks responds that it is not so liable because it lacked control over the Strategic Materials job site. We conclude that, under the economic realities test, Laborworks is not an employer with respect to the violations.

“When there is a WISHA violation involving leased or temporary employees, the Board uses the ‘economic realities test’ to determine which employer should be issued the WISHA citation.” Potelco, 191 Wn. App. at 30-31.

The test involves seven factors:

- 1) who the workers consider their employer;
- 2) who pays the workers’ wages;
- 3) who has the responsibility to control the workers;
- 4) whether the alleged employer has the power to control the workers;

² The Department also argues that we should apply a standard from its Dual Employers Directive, which would make Laborworks liable as an employer for the WISHA citations if they “knew or clearly should have known” of the violations. We recently rejected this argument in Department of Labor and Industries v. Tradesmen International, LLC, No. 79634-8 (Wash. Ct. App. Aug. 17, 2020).

- 5) whether the alleged employer has the power to fire, hire, or modify the employment condition of the workers;
- 6) whether the workers' ability to increase their income depends on efficiency rather than initiative, judgment, and foresight; and
- 7) how the workers' wages are established.

Potelco, Inc., 191 Wn. App. at 31. Under this test, “[t]he key question is whether the employer has the right to control the worker.” Potelco, Inc., 191 Wn. App. at 31.

The record lacks evidence about the first and sixth factors. We address the other factors in turn and, in doing so, we view the evidence and reasonable inferences therefrom in the light most favorable to Laborworks.

Payment of Wages

In the Agreement, Laborworks agreed to “[p]ay Assigned Employees’ wages and provide them with the benefits that [Laborworks] offers to them.” And Laborworks paid the workers their wages. Thus, this factor supports citing Laborworks as an employer in connection with the violations.

Responsibility to Control the Workers

The Department argues that Laborworks had the responsibility to control the temporary workers and that this “is demonstrated by [Laborworks] hiring, assigning to sites, paying the workers, covering workers’ compensation and unemployment, training, inspecting sites, directing compliance with safety rules, monitoring the provision of safety equipment, and by the company’s ability to discipline, terminate, or remove it [sic] workers from unsafe situations.” The Department says, “[I]n almost all temporary leasing situations[] both employers control[] the workers.” (Emphasis added.) But its argument fails to apply properly the economic realities test.

“[I]n leased employment situations, whether the lessor or the lessee should be cited for WISHA violations depends on the economic realities of who controls the workplace. Both employers cannot be cited unless they both have substantial control over the workers and the work environment involved in the violations.” In re Skills Res. Training Ctr., No. 95 W253 at 3 (Wash. Bd. of Indus. Ins. App. Aug. 5, 1997) (emphasis added). Under the Agreement, Strategic Materials had the responsibility to “[p]roperly supervise Assigned Employees performing its work” and to “[p]roperly supervise, safeguard, and control its premises.” Strategic Materials also took on the responsibility to “[p]rovide Assigned Employees with a safe work site.” Thus, under the contract, Strategic Materials bore the responsibility of controlling the workers and the job site. This factor weighs against citing Laborworks as an employer.

Power to Control the Workers

Laborworks did not have the power to control the temporary workers in most regards. Though Laborworks could assign temporary employees to Strategic Materials, its control over the temporary employees basically ended afterward. After assignment, Strategic Materials gave the daily job assignments, determined what processes the temporary workers would work on, and ensured that appropriate controls were being used. Following an initial safety inspection to determine what programs were in place and what personal protective equipment was required or provided, Laborworks did not conduct other safety inspections. Laborworks also did not send any supervisors to the job site to accompany its temporary workers.

“[T]he [Occupational Safety and Health Commission (OSHC)] has held companies that pay employees (including employee lease-back situations) are not employers unless they control the jobsite and the employees’ activities.”

Skills Res. Training Ctr., slip op. at 9. Though Laborworks had some general control over the workers through its power to assign the workers and the terms laid out in the Agreement,³ it lacked the power to control the job site and the temporary workers’ activities there. This factor also weighs against citing Laborworks as an employer.

Power to Fire, Hire, or Modify the Employment Condition of the Workers

Laborworks had the power to hire temporary workers and to fire them from their staffing company. Strategic Materials had the authority to fire a temporary worker from its work assignment. While the Agreement required Laborworks’ approval before Strategic Materials permitted temporary workers to perform certain tasks or made changes to their job duties, Laborworks lacked the authority to change their job conditions while on the assignment. Viewing the evidence and reasonable inferences therefore in the light most favorable to Laborworks, this factor weighs against citing Laborworks as an employer.

³ Sections 2b and 2d of the Agreement provided that Strategic Materials could not assign certain tasks to temporary workers or change their job duties without Laborworks’ permission.

Establishment of the Workers' Wages

Laborworks assigned employees to Strategic Materials daily, and so it issued paychecks to the temporary workers at the end of each day. Strategic Materials would communicate to Laborworks how many hours each temporary worker worked. Strategic Materials set the base rate of pay, which Laborworks then used to determine the amount for workers' compensation premiums, the unemployment compensation premiums, and their commission payment. Because Laborworks calculated the amount of the temporary workers' wages based on how many hours Strategic Materials reported and the base wage rate Strategic Materials set, this factor weighs against citing Laborworks as an employer.

Only one factor—who pays the workers' wages—supports holding Laborworks liable as an employer for the citations. Four factors, including the two relating the control, weigh to the contrary. Thus, the economic realities test dictates that Laborworks is not an employer with respect to the violations.

We determine that substantial evidence supports the Board's findings that Strategic Materials exerted daily control over the temporary workers by assigning work and providing supervision. Substantial evidence also supports the Board's findings that Laborworks paid the workers based on a base wage rate set by Strategic Materials, Laborworks provided initial training to temporary workers but did not perform random site checks, and both parties maintained their respective right to terminate workers' employment. These findings, and application of the economic realities test, support the conclusion that Laborworks was not an employer under WISHA with respect to the violations at issue.

We reverse.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR AND INDUSTRIES OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON,

Appellant,

v.

TRADESMEN INTERNATIONAL, LLC,

Respondent.

No. 79634-8-I

DIVISION ONE

PUBLISHED OPINION

CHUN, J. —Tradesmen International, LLC, a staffing company, assigned a temporary worker to a Dochnahl Construction job site. One day, without notifying Tradesmen, Dochnahl sent the temporary worker to a different job site, where the Department of Labor and Industries discovered several violations of the Washington Industrial Safety and Health Act (WISHA). The Department cited Tradesmen with two serious violations.

Tradesmen appealed. An industrial appeals judge (IAJ) determined that Tradesmen was not an employer under WISHA for purposes of the citation. The IAJ issued a proposed decision vacating the citation. The Board of Industrial Insurance Appeals affirmed (3-0) the IAJ's proposed decision. The superior court affirmed the Board's decision. The Department appeals, asserting that we should hold Tradesmen liable under the "knew or clearly should have known" standard from its Dual Employer Directive (Directive).¹ We reject this argument, apply the “economic realities test,” and affirm the superior court’s conclusion that Tradesmen was not an employer liable for the violations.

I. BACKGROUND

Tradesmen, a staffing company, assigns temporary workers to other employers. Most of the company’s business in Washington takes place in the construction industry.

Tradesmen provides safety training to their workers and provides, or helps their workers acquire, necessary personal protective equipment such as hard hats, safety glasses, and gloves. The company also ensures that job sites where it sends workers are safe by conducting a “walkout.” During a walkout, a Tradesmen field representative goes to the job site, checks for obvious safety hazards, and discusses general safety topics with its employees.

Tradesmen entered into a Client Service Agreement (CSA) with Dochnahl. In the CSA, Tradesmen agreed to assign temporary workers as needed and to be responsible for paying and determining the workers’ compensation.

Dochnahl agreed to be “solely responsible for directing, supervising and controlling Tradesmen employees as well as their work,” to “verify[] the accuracy of the records of actual time worked by Tradesmen employees,” and “to provide Tradesmen workers a safe work environment that complies with all applicable Federal [Occupational Safety Hazard Act (OSHA)] and/or equivalent state agency standards.” Dochnahl also agreed “to provide Tradesmen workers any specific safety training and/or equipment required for their work assignment, exclusive of boots, hard hats and safety glasses, . . . [and to] ensure Tradesmen workers wear all required safety equipment, as well as inspect, maintain and replace this equipment as needed.” Dochnahl, at its sole discretion, could terminate a Tradesman worker from its employ. Only Tradesmen, however, could fire a temporary worker from its staffing company.

Under a protocol, if a client wanted to move a temporary worker to a job site Tradesman had not yet inspected, the client was to notify the staffing company. Though the protocol was not in the written agreements with clients, Tradesmen established it through verbal agreement. Tradesmen said it was “rare” for a client not to call it when moving a worker.

In the spring of 2016, Dochnahl needed a temporary worker to perform “[t]ypical labor” and clean up at a construction site on Federal Avenue in Seattle. A Tradesmen field representative conducted a walkout and determined the site “checked out okay.” Tradesmen assigned a temporary worker to the site.

One day, Dochnahl sent Tradesmen’s temporary worker to a different job site, which was on Palatine Avenue in Seattle. Despite the protocol, Dochnahl moved the temporary worker without notifying Tradesmen. Tradesmen had not conducted a walkout at that site.

The Department inspected the Palatine Avenue site after receiving a tip that it had improper trenching and unsafe scaffolding. The Department discovered multiple WISHA violations and cited Dochnahl. The Department also cited Tradesmen with two serious violations for failing to ensure that (1) fall protection systems were implemented, and (2) a qualified person designed a wooden job-made scaffold.

Tradesmen appealed the citation to an IAJ, who issued a proposed order vacating the citation. The IAJ concluded that Tradesmen was not an employer for purposes of the citation based on findings that Tradesmen did not control the temporary worker or work environment.

The Department then appealed to the Board. The Department asked the Board to apply a standard from the Directive, as opposed to the economic realities test. The Directive, which establishes inspection and enforcement policies for situations involving two or more employers, states that the Department should cite an employer for a violation of which it knew or clearly should have known. Directive, at 5. The Board affirmed 3-0. It rejected the Department's argument under the Directive and concluded that Tradesmen was not liable as an employer for any violations the Department discovered during its inspection of the Palatine Avenue job site. The Board made several findings regarding the control that both Tradesmen and Dochnahl had over the temporary worker and the Palatine Avenue job site:

2. Tradesmen International, LLC, (Tradesmen) leases workers to its clients pursuant to agreements between Tradesmen and the clients. Under the agreements the client is solely responsible to direct and supervise the workers provided by Tradesmen and their work; to provide the worker with safety training specific to the work being done; to provide a safe work environment that complies with all applicable state and Federal health and safety standards; and may terminate the worker for any reason but a discriminatory one.

3. Tradesmen inspects each worksite to which it is informed that its workers are dispatched to ensure compliance with applicable safety and health laws, and will direct that corrections to any safety and health problems it discovers be effected. If the client moves the worker to work at a site other than the one Tradesmen has been informed of, protocol requires the client to inform Tradesmen of the move in order to permit Tradesmen to inspect the new site and arrange for correction of any safety and health hazards.

5. On April 26, 2016, Dochnahl transferred [the temporary worker] to a worksite located at 6521 N. Palatine, Seattle, Washington, without notifying Tradesmen of the change in [the temporary worker]'s worksite. [The temporary worker] did not inform Tradesmen of the change in worksites.

8. On April 26, 2016, Tradesmen did not control [the temporary worker] or the work he was performing at 6521 N. Palatine, Seattle, Washington.
9. On April 26, 2016, Tradesmen did not control the worksite or the work environment at 6521 N. Palatine, Seattle, Washington.
10. On April 26, 2016, Tradesmen did not know, nor through the applicable diligence could it have known, of the safety and health hazards to which [the temporary worker] was exposed at 6521 N. Palatine, Seattle, Washington.

The Department appealed the Board's decision to the Superior Court, which affirmed the Board's decision. The Department appeals.

II. ANALYSIS

In WISHA appeals, we review the Board's decision based on the record before the agency. Erection Co. v. Dep't of Labor & Indus., 160 Wn. App. 194, 201, 248 P.3d 1085 (2011). We review the Board's findings of fact to determine whether substantial evidence supports them. Potelco, Inc. v. Dep't of Labor & Indus., 191 Wn. App. 9, 21, 361 P.3d 767 (2015). Substantial evidence is what "would persuade a fair-minded person of the truth or correctness of the matter."

Erection Co., 160 Wn. App. at 202. If substantial evidence supports the factual findings, then the findings are conclusive and we next determine whether the findings support the conclusions of law. Id. at 202. We view the evidence and its reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the prevailing party in the highest forum that exercised fact-finding authority. See id. at 202. Thus, we must view such evidence and inferences in the light most favorable to Tradesmen, who prevailed before the Board.

“The legislature enacted [WISHA] ‘to assure, insofar as may reasonably be possible, safe and healthful working conditions for every [worker] in the state of Washington.’” Id. at 201 (quoting RCW 49.17.010). We liberally interpret WISHA statutes and regulations to achieve their purpose of providing safe working conditions for every Washington worker. Id. at 202.

WISHA renders employers responsible for the health and safety of their employees. Potelco, 191 Wn. App. at 30. “Any entity that engages in any business and employs one or more employees is an employer for WISHA purposes.” Martinez Melgoza & Assoc., Inc. v. Dep’t of Labor & Indus., 125 Wn. App. 843, 848, 106 P.3d 776 (2005) (citing RCW 49.17.020(4)). To promote WISHA’s safety objectives, if two or more employers share responsibility for the same employee “the Department may cite multiple employers for violating workplace safety standards.” Potelco, 191 Wn. App. at 30.

A. Dual Employer Directive

The Department argues that the Board erred by declining to apply the Directive and by failing to conclude that Tradesmen is liable for the WISHA violations under the “knew or clearly should have known” standard. Tradesmen responds that the Directive does not apply and, even if it did, substantial evidence supports the Board’s finding that Tradesmen neither knew nor clearly should have known of the WISHA violations. We decline to apply the standard from the Directive.

The Department developed internally the Directive to “establish[] inspection and enforcement policies for assessing situations where two or more employers may share liability for safety or health violations that expose employees to workplace hazards.” Directive at 1. The Department noted that “[d]ual employer situations have increased over recent years with the growth of temporary services and employee leasing agencies, which provide employees to work at a site under the supervision and control of another employer.” Directive at 1. The Directive refers to primary and secondary employers. Directive at 1-5. A primary employer is the “employer of record, who contracts with the employee to perform work in exchange for wages or a salary and issues the employee’s pay check, secures workers’ compensation insurance for the employee, and usually retains hiring and firing authority.” Directive at 1. Here, Tradesmen is the primary employer. Secondary employers, like Dochnahl, are those who control the employee at the job site. Directive at 1.

Under the Directive, the Department will typically decline to cite a primary employer for safety and health violations at the job site so long as they meet certain requirements for providing training and personal protective equipment and do not supervise or control the employees’ work activities at the job site.

Directive at 2. The Department may cite a primary employer, however, “if they had knowledge or clearly should have had knowledge of the violation.” Directive at 5. The Department asserts that a primary employer meets the “clearly should have known” standard if they could have discovered the violation through reasonable diligence.

But the Department did not promulgate the Directive under the rulemaking requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act (APA). In contrast to agency rules, the Directive constitutes a policy statement, which lacks the force of law and is advisory only. See J.E. Dunn Nw., Inc. v. Dep’t of Labor & Indus., 139 Wn. App. 35, 51-53, 156 P.3d 250 (2007) (explaining why WISHA Regional Directive 27.00, which was not promulgated under the APA, cannot operate to shift burden of proof on element of WISHA violation). We thus decline to apply the “knew or clearly should have known” standard from the Directive.²

² The Department also asserts that we should defer to OSHA cases applying the “knew or clearly should have known” standard to staffing agencies because WISHA is meant to be as effective as OSHA. But the cases cited by the Department for this proposition, Barbosa Grp., Inc., 2005 CCH OSHD (No. 02-0865, 2007) and Aerotek, 2018 CCH OSHD (No. 16-0618, 2018), do not explicitly apply the “knew or clearly should have known” standard and are distinguishable on their facts, as the staffing agencies provided on-site managers. Tradesmen did not provide any on-site manager at Dochnahl’s Federal Avenue or Palatine Avenue job sites and did not otherwise exercise comparable control over the sites.

Furthermore, even if we were to apply the knowledge standard, we would not conclude that Tradesmen is a liable employer for the violations at issue. The record demonstrates that Tradesmen’s protocol was for clients, such as Dochnahl, to notify it before moving a temporary worker to a job site that Tradesmen had not yet inspected. Despite this protocol, the record shows that Dochnahl did not inform Tradesmen that it was sending the temporary worker to the Palatine Avenue job site and that Tradesmen did not have the opportunity to inspect the Palatine Avenue job site for safety violations. This constitutes substantial evidence to support the Board’s finding that “Tradesmen did not know, nor through the applicable diligence could it have known, of the safety and health hazards to which [the temporary worker] was exposed at 6521 N. Palatine, Seattle, Washington.”

B. Economic Realities Test

The Department next claims that the Board erred by concluding that Tradesmen is not a liable employer under the economic realities test. Tradesmen responds that the Board correctly determined that, under the test, it was not an employer because it did not control the job site or the temporary worker. We agree with Tradesmen.

Washington courts use the “economic realities test” in cases of leased or temporary workers to determine who is an employer for the purposes of a WISHA citation. Potelco, 191 Wn. App. at 30-31. The test involves seven factors:

- 1) who the workers consider their employer;
- 2) who pays the workers’ wages;
- 3) who has the responsibility to control the workers;
- 4) whether the alleged employer has the power to control the workers;
- 5) whether the alleged employer has the power to fire, hire, or modify the employment condition of the workers;
- 6) whether the workers’ ability to increase their income depends on efficiency rather than initiative, judgment, and foresight; and
- 7) how the workers’ wages are established.

Id. at 31. Under this test, “[t]he key question is whether the employer has the right to control the worker.” Id. at 31. The record lacks evidence on the first and sixth factors.³ We address the remaining factors in turn.

³ The Department asserts that the first factor shows Tradesmen was an employer for the purposes of the citation. But the Department’s argument under this factor is that the temporary worker believed Tradesmen to be his employer because Tradesmen hired him, leased him to Dochnahl, and he could call his Tradesmen supervisor with questions. These points fail to address who the temporary worker considered as his

Under the CSA, Tradesmen agreed to pay the temporary worker wages owed for work under the agreement. This factor suggests Tradesmen was an employer with respect to the citation.

Responsibility to Control the Worker

Dochnahl, not Tradesmen, had the responsibility to control the worker under their contract. In the CSA, Dochnahl agreed that it would be “solely responsible for directing, supervising and controlling Tradesmen employees as well as their work” and “to provide Tradesmen workers a safe work environment that complies with all applicable Federal [Occupational Safety Hazard Act (OSHA)] and/or equivalent state agency standards.” Because Dochnahl agreed to assume the responsibility for controlling the temporary worker assigned to it, this factor weighs against considering Tradesmen an employer.

Power to Control the Worker

Tradesmen had some control over the temporary worker as it controlled his work assignments. But the record shows Tradesmen had little control over the temporary worker’s work and duties at the job sites. While Tradesmen would have a field representative inspect the job site for safety, it did not have any Tradesmen employees at the job site to supervise the temporary worker. Tradesmen lacked any authority to control Dochnahl’s project or the work done there. That Dochnahl moved the temporary worker to a new job site without the temporary worker informing Tradesmen also shows Tradesmen's lack of control over the temporary worker.

Tradesmen also lacked control over the Palatine Avenue job site. Although the Department asserts that courts do not consider control over the job site as part of the economic realities test, legal authority holds otherwise. See Potelco, 191 Wn. App. at 32 (considering whether the alleged employer exercised control over the job site under the economic realities test). The Board has also previously noted that "in leased employment situations, whether the lessor or the lessee should be cited for WISHA violations depends on the economic realities of who controls the workplace. Both employers cannot be cited unless they both have substantial control over the workers and the work environment involved in the violations." In re Skills Res. Training Ctr., No. 95 W253, at 2 (Wash. Bd. of Ind. Ins. App. Aug. 5, 1997) (emphasis added). While Tradesmen typically inspected a job site to ensure it was safe, here it did not have a chance to do so because Dochnahl sent the temporary worker to the Palatine Avenue job site without notifying Tradesmen. This factor also weighs against Tradesmen being considered an employer.

Power to Fire, Hire, or Modify the Employment Condition of the Worker

Under the CSA, Dochnahl had the sole discretion to terminate a temporary worker from its employ. But only Tradesmen could fire a temporary worker from its staffing company. Tradesmen also lacked the power to modify the employment conditions of the temporary worker, as it did not control the "means and methods" of the temporary worker's performance. Finally, although Tradesmen would inspect the job site for safety reasons, Dochnahl was responsible for providing a safe work environment and any specific safety training or equipment. While this factor presents a close question, because we must view the evidence and reasonable inferences therefrom in the light most favorable to Tradesman, it weighs against holding Tradesman liable as an employer.

Establishment of Worker's Wage

In the CSA, Tradesmen agreed to “determine and provide compensation, including wages and benefits.” This factor supports Tradesmen being an employer.

Thus, the two factors relating to control—plus the factor relating to the power to hire, fire, or modify the employment condition of the worker—weigh against us considering Tradesmen an employer for purposes of the citation. The Department did not challenge the Board’s finding that Tradesmen did not control the job site or the work environment at the Palatine Avenue job site.

Unchallenged findings of fact constitute verities on appeal. Potelco, 191 Wn. App. at 22. While two other factors support Tradesmen being an employer, as stated above, the key question of the test is who had the right to control the worker.

We determine substantial evidence supports the Board’s findings that Tradesmen did not have control over the temporary employee when at a job site for Dochnahl and did not control the Palatine Avenue job site. And the Board’s findings support its conclusion that the Department could not cite Tradesmen as an employer for the WISHA violations.⁴

We affirm.

WE CONCUR:

⁴ This outcome tracks Board and Occupational Safety and Health Commission cases that have addressed similar facts. See Skills Res. Training Ctr., slip op. at 4 (determining that a company that provided workers to employers “operated as a human resources department” and was not an employer under WISHA); Union Drilling, 16 OSHC 1741 (No. 93-154, 1994) (deciding that although the company providing the personnel paid the workers and controlled their work assignments, it was not an employer for WISHA purposes); Murphy Enterprises, dba Murphy Brothers Exposition, 17 OSHC 1477 (No. 93-2957, 1995) (noting that an employee leasing company was not an employer under WISHA even though it handled payroll and other administrative tasks); MLB Indus., Inc., 12 OSHC 1525 (No. 83-231, 1985) (concluding that a company was not liable as an employer under WISHA because it merely served as a “conduit for labor”).
