A. ISSUES PERTAINING TO APPELLANT'S ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR..... 1

    1. Has defendant raised an unreviewable Blakely challenge to the aggravating factor special verdict form in his appeal from resentencing when he failed to raise it at trial, or in his first appeal, and the resentencing court refrained from deciding it on remand? ..... 1

    2. Is the claimed violation of defendant's allocution right unreviewable since defendant did not object to proceeding to allocution and resentencing before the allegedly offending judge? ..... 1

    3. Is it appropriate to remand the judgment and sentence for ministerial correction of scrivener's errors misstating the offender score and the standard range sentence for defendant's offenses? ..... 1

B. STATEMENT OF THE CASE. ..... 1

C. ARGUMENT..... 5

    1. DEFENDANT'S BLAKELY CHALLENGE TO THE AGGRAVATING FACTOR SPECIAL VERDICT FORM IS UNREVIEWABLE SINCE IT WAS NOT PRESERVED AT TRIAL, ARGUED IN HIS FIRST APPEAL, OR DECIDED BY THE COURT THAT REIMPOSED HIS SENTENCE..... 5

    2. DEFENDANT'S RIGHT OF ALLOCUTION CLAIM IS ALSO UNAPPEALABLE SINCE HE RESPONDED TO THE COURT'S PRE-ALLOCUTION REVELATION OF ITS INTENT TO REIMPOSE HIS SENTENCE BY PROCEEDING TO ALLOCUTION AND SENTENCE WITHOUT INTERPOSING AN OBJECTION THAT REQUESTED RESENTENCING BY A NEW JUDGE ..13

3. DEFENDANT'S JUDGMENT AND SENTENCE SHOULD BE REMANDED FOR MINISTERIAL CORRECTION OF THE SCRIVENER'S ERRORS MISSTATING HIS OFFENDER SCORE AND THE STANDARD RANGE SENTENCE FOR HIS OFFENSES.....22

(2d ed. 2007).....18

A. ISSUES PERTAINING TO APPELLANT'S ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

1. Has defendant raised an unreviewable Blakely<sup>1</sup> challenge to the aggravating factor special verdict form in his appeal from resentencing when he failed to raise it at trial, or in his first appeal, and the resentencing court refrained from deciding it on remand?

2. Is the claimed violation of defendant's allocution right unreviewable since defendant did not object to proceeding to allocution and resentencing before the allegedly offending judge?

3. Is it appropriate to remand the judgment and sentence for ministerial correction of scrivener's errors misstating the offender score and the standard range sentence for defendant's offenses?

B. STATEMENT OF THE CASE.

Defendant was convicted of firearm enhanced first degree murder with a domestic violence aggravator for intimidating his girlfriend Olga Carter before fatally shooting her (Count I), and unlawful possession of a firearm in the second degree (Count II). Appx.A, p. 1 (CP 35-47). The evidence proved Carter called 911 to report defendant's commission of a firearm related act of domestic violence. Id. Responding officers heard defendant arguing with Carter inside the residence. Id. 1-2. Defendant briefly stepped outside only to rapidly shut himself back inside the residence once police announced their presence. Id. at 2. Carter screamed. Id. Police forced entry to find her dead on the utility room floor. Id. A note Carter managed to write as she died identified defendant as her killer. Id. The autopsy revealed Carter died from a single contact-gunshot to the neck which fired the bullet through her throat, spinal cord, and brain. Id. at 2-3. Gunpowder burns on defendant's body were consistent with him holding Carter very close to him as he fired the fatal shot. Id.

On October 10, 2007, the judge who presided over defendant's trial heard his allocution before imposing a 494 month sentence, which included a 60 month firearm enhancement, as well as a 60 month upward deviation from the standard range for a domestic violence aggravator. CP 14, 16-17; Appx. E. Defendant's convictions were affirmed following his first appeal, which alleged a public trial right violation and evidentiary error, but did not challenge the special verdict on which the exceptional sentence was based. Appx.A, pg.1; CP 35. The judgment and sentence became final October 8, 2010. CP 66-78.

The first of defendant's three personal restraint petitions<sup>2</sup> (PRP No. 42646-3-II) included several rejected allegations of error, to include:

<sup>2</sup> PRP No. 43697-3-II sought remission of legal financial obligations. This Court dismissed it as successive and for seeking relief that must come from the trial court. PRP No. 47380-1-II, which is still pending before this Court, challenges the firearm enhancement as a double jeopardy violation, citing Alleyn v. United States, ___ U.S. ___, 133 S. Ct. 2151, 186 L. Ed. 2d 314 (2013). The State contends that claim is time-barred, successive, and meritless.

"the trial court gave the jury erroneously worded special verdict instructions". Appx. B, p. 1. This Court "remand[ed] for resentencing so ... the State [could] ... prove [defendant's] criminal history and resulting offender score." Id. at 4. The Court "also remand[ed] for correction of the seriousness levels pertinent to each current offense ...." Id.

The honorable Ronald E. Culpepper held a hearing to comply with the mandate January 31, 2014, as the trial judge who imposed defendant's sentence had retired. RP 1-3. A continuance was granted to facilitate appointment of defendant's assigned counsel. RP 8-9. When the hearing reconvened February 27, 2014, the court summarized its understanding of the limited issues before it:

"As I understand it from the Court of Appeals' decision ... [the case] was ... remanded to review the offender score and just sentencing if the offender score was wrong, as I understand it, and the issue of whether some prior offenses that Mr. Price had washed ...."

RP 14-15.

Conviction data adduced to support defendant's offender score of 4 was analyzed under the SRA's wash-out rule. RP 16-22. Several members of the victim's family addressed the court. RP 20, 23. RP 20-21, 24. The court responded to one of them by reiterating the limited scope its mandate on resentencing:

"Just, again, so everybody knows what I have to decide, the jury was asked whether there were factors justifying an exceptional sentence and the jury found that there were. Judge Fleming gave an exceptional sentence, which I think was 60 months above the high end of the standard range, is the way I read it. The standard range was 434 months with his prior history. If the prior history doesn't count, the standard history would be lower ...I didn't do the trial, so I don't know a lot of the facts. I have read most of the file and read the Affidavit of Probable Cause, so I have an idea of what happened, but if the standard range is, say, 100 months less, I have to somehow guess would Judge Fleming have given him the same end result, 494, or would he have meant to give him 60 above that standard range. And that's one issue, because I have no idea what was in Judge Fleming's mind."

RP 25-27. A recess was called to locate misplaced conviction data. Id.

Resentencing resumed March 7, 2014. RP 35. The court decided the State's evidence supported defendant's previously calculated offender score of 4. RP 61-62, 73. The misstated seriousness levels were corrected. RP 71-72. Several more members of victim's family addressed the court. RP 63-65. The State summarized the evidence adduced at trial. RP 65-71. Defendant attempted to raise the Blakely challenge to the special verdict form he challenges on appeal, but the court refrained from considering the merits of that claim. RP 73-76. Judge Culpepper then revealed his intent to reimpose Judge Fleming's sentence without first giving defendant a second opportunity to speak. RP 78. Defendant alerted the court to his desire to be heard, then proceeded to allocution and sentence without objecting to the timing of his allocution or requesting the judicially prescribed relief of resentencing before a different judge. RP 78-79; App.Br., p.21. Defendant timely filed a notice of appeal. CP 104.

C. ARGUMENT.

1. DEFENDANT'S BLAKELY CHALLENGE TO THE AGGRAVATING FACTOR SPECIAL VERDICT FORM IS UNREVIEWABLE SINCE IT WAS NOT PRESERVED AT TRIAL, ARGUED IN HIS FIRST APPEAL, OR DECIDED BY THE COURT THAT REIMPOSED HIS SENTENCE.

Defendants are generally prohibited from raising issues in a second appeal which were or could have been raised in the first appeal. State v. Mandanas, 163 Wn. App. 712, 716, 262 P.3d 522 (2011)(citing State v. Sauve, 100 Wn.2d 84, 87, 666 P.2d 894 (1983)). A "trial court's discretion to resentence on remand is [concomitantly] limited by the scope of the appellate court's mandate." State v. Kilgore, 167 Wn.2d 28, 42, 216 P.3d 393 (2009)(citing State v. Barberio, 121 Wn.2d 48, 51, 797 P.2d 511 (1990)). Once the mandate has issued, a trial court may only decide postjudgment motions authorized by court rule or statute provided they do not raise issues an appellate court already decided. Id. At 38-39 (citing RAP 12.2); RAP 2.5(c)(1). Issues raised in postjudgment motions are not appealable unless the trial court exercised independent discretion to decide them. Id. at 39; State v. Parmelee, 172 Wn. App. 899, 905, 292 P.3d 799 (2013). The decision not to decide an issue raised on remand is not reviewable. Kilgore, 167 Wn.2d at 40.

Defendant did not raise a Blakely challenge to the validity of the aggravating factor special verdict at trial, in his first appeal, or in the PRP causing the judgment to be remanded for a hearing on his offender score and ministerial correction of misstated seriousness levels. Appx. A; CP 35-47. The State promptly objected to defendant's effort to raise the Blakely issue at resentencing. RP 74. After allowing defendant to respond, the court ruled:

"[w]ith respect to the issue of the exceptional sentence, the jury did find by special verdict that there was an aggravating circumstance, so I think Judge Fleming did have the ability, if he wished, to impose an exceptional sentence."

RP 76. The court did not reach the merits of the alleged Blakely issue, so there is no decision on the Blakely issue to review. RP 76-78, 82; Barberio, 121 Wn.2d at 5; Kilgore, 167 Wn.2d at 42; Parmelee, 172 Wn. App. at 905.

Defendant incorrectly contends the fact of resentencing reinstated the reviewability of every issue affecting his sentence, in particular his Blakely claim. That position cannot be reconciled with Barberio, which restricts review from resentencing to issues a trial court exercised independent discretion to decide. 121 Wn.2d at 51. Strictly limiting review in this way enables appellate oversight of newly decided issues while safeguarding the public's profound interest in the finality of judgments by shielding them from untimely or repetitive attacks. Kilgore, 167 Wn.2d at 41, Fn.12; see also In re Coates, 173 Wn.2d 123, 133-35, 143-44, 267 P.3d 324 (2011); In re Toledo-Sotelo, 176 Wn.2d 759, 768, 297 P.3d 51 (2013); In re Adams, 178 Wn.2d 417, 423, 309 P.3d 451 (2013); In re Snively, 180 Wn.2d 28, 32, 320 P.3d 1107 (2014).

Considering the merits of defendant's Blakely claim on appeal is again improper since it was never properly before the resentencing court. This Court remanded the case only "for resentencing so ... the State may ... prove [defendant's] offender score" and "for correction of the seriousness levels pertinent to each current offense." Appx. B, p.1. The mandate did not empower the trial court to decide untimely attacks on validity of defendant's convictions—base offense, enhancement or aggravator, which is what the Blakely claim is despite defendant's effort to frame it as a sentencing issue. See State v. Mandanas, 163 Wn. App. 712, 716-17, 262 P.3d 522 (2011). Stated otherwise, defendant cannot properly use this appeal from resentencing as a second appeal of the convictions underlying his sentence. See Kilgore, 167 Wn.2d at 41 Fn.12, 43 Fn. 16; Mandanas, 163 Wn. App. at 716-17. Review of the Blakely claim is further barred by RCW 10.73.090's collateral attack time limit, the invited error doctrine, and RAP 2.5.

- a. Defendant cannot circumvent RCW 10.73.090's time limit by framing a time-barred attack on the special verdict form as a direct appeal from resentencing.

"[F]inality and reviewability are intrinsically bound." Kilgore, 167 Wn.2d at 36. A trial is only permitted to consider postjudgment motions authorized by statute or court rule, and a postjudgment challenge to the validity of a special verdict more than one year after the judgment became final is precluded by the one year time limit carefully crafted through the Legislature's enactment of RCW 10.73.090 and the Supreme Court's adoption of CrR 7.8(c)(2); RAP 12.2, RAP 16(d) as well as its holdings in In re Coates, 173 Wn.2d at 133-35; In re Toledo-Sotelo, 176 Wn.2d at 768; In re Adams, 178 Wn.2d at 423, 309 P.3d 451 (2013), and In re Snively, 180 Wn.2d at 32; see also RAP 1.1(c), RAP 2.5(b)(3).

Defendant's judgment became final October 8, 2010. CP 66-78. Remand for a hearing on defendant's offender score and misstated seriousness levels three years after RCW 10.73.090's one year time limit expired did not reopen the convictions underlying the sentence to untimely claims of special verdict error since a defendant "may not rely on the existence of ... facial sentencing error[s] to assert ... time-barred claims." See Snively, 180 Wn.2d at 32 (citing Adams, 178 Wn.2d at 424-26; In re Clark, 168 Wn.2d 581, 587, 230 P.3d 156 (2010); Coates, 173 Wn.2d at 144). The authority defendant relies on to urge review does not govern time-barred PRPs, which is what his Blakely claim is. See In re Stockwell, 179 Wn.2d 588, 601-02, 316 P.3d 1007 (2014); State v. Gudgel, 170 Wn.2d 656, 657, 224 P.3d 938 (2010); RAP 1.1(c), RAP 2.5(b)(3), RAP 16.4(d).

- b. The Blakely claim is also precluded by the invited error doctrine since defendant agreed to the wording of the challenged special verdict form at trial.

The invited error doctrine prohibits a defendant from complaining on appeal about an error he helped to create at trial. State v. Wakefield, 130 Wn.2d 464, 475, 925 P.2d 183 (1996). Review of alleged verdict form error is therefore forfeited when the defendant agreed to the wording at trial, even where constitutional rights are involved. See State v. Wirings, 126 Wn. App. 75, 89 107 P.3d 141 (2005).

Defendant wrongly attempts to win reversal of his 60 month exceptional sentence through an untimely challenge to the special verdict form he acquiesced to at trial. Appx. C (RP 1158-85).<sup>3</sup> Having approved it then, he cannot properly assign error to it now. For the ambiguity now attributed to it could have been readily corrected with far less expense to the public had defendant voiced disagreement with the draftsmanship at trial. The invited error doctrine justly bars his request for review.

- c. Defendant's failure to challenge the special verdict form at trial also precludes review under RAP 2.5 as the alleged drafting error was not manifest in the context of the jury's accurate instructions on the applicable law.

An appellant hoping to raise an unpreserved claim bears the initial burden of showing the alleged irregularity is manifest error of constitutional dimension. State v. O'Hara, 167 Wn.2d 91, 98, 106, 217 P.3d 756 (2009); State v. Gordon, 172 Wn.2d 671, 676, 260 P.3d 884 (2011). Error is only "manifest" if it has a practical and identifiable consequence at trial. Gordon, 172 Wn.2d at 676.

Defendant failed to preserve his Blakely claim by waiting to raise it until resentencing. See RAP 2.5(a); State v. Grimes, 165 Wn. App. 172, 189, 267 P.3d 454 (2011). Assuming constitutional dimension arguendo, the unpreserved allegation of error would have been unreviewable in defendant's first appeal, much less his second, since it was not manifest error to refrain from repeating the comprehensive instructions the jury received on the aggravating factor's elements in the associated special verdict form. This is because a special verdict form need not recite a sentencing aggravator's elements when an adequate accompanying instruction is given. See State v. Davis, 116 Wn. App. 81, 95, 64 P.3d 661 (2003)(citing State v. Emmanuel, 42 Wn.2d 799, 819, 259 P.2d 845 (1953); Seattle Western Indus., Inc., v. Mowat Co., 110 Wn.2d 1, 10, 750 P.2d 245 (1988); Tiderman v. Fleetwood, 102 Wn.2d 334, 340, 684 P.2d 1302 (1984); Raum v. City of Bellevue, 171 Wn. App. 124, 148, 286 P.3d 695 (2012) (quoting Capers v. Bon Marche, 91 Wn. App. 138, 144, 955 P.2d 822 (1998)). Accompanying instructions are adequate when they accurately state the law, do not mislead the jury, and permit the parties to argue their case. State v. Teal, 152 Wn.2d 333, 339, 96 P.3d 974 (2004). Even "to convict" instructions need not specify every element of a charged offense unless they specifically tell the jury it can convict if the recited elements are found. Davis, 116 Wn. App. at 95.

Instruction No. 23 accurately told the jury what was required to answer the challenged special verdict form in the affirmative:

"You will also be furnished with additional special verdict forms relating to aggravating factors ... alleged by the State on Count I ... fill in the blank with the answer 'yes' or 'no' according to the decision you reach. In order to answer the special verdict form 'yes' you must unanimously be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt ... 'yes' is the correct answer... The State ... alleged ... the following aggravating factors exist in this case ... (2) That the current offense involved domestic violence and the defendant's conduct manifested intimidation of the victim...." CP 148; Appx. D (emphasis added).

The elements were reiterated in Instruction No. 25:

"For the purposes of a special verdict, the State must prove beyond a reasonable doubt the presence of an aggravating factor. An aggravating factor alleged in this case is that the offense involved domestic violence, and the defendant's conduct during the commission manifested intimidation of the victim...." CP 150; Appx.D (emphasis added).

The purpose of the special verdict form was to record the jury's verdict based on those instructions, not to redundantly instruct the jury on the law. Each of the aggravator's two elements were accurately set forth in Instructions No. 23 and No. 25, with clear directions on how the special verdict form was to be completed. RCW 9.94A.535(h)(iii) (2005); RCW 10.99.020. It was not manifest error for the trial court to rely on the strong presumption the jury would follow those instructions when filling out the challenged special verdict form that incorporated them through reference to the "intimidation" element distinguishing that aggravator from the other one the jury was instructed to decide. See State v. Kirkman, 159 Wn.2d 918, 928, 155 P.3d 125 (2007); State v. Kester, 38 Wn. App. 590, 594, 686 P.2d 1081 (1984); CP 8-9; Appx.D. The omission of the "domestic violence" element from the verdict form was also harmless, if error, as it was an uncontroverted component of defendant's well proven crime. See State v. Brown, 147 Wn.2d 330, 341, 344, 58 P.3d 889 (2002) (citing Neder v. United States, 527 U.S. 1, 18-19, 119 S. Ct. 1827, 144 L. Ed. 2d 35 (1999)); State v. Berube, 150 Wn.2d 498, 79 P.3d 1144 (2003); State v. Ballew, 167 Wn. App. 359, 367-68, 227 P.3d 925 (2012). The unpreserved, time barred, waived, and meritless challenge to the special verdict form should be rejected.

2. DEFENDANT'S RIGHT OF ALLOCUTION CLAIM IS ALSO UNAPPEALABLE SINCE HE RESPONDED TO THE COURT'S PRE-ALLOCUTION REVELATION OF ITS INTENT TO REIMPOSE HIS SENTENCE BY PROCEEDING TO ALLOCUTION AND SENTENCE WITHOUT INTERPOSING AN OBJECTION THAT REQUESTED RESENTENCING BY A NEW JUDGE.

Convicted defendants only enjoy a statutory right of allocution at sentencing. State v. Hatchie, 161 Wn.2d 390, 405, 166 P.3d 698 (2007)(citing RCW 9.94A.500(1)); State v. Gonzales, 90 Wn. App.852, 854, 954 P.2d 360 (1998). Denial of the right is neither structural error nor a fundamental defect resulting in a complete miscarriage of justice. State v. Canfield, 154 Wn.2d 698, 702-03, 116 P.3d 391 (2005)(quoting Hill v. United States, 368 U.S. 424, 428, 82 S. Ct. 468, 7 L. Ed. 2d 417 (1962)).

The trial court revealed its intent to reimpose defendant's exceptional sentence before giving him an opportunity to supplement the allocution he made when the sentence was first imposed:

"I don't see any reason to vary from what Judge Fleming, who heard the trial and heard all the details, did, so I'm going to sentence [defendant] to 374 months in prison, the high end, plus the additional 60 months for the deadly weapon enhancement, and I'm also going to sentence him to an additional 60 months exceptional sentence upward. I'm simply adopting what Judge Fleming, who heard the trial and knows it a lot better than I did and was there, did. Count I is a level 15, Count II is a level three." ...

"So I'm basically affirming Judge Fleming's sentence, and I will say I am, to some extent, deferring to his judgment because he was there; he heard the trial; I wasn't. There's nothing I've heard or seen that indicates there was anything wrong with Judge Fleming's sentence, so I am, in effect, adopting it." RP 77-78; Appx.E.

Defense counsel advised the court of defendant's desire to be heard. RP 78. The court asked defendant if he had anything to say since the sentence was not final. RP 78-79. Defendant accepted the invitation to allocute, then proceeded to imposition of sentence instead of objecting to going forward on account of the belated request for allocation. Id.

- a. The assigned allocation error is not reviewable due to defendant's failure to object on that basis below.

Appellate courts will not review alleged violations of the allocation right which were not preserved through a proper objection. Hatchie, 161 Wn.2d at 405. The procedure for preserving such a claim is for the aggrieved defendant to object to the offending judge's imposition of sentence with a request for the case to be transferred to a new judge able to hear allocation prior to imposing sentence according to RCW 9.94.500(1) since it is the only remedy available for a violation of the right. See Id.; State v. Aguilar-Rivera, 83 Wn. App. 199, 203, 920 P.2d 623 (1996); State v. Crider, 78 Wn. App. 849, 899 P.2d 24 (1995); see also State v. Padilla, 69 Wn. App. 295, 300, 846 P.2d 564 (1993); Workman v. Marshall, 68 Wn.2d 578, 581, 414 P.2d 625 (1966); Cook v. Von Stein, 97 Wn. App. 701, 706, 985 P.2d 956 (1999).

A trial court met with the objection can either neutralize the alleged error by transferring the sentencing to another judge as requested, or proceed to sentence; whereupon the issue would be properly preserved for appeal. See Id. An objection grounded in a perceived violation of the allocution right is consequently inadequate to preserve the issue for appeal unless it articulates opposition to proceeding to allocution and sentence before the offending court. See Id.

After Judge Culpepper revealed his intent to adopt Judge Fleming's sentence in its entirety, defense counsel responded:

"[I] understand that ... I know Mr. Price wanted to address the Court and provide some information, but you've made your ruling without his ability to allocute." RP 78.

Counsel's remark was not a proper objection capable of preserving an allocation claim for appeal. Although it alerted the court to defendant's desire to be heard, it did not expressly request any relief, let alone ask for the available remedy of being sentenced by a different judge. Whereas defendant's ready acceptance of the court's belated invitation for allocution without further comment on its timing strongly suggests reconsideration of the sentence in light of defendant's allocution was the only relief sought. Even if counsel's remark could be interpreted to be a proper objection (which would require a very generous reading) defendant forfeited his appellate remedy when he proceeded to allocution and sentence without asking to be resentenced by a different judge. RP 78-81; see State v. Valdobinos, 122 Wn.2d 270, 274, 858 P.2d 199 (1993)(waiver implied from conduct antithetical to right's assertion).

A great potential for abuse would adhere to a procedural rule allowing defendants to request resentencing based on allocution errors for the first time on appeal. See Id.; State v Strine, 176 Wn.2d 742, 749, 293 P.3d 1177 (2013)(citing State v. Sullivan, 69 Wn. App. 167, 172, 847 P.2d 953 (1993); State v. Emery, 174 Wn.2d 741, 762, 278 P.3d 653 (2012)). Such a rule would logically motivate calculating defendants to withhold objections until the offending judge's final sentence was revealed in order to assess the probability of obtaining a better outcome from a different judge on remand from appeal. See Strine, 176 Wn.2d at 749. Since the new judge could be anticipated to perceive the offending judge's sentence as cap in order to avoid an appearance of vindictive sentencing,<sup>4</sup> defendants would generally only stand to gain from shopping their cases with two sentencing courts through appeal.

Meanwhile, the public purchases the defendants' opportunity to forum shop at the significant societal cost of a full sentencing by the offending judge, appellate review and resentencing before different judge—often less familiar with the case. See Id. At the same time, the uncertainty attending the outcome would deprive victims, or their survivors, the "dignity, respect ... and sensitivity" owed to them under Washington law. See RCW 7.69.010. As would a defendant's successful pursuit of resentencing since it would typically impose upon them to endure the hardship of having to emotionally experience the crime a least a fourth time<sup>5</sup> in the defendant's presence.

Whereas strict adherence to the procedural bar to unpreserved claims would enable a trial judge to mitigate the extreme emotional and economic cost of allocation errors by transferring an affected case to another judge upon timely objection before an appeal is necessary. In the event a trial judge refused to cure the error below, a fully developed record would be ready to facilitate a then appropriate use of the appellate process. See Strine, 176 Wn.2d at 750 (citing Bennett L. Gershman, Trial Error and Misconduct § 6-2(b), at 472-73 (2d ed. 2007)). Defendant's challenge to the timing of his allocution is not properly before this Court.

b. The timing of defendant's allocution was harmless, if error, since he was given a full opportunity to allocute before the sentence adopted by the offending court was reimposed.

A trial court's pre-allocution revelation of a defendant's likely sentence may be harmless error when the defendant is not prejudiced. Gonzalez, 90 Wn. App. at 854-55 (cf. Aguilar-Rivera, 83 Wn. App. at 202; Cridler, 78 Wn. App. 849). Absence of prejudice may be shown where a defendant is afforded a full opportunity to allocute prior to the formal imposition of sentence. State v. Delange, 31 Wn. App. 800, 802-03, 644 P.2d 1200 (1982); Gonzalez, 90 Wn. App. at 854-55.

There is a valid reason to find defendant's allocution right was not violated at resentencing (or the violation was peculiarly harmless) beyond the fact his allocution was heard before the reimposition of his sentence became final. The sentence defendant asks this Court to reverse was first imposed by Judge Fleming October 10, 2007, based in part on defendant's timely exercised right of allocution. CP 11-22; RP77-78; Appx. E. When Judge Culpepper adopted that sentence in its entirety, he reimposed a sentence which already took defendant's allocation into account. See Kilgore, 167 Wn.2d at 40-41. That old sentence did not become a new sentence through Judge Culpepper's act of educating himself about the case in order to decide whether the old sentence should be changed. See Id. And the decision to refrain from changing the old sentence is not reviewable. Id. Defendant's assignment of error is consequently predicated on the unsupported notion RCW 9.94A.500(1) entitled him to a second opportunity to influence the sentence imposed in light of the allocution he made in 2007.

Should RCW 9.94A.500(1) be interpreted to extend the right of allocution to the reimposition of a RCW 9.94A.500(1)-compliant sentence, the trial court's belated request for defendant's second allocution was harmless in this case. Judge Culpepper adopted the sentence imposed by Judge Fleming on account of his greater familiarity with the case despite being urged by the victim's family to imprison defendant for life, so defendant cannot show he was prejudice in his initial inability to counter their request. E.g., RP 63-65. 77-78. It is likewise untenable to maintain anything defendant said when given a second opportunity to allocute could have altered the outcome had it been received before the sentence was revealed. Most of the allocution did little more than demonstrate defendant's disturbing lack of remorse for his crime by unconscionably referring to Carter's proven murder as an accident. RP 79. If anything, earlier appreciation of defendant's true feelings about the case was more likely to motivate Judge Culpepper to increase the sentence as evidenced by his reaction to defendant's remarks:

"You said that it was an accident. Well, that, of course, is a lie by the evidence. Obviously, the gun was held right below the jaw or in the jaw of Olga. That wasn't an accident. That was you executing her with the police breaking down the door. You know you're going to get caught and you killed her anyway. That's what that was. That wasn't an accident." RP 82.

Judge Culpeper responded similarly to defendant's concern about how his punishment for murdering Carter had negatively impacted his family:

"I don't doubt this has hurt your family. It probably has. It certainly hurt Olga's family just as much, if not more." RP 81-82.

Defendant even shamefully attempted to relitigate a previously rejected public trial right claim predicated on an alleged exclusion of the "victim's mother", while she was in attendance to speak on her slain daughter's behalf. RP 80; Appx.A, pg.1. He went on to articulate complaints about the accessibility of materials apparently related to another collateral attack he intends to pursue. RP 80-81. None of those comments easily approximate true allocution, which is supposed to be a personal request for leniency. See Canfield, 154 Wn.2d at 703-05. Given defendant's highly insensitive and self-centered allocution was far more likely to encourage a high sentence than inspire a low one, he was not prejudiced from the timing of its reception.

The argument against applying the harmless error analysis to nonconstitutional allocution error is grounded in a scantily explained and difficult to accept concern an appearance of unfairness adheres to a trial court's attempt to redress allocution errors by hearing allocution before imposing sentence. See Aguilar-Rivera, 83 Wn. App. at 202. Yet it does not easily stand to reason the public, which includes criminal defendants, could have so little faith in the ability of judges to reconsider an expressed sentencing decision based on a defendant's belated allocution when judges are regularly entrusted to impartially revisit earlier rulings on constitutional matters based on new information as well as reverse themselves when warranted, and are always rightly presumed to follow the law. See e.g. CR 59 (reconsideration); CrR 7.8(b)(mistakes, inadvertence, irregularity in obtaining a judgment); State v. Adams, 91 Wn.2d 86, 93, 586 P.2d 1168 (1978); State v. Miles, 77 Wn.2d 593, 601, 464 P.2d 723 (1970); State v. Bell, 59 Wn.2d 338, 360, 368 P.2d 177 (1962). A trial court's correction of an inadvertent failure to timely solicit allocution cannot seriously be generally perceived as anything more worrisome to the public than the kind of conscientious remedial measure the public expects judicial officers to routinely take in the dynamic, fast-paced, often unpredictable and procedurally cumbersome environment of a criminal courtroom. See Delange, 31 Wn. App. at 802-03 (Cf. Aguilar-

Rivera, 83 Wn. App. at 202). Defendant's unpreserved challenge to the timing of his allocution is harmless, if error, so remand for resentencing is unnecessary.

3. DEFENDANT'S JUDGMENT AND SENTENCE SHOULD BE REMANDED FOR MINISTERIAL CORRECTION OF THE SCRIVENER'S ERRORS MISSTATING HIS OFFENDER SCORE AND THE STANDARD RANGE SENTENCE FOR HIS OFFENSES.

It is appropriate to remand a judgment and sentence for correction of an identified scrivener's error when correction is reasonably likely to avoid a future expenditure of judicial resources by eliminating a foreseeable source confusion. See State v. Stribling, 164 Wn. App. 867, 878 Fn.6, 267 P.3d 403 (2011); In re Mayer, 128 Wn. App. 694, 701, 117 P.3d 353 (2005).

Paragraph 2.3 of the 2014 judgment and sentence misstates defendant's offender score as a 1, then provides a corresponding standard range sentence for each conviction. CP 95 (250-333 months for Count I and 3-8 months for Count II); 9.94A.510 (Laws 2002 § 10). Whereas his offender score was accurately calculated to be a 4. RP 62; CP 14. The resulting standard range sentences were recited on the record at resentencing, and are reflected in paragraph 4.12, to be 341 to be 434 months for Count I (which includes the 60 month enhancement), and 12+ to 16 months for Count II. RP 71-72, 77-78, 82; CP 97; RCW 9.94A.510 (Laws 2002 § 10). Since the inconsistency is foreseeably confusing to anyone who reads the 2014 judgment and sentence without the resentencing transcript, it should be remanded for ministerial correction of the scrivener's errors in paragraph 2.3.

D. CONCLUSION.

The unpreserved time-barred and meritless Blakely challenge to the special verdict form should be rejected as unreviewable. Defendant's sentence should be affirmed as the alleged allocution error is unreviewable and meritless, or harmless under the circumstances; however, his judgment should be remanded for ministerial correction of the scrivener's errors in paragraph 2.3, which misstate his offender score as well as the standard range sentences for his convictions.

GROSSE, J. — The right to a public trial is implicated only when the court orders a courtroom closed to the public. Here, the trial court conducted individual voir dire of a potential juror in the courtroom apart from the other potential jurors and a spectator who left the courtroom at the prosecutor's request. Because the other potential jurors were officers of the court, not members of the public, and the spectator was not ordered by the court to leave, there was no court-ordered courtroom closure. Thus, Donnell Price fails to show a violation of his right to a public trial. We affirm.

FACTS

On September 3, 2006, Olga Carter called 911 to report a domestic violence incident involving her boyfriend, Donnell Price. Carter told the 911 operator that Price had a gun. Police responded and arrived at Price's home in Tacoma.

When the officers approached the house, they heard a man and woman arguing inside and then heard the man say something about flashing lights outside. They then saw Price come to the door and step outside. An officer shined his flashlight on him and announced "Tacoma Police," but Price went back inside and slammed the door shut.

No. 63814-9 / 2

A few seconds later, the police heard a woman scream. Officers quickly approached the front and back doors and demanded that the occupants come out. When there was no response, they kicked in the front door and then heard a gunshot. The officers then continued to announce their presence and to call on the occupants to come out of the house, but there was no response. Price eventually came out through the front door after repeated police demands.

Police then entered the house and found Carter dead on the floor in the utility room. On a nearby table, police also found a handwritten note that contained Carter's fingerprints, was in her handwriting, and was on paper torn from a notebook in her purse. The note read:

To AuBriana
From: Olga Mommy
Mommy Luv
Mr. Price
Shot Me
Dead
He thought
I Fooled Around
A Gun to my Head.

Carter had a daughter named AuBriana.

An autopsy confirmed that Carter died of a single gunshot wound. The fatal wound was a contact gunshot wound to her neck. Forensic evidence indicated that the gun had been placed against her neck pointed upward and that the bullet travelled through her throat, cervical vertebrae, spinal cord, and brain. Forensic evidence also showed that Price had gunpowder burns on his shirt and chest, indicating that he was holding Carter very close to him when the shot was fired.

No. 63814-9 / 3

The State charged Price with one count of first degree murder and one count of unlawful possession of a firearm. The information also included a firearm enhancement allegation and alleged aggravating factors of deliberate cruelty and intimidation of the victim.

During voir dire, one of the jurors requested to discuss an issue in private and the court indicated that it would address it at the end of the day. After voir dire was finished for the day, the court excused the rest of panel so that juror could be questioned alone in the courtroom. Also present in the courtroom at the time was the murder victim's mother, who agreed to step outside of the courtroom at the prosecutor's request. The juror was then questioned in court on the record.

During pretrial motions, the State moved in limine to admit the note found at the murder scene as a dying declaration. Over Price's objection, the trial court ruled that the note was admissible.

The jury found Price guilty as charged. The jury also found by special verdict that he was armed with a firearm and that the crime was committed to intimidate the victim. The court sentenced him to a total of 494 months confinement, which included a 60-month firearm enhancement and an exceptional sentence of 60 months based on the aggravating factor of intimidating the victim.

ANALYSIS

I. Right to a Public Trial

Price first contends that the trial court violated his right to a public trial by questioning a juror privately without first determining whether a courtroom closure was justified and engaging in the inquiry required by State v. Bone-Club.<sup>1</sup>

The State contends that there was no courtroom closure triggering the need for the Bone-Club inquiry. We agree.

Whether a defendant's right to a public trial has been violated is a question of law, reviewed de novo on appeal.<sup>2</sup> A criminal defendant has a right to a public trial under the state and federal constitutions.<sup>3</sup> The right to a public trial applies during jury voir dire.<sup>4</sup>

In Bone-Club, the court set forth the following factors that a trial court must consider on the record before ordering a courtroom closure:

1. The proponent of closure or sealing must make some showing [of a compelling state interest], and where that need is based on a right other than an accused's right to a fair trial, the proponent must show a "serious and imminent threat" to that right.
2. Anyone present when the closure motion is made must be given an opportunity to object to the closure.
3. The proposed method for curtailing open access must be the least restrictive means available for protecting the threatened interests.

No. 63814-9 / 5

4. The court must weigh the competing interests of the proponent of closure and the public.

5. The order must be no broader in its application or duration than necessary to serve its purpose.<sup>[5]</sup>

Failure to conduct the Bone-Club inquiry results in reversal for a new trial.<sup>6</sup>

Recent decisions from the divisions of this court have reached different conclusions about what constitutes a courtroom "closure" triggering the need for a Bone-Club inquiry. In State v. Momah, Division One held that conducting voir dire outside the courtroom does not amount to a courtroom closure if there is no explicit closure order.<sup>7</sup> In State v. Wise, a panel of Division Two followed the reasoning in Momah and held that private questioning of a juror in chambers did not constitute a courtroom closure.<sup>8</sup> But other panels of Division Two and Division Three have held that conducting voir dire of one member of the venire privately outside of the courtroom (e.g., in chambers or the jury room) constitutes a courtroom closure for purposes of Bone-Club, even in the absence of an explicit court order.<sup>9</sup> Here, the individual voir dire was conducted in the courtroom, not in another area that was closed off from the rest of the courtroom and the public.<sup>10</sup> This is precisely what the court in Erikson described as the “better practice” for conducting individual voir dire.<sup>11</sup> Nor does questioning of individual jurors apart from other jurors violate the right to a public trial because once the jurors are sworn in, they are no longer members of the public, but officers of the court.<sup>12</sup> Thus, there was no courtroom closure when the trial court conducted individual voir dire of one juror in the courtroom apart from the other jurors.

The question that remains is whether a courtroom closure occurred when the one spectator present in the courtroom was asked to leave during the individual voir dire. To determine whether a closure occurred, the court looks to the plain language of the closure request.<sup>13</sup> Here, the record indicates that the court did not ask the spectator to leave; rather, she left at the prosecutor’s request when the judicial assistant asked who she was and whether she would be testifying:

THE COURT: . . . We will continue with the questioning as requested by 31, and that will be the last thing we do this evening. Everybody else is excused until tomorrow morning at 9:30. Leave your numbers on your bench.

JUDICIAL ASSISTANT: Mr. Hammond [prosecutor], the party that’s been sitting in, do you know who that is?

<sup>10</sup> The record does not reflect that the courtroom door was closed or locked and during an earlier questioning of an individual juror, the court stated on the record that it was doing so “in open court with just the attorneys and the defendant and security and the staff here.”

MR. HAMMOND: Mother of the victim.

JUDICIAL ASSISTANT: And she is not going to be testifying?

MR. HAMMOND: No, she won't be.

THE COURT: I'm going to ask –

MR. HAMMOND: Do you mind stepping out for this part?

UNIDENTIFIED FEMALE: Yes. Could I ask a question of the Court? Start here tomorrow at 9:30, or just at 1:30?

THE COURT: 9:30. But the jury is going to form or the venire is going to form downstairs at 9:30 and then, when we are through here, then we will call up the venire when we are ready for them in the morning. They are going to come in at 9:30 to the first floor.

UNIDENTIFIED FEMALE: Okay. And then the resumption of the pretrial is at 1:30?

THE COURT: No, no. We will start the voir dire about 9:30.

UNIDENTIFIED FEMALE: Okay. So it will be all day?

MR. HAMMOND: Yes, all day.

UNIDENTIFIED FEMALE: Thank you very much.

THE COURT: Thank you.

The prosecutor's request that the spectator leave the courtroom does not amount to a courtroom closure because there was no court order, implied or otherwise: the prosecutor—not the court—requested that the spectator leave and it was a request—not an order—to which the spectator agreed.

Because there was no courtroom closure here, Price's right to a public trial was not implicated. Thus, we need not reach the State's additional arguments that he waived or lacked standing to assert that right.

II. Dying Declaration

Price next contends that the trial court erred by admitting Carter's note because the State failed to lay sufficient foundation to admit it as a dying declaration and was testimonial evidence that violated his right to confrontation. We disagree.

No. 63814-9 / 8

Evidentiary errors are reviewed for an abuse of discretion.<sup>14</sup> ER

804(b)(2) provides an exception to the hearsay rule for dying declarations:

The following are not excluded by the hearsay rule if the declarant is unavailable as a witness:

(2) Statement Under Belief of Impending Death. In a trial for homicide or in a civil action proceeding, a statement made by a declarant while believing that the declarant's death was imminent, concerning the cause or circumstances of what the declarant believed to be the declarant's impending death.

Price contends that the State failed to lay the proper foundation for admitting the note as a dying declaration because it was impossible to determine if the note was written at a time when Carter reasonably believed she might die. But as he acknowledges, the note was dated either "9/2" or "9/3" and the murder occurred in the early morning of September 3rd. The evidence also showed it was written on paper torn from a notepad in her purse that was found near her body at the scene. Price's argument that the evidence lacks "certainty" that this was when the note was written is an argument that goes to the weight, rather than the admissibility, of the evidence.

The evidence shows that Carter was confronted by Price with a gun during a domestic violence dispute and he was angered even more by the police's arrival. This, together with evidence indicating that the note was written shortly before the shooting, is sufficient to establish that Carter wrote the note at a time when she reasonably believed her death was imminent.

Price further contends that "there is a strong inference" that Carter's statement was erroneous because he did not shoot her for "fooling around" as

No. 63814-9 / 9

the note indicates, but because she had contacted the police during their argument. But again, this is an argument that goes to the weight, not admissibility, of the evidence. The other inference to be drawn is that he shot her for the reason the note stated: he already had the gun and confronted her with it even before she called 911 or the police arrived. The trial court did not abuse its discretion by ruling that the note was admissible as a dying declaration.

Price further contends that the Confrontation Clause prevents admission of the note because it was testimonial and he did not have a prior opportunity to cross-examine her. We disagree.

Admitting hearsay evidence when the declarant is unavailable to testify raises Confrontation Clause concerns.<sup>15</sup> Thus, even if a hearsay exception applies, the Confrontation Clause requires the trial court to also determine whether the hearsay evidence is “testimonial.”<sup>16</sup> If it is testimonial, the court may only admit the hearsay evidence if the defendant had a prior opportunity to cross-examine the declarant.<sup>17</sup>

The Supreme Court has not provided a comprehensive definition of “testimonial” evidence.<sup>18</sup> But the Court explained that testimonial statements are those that are “formal statement[s] to government officers” or produced with the involvement of government officers “with an eye toward trial.”<sup>19</sup> Thus, testimonial statements are those “that were made under circumstances which would lead an objective witness reasonably to believe that the statement would be available for use at a later trial."<sup>20</sup>

Here, the statement was not made with police involvement, nor does its content suggest it was made "with any eye toward trial." Identifying the killer to assist police in the prosecution did not appear to be the purpose of the note, as Price suggests. Given the circumstances, Price's identity was not in question: Carter identified him to the 911 dispatcher, he was the only one at the house and police observed him there. Rather, the content of the note conveys an intimate communication, intended as parting words to a family member. It was addressed affectionately to Carter's daughter (as opposed to the authorities or "to whom it may concern"), and was written in verse, rather than as an accusation or bearing witness to a crime for the prosecution. Thus, the note was not testimonial and its admission does not raise Confrontation concerns.

Finally, Price contends that the trial court erred by also ruling that Carter's note was admissible under the doctrine of forfeiture by wrongdoing. Price argues that this ruling was error because the court did not make a finding that Price acted with intent to make Carter unavailable to testify at trial. The doctrine of forfeiture by wrongdoing permits a court to admit evidence that would otherwise be inadmissible under the Confrontation Clause when the defendant acted with intent to make to make the witness unavailable to testify at trial.<sup>21</sup> Because there

STATE OF WASHINGTON

FILED
COURT OF APPEALS
DIVISION II

In re the Personal Restraint Petition of

DONNELL W. PRICE,

Petitioner.

06-1-04159-5

Donnell W. Price seeks relief from personal restraint imposed following his conviction of first degree murder and second degree unlawful possession of a firearm. After the jury found by special verdict that he was armed with a firearm and that he committed the crime to intimidate the victim, the court imposed an exceptional sentence of 494 months of confinement.

Price makes several claims of error. He asserts that the trial court gave the jury erroneously worded special verdict instructions and that his attorney was ineffective in failing to object to these instructions. He also claims that the trial court miscalculated his offender scores, violated his double jeopardy rights, and erred in refusing to instruct the jury on the lesser-included offenses of first and second degree manslaughter. He makes additional claims of ineffective assistance of counsel in claiming that his attorney failed to conduct an adequate pretrial investigation, failed to obtain a psychiatric evaluation to determine his competency to stand trial, failed to object to the State's use of peremptory challenges to remove black jurors from the jury pool, and failed to present a coherent closing argument on the defense of police fabrication.

To be entitled to relief, Price must assert either constitutional error that resulted in actual and substantial prejudice or nonconstitutional error that resulted in a complete miscarriage of justice. In re Pers. Restraint of Cook, 114 Wn.2d 802, 813 (1990). He must also state in his petition the facts on which his claim of unlawful restraint is based and the evidence available to support the factual allegations. RAP 16.7(a)(2)(i); In re Pers. Restraint of Williams, 111 Wn.2d 353, 365 (1988). When a petition relies on conclusory allegations, we must decline to consider its validity. In re Pers. Restraint of Cook, 114 Wn.2d at 813-14.

Special Verdict Instructions

Price argues that the special verdict instructions were erroneous because they failed to inform the jury that unanimity was required for a “yes” vote but not for a “no” vote, citing State v. Bashaw, 169 Wn.2d 133 (2010). The Washington Supreme Court recently overruled the nonunanimity rule in Bashaw, holding instead that the trial court did not err in informing the jury that it needed to agree unanimously on the answer to the special verdict. State v. Nunez, 174 Wn.2d 707, *1 (2012).

Here, the trial court instructed the jury that it “should deliberate on each question presented on the special verdict forms. In order to answer any question, you must unanimously agree on the answer.” Instruction 23. The polling of the jury showed that it was unanimous in answering “yes” to the special verdicts. We see no instructional error that entitles Price to relief, and we reject his related claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. See In re Pers. Restraint of Crace, 174 Wn.2d 835, 840 (2012) (to prove

DUI offense in 2002. The prosecutor also submitted documents showing that Price received additional jail time in 1994 and 1995 when he violated the conditions of his 1993 sentences, and he stated that a document still in his office showed a third sentence modification in 1999 that resulted in more jail time. The 1999 modification was essential to preventing Price's three prior offenses from washing before he committed the DUI in 2002. The trial court refused the prosecutor's request to set sentencing over until he could retrieve the 1999 modification order, despite Price's argument that his prior convictions washed. Instead, the trial court rested its offender score calculation on the prosecutor's statement that the documentation prepared by his staff indicated that Price's criminal history did not wash.

The State argues here that the failure to provide proper documentation constitutes harmless error because the trial court would have imposed the same sentence regardless of Price's offender score. We disagree. The trial court entered written findings of fact in support of its exceptional sentence, and one finding stated that Price's prior history did not wash and that his offender score was four. The court based its exceptional sentence on the standard range calculated from that offender score. We therefore remand for resentencing so that the State may provide all relevant documentation to prove Price's criminal history and resulting offender score.<sup>1</sup> RCW 9.94A.530(2); State v. Calhoun, 163 Wn. App. 153, 167 (2011), review denied, 173 Wn.2d 1018 (2012); see also State v. Jackson, 150 Wn. App. 877, 890 (2009) (remanding for resentencing in which State may present evidence to support offender score). We also remand for correction of the seriousness levels pertinent to each current offense, which should be XV and III instead of XIV and IV. RCW 9.94A.515.

<sup>1</sup> If possible, that documentation should include the judgment and sentence from Price's prior drug conviction. The prosecutor stated below that its exhibit included that judgment and sentence, but this document is not in the copy of the exhibit provided to this court. See State v. Ford, 137 Wn.2d 472, 480 (1999) (although best evidence of prior conviction is certified copy of judgment and sentence, other competent evidence may be introduced to establish criminal history).

Double Jeopardy

Price contends that his double jeopardy rights were violated, but the source of this alleged violation is unclear. To the extent that he challenges his firearm enhancement because his murder conviction already punished him for using a firearm, his double jeopardy argument fails. State v. Kelly, 168 Wn.2d 72, 79-80 (2010); RCW 9.94A.533(3).

Lesser Included Instruction

Price contends here that the trial court erred in refusing to instruct the jury on the lesser included offenses of first and second degree manslaughter. An instruction on a lesser included offense is warranted only if two conditions are met: each element of the lesser offense must be a necessary element of the charged offense, and the evidence must support an inference that the lesser crime was committed instead of the charged crime. State v. Workman, 90 Wn.2d 443, 447-48 (1978); State v. Keene, 121 Wn. App. 143, 149 (2004). Where the trial court refuses to give an instruction based on a factual determination, we review the denial for abuse of discretion. State v. Hunter, 152 Wn. App. 30, 43 (2009), review denied, 168 Wn.2d 1008 (2010).

The trial court refused to instruct the jury on either degree of manslaughter because the evidence did not support a manslaughter instruction. First degree manslaughter requires proof that the defendant caused the death of another with recklessness, and second degree manslaughter requires proof that the death was the result of the defendant's criminal negligence. RCW 9A.32.060(1)(a); RCW 9A.32.070(1). The first degree murder statute under which Price was charged requires proof that the defendant had the premeditated intent to cause the death of another. RCW 9A.32.030(1)(a).

The evidence shows that officers responded after the victim called 911 to report a domestic violence incident involving her boyfriend Price, who had a gun. When the police approached Price's home, they heard a man and a woman arguing inside. Price came to the door and stepped outside, but he went back in and slammed the door shut after the police announced themselves. A few seconds later, the officers heard a woman scream. When they kicked in the door, they heard a gunshot. After Price came out of the house, the police entered and found his girlfriend dead of a single gunshot wound to her neck. They also found a note addressed to her daughter that contained the victim's fingerprints, was in her handwriting, and that was on paper torn from a notebook in her purse. The note explained that Price had shot her because she had "fooled around." State v. Price, 154 Wn. App. 480, 484 (2009), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 1818 (2011). Forensic evidence showed that Price was holding his girlfriend very close to him when the shot was fired.

Price contends that there was evidence that he had been drinking and using drugs that night, and that the jury could have concluded that because he was intoxicated, he engaged in reckless behavior that inadvertently caused his girlfriend's death. He cites no evidence to support his claim of intoxication, and the circumstances of the victim's death contradict his assertion that it was inadvertent. Moreover, the jury rejected the lesser included offense of second degree murder, choosing instead to convict Price of first degree murder. We see no error in the trial court's refusal to instruct the jury on first and second degree manslaughter.

Ineffective Assistance of Counsel

Price makes several additional claims of ineffective assistance. He contends that his attorney failed to investigate his claims of struggle and to obtain an expert to test and analyze "the alleged controlled substance." The State's documentation shows that defense counsel did investigate the circumstances of the shooting and the issue of the victim's drug use. Counsel also cross examined the medical examiner about drugs and alcohol in the victim's system. We see no deficient performance in this regard and no reasonable probability that the trial's outcome would have differed with additional investigation of these issues. See State v. McFarland, 127 Wn.2d 322, 334-35 (1995) (prejudice is shown by reasonable probability that, but for counsel's deficient performance, result of proceeding would have been different).

Price also claims that his attorney was deficient in failing to obtain a psychiatric evaluation to determine his competency to stand trial. Price provides no support for the claim that his drug and alcohol consumption rendered it impossible for him to understand the charges or to assist in his defense, and we need not discuss this claim further. See State v. Lewis, 141 Wn. App. 367, 381 (2007) (defendant is competent to stand trial if he understands the nature of the charges against him and is capable of assisting in his own defense).

Price next complains about his attorney's refusal to object when the prosecuting attorney used peremptory challenges to remove blacks from the jury. But Price provides no evidence of any discrimination in the jury's selection. See State v. Rhone, 168 Wn.2d

645, 653-54 (2010) (defendant challenging prosecutor's peremptory challenge of venire member has burden to establish prima facie case of purposeful discrimination). Nor does he show the racial composition of the jury venire or the final jury. He again fails to demonstrate that his counsel was deficient.

Finally, Price asserts that his attorney was deficient in failing to present an argument on the defense of police fabrication. He provides no support for his claim of fabrication, and we reject his claim of deficiency. Accordingly, it is hereby ORDERED that this petition is granted in part and the matter remanded for resentencing.

DATED this 9th day of October, 2012.

2 (Jury out.)

3 THE COURT: The Court's instructions to the jury
4 consist of 25 instructions and a cover sheet, Court's
5 Instructions to the Jury; and, Verdict Form A, Count I;
6 Verdict Form B, Count I; Verdict Form A, Count II; Special
7 Verdict Form regarding armed with a firearm for Count I;
8 Special Verdict Form regarding deliberate cruelty; and 9 Special Verdict Form regarding manifest intimidation.

10 State's objections to the Court's instructions?

11 MR. HAMMOND: Your Honor, as we indicated
12 earlier, you made a ruling yesterday concerning the 13 stipulation that would be read to the jury in terms of what 14 they would learn of the defendant's prior history. And 15 that ruling not only impacted the stipulation that would be 16 read to the jury, but, as I indicated yesterday, that 17 ruling also meant that the Court would have to give the 18 instruction that you now have as -- I'm just numbering my 19 own now. I hope my numbers come out the same. I think 20 it's 17 -- excuse me, 18. The State had originally 21 proposed an instruction which stated what it was our 22 position was, the second element that we would have to 23 prove.

24 The defense argument that prevailed yesterday
25 means that, instead, that instruction is reading that the

1 defendant had previously been convicted of a crime that
2 made him ineligible to possess a firearm on or about 3 September 3rd, 2006. And I'm just preserving the record in 4 terms of that.

5 THE COURT: All right. Of course, we made a
6 complete record of this. I thought that the State's 7 proposed instruction was prejudicial, highly prejudicial,
8 compared to the probative value; and considering that we 9 put on the record the stipulation, and the defendant agreed
10 to testify regarding the stipulation and his knowing and 11 intelligent understanding of the stipulation, and the 12 consequences, are part of the record. And I think that it
13 is an instruction that is within the law as agreed to, and 14 also results in a fair instruction that doesn't unduly
15 prejudice either side.

16 MR. HAMMOND: And that also would apply for 17 Instruction 14, which defines the crime of unlawful 18 possession of a firearm.

19 THE COURT: That's correct, they are both the 20 same language.

21 MR. HAMMOND: I just want to make sure that they 22 don't show as being a State's proposed. That's just 23 drafted in response to the Court.

24 THE COURT: All right. Any other objections?

25 MR. HAMMOND: No, Your Honor. We had a

1 conversation. I should probably make a record of it.

2 The State had proposed an instruction in terms of 3 the special verdict for the aggravating factor of the 4 defendant's conduct during the commission of the offense
5 manifesting intimidation of the victim. The original
6 proposed by the State did not have a definition for 7 intimidation. I had argued that the term defined itself.
8 The Court directed us to get dictionaries. And, based on 9 that, Black's Law Dictionary, actually both of the editions
10 that we had -- we had an older and newer edition -- they 11 both defined intimidation in the same way and said that it
12 meant unlawful coercion, extortion, duress, putting in 13 fear. That has been added as a third paragraph to 14 Instruction No. 25, and I have no objection. I just want 15 to make clear that we proposed it without that.

16 THE COURT: All right. Any other objections?

17 MR. HAMMOND: No, Your Honor.

18 THE COURT: Mr. Mahoney, objections to the 19 Court's instruction?

20 MR. MAHONEY: Before doing that, I would object
21 to the failure to bifurcate the trial with regard to the 22 aggravating factors. I believe that the discussion of 23 these issues and this thing, along with the argument as to 24 guilty or not guilty of the crime itself, is a violation of 25 due process of law and that the matters should be

1 separated.

2 THE COURT: I think that this jury has heard all
3 of the evidence and is well positioned to, under the law,
4 the case law regarding bifurcation and regarding 5 aggravating circumstances and the authority of a court to 6 find aggravating circumstances being inappropriate, and 7 that those aggravating circumstances must be found by a
8 jury beyond a reasonable doubt; that the structured 9 instructions that have been formulated are fair to both 10 sides, and we're leaving it to the trier of the fact as 11 required by law now to make a determination as to whether 12 or not, beyond a reasonable doubt, aggravating
13 circumstances exist. And I don't think that it's unfair or 14 unlawful to not bifurcate that issue. We will present it
15 to this jury that has heard the guilt phase also.

16 MR. MAHONEY: I have a couple of other things --

17 MR. HAMMOND: Can I make an additional record on 18 that issue very quickly before we move on?

19 The Court had the statute. When we discussed 20 this earlier this morning, we had the statute in front of 21 us. It clearly gives the Court discretion and the 22 authority to weigh the circumstances in the way the Court
23 has done. We had originally proposed instructions to you,
24 the State had proposed instructions which contemplated it
25 being a bifurcated trial, but as things played out in trial

1 it became apparent that there would be no additional 2 evidence that we would be presenting to a jury should they 3 come back with a guilty verdict. So, given that, that is 4 the reason that we have proceeded from going with the 5 bifurcated proceeding to going with just a single 6 proceeding.

7 THE COURT: And you're saying the State doesn't
8 object to this, is that what you're saying?

9 MR. HAMMOND: Yes, Your Honor, that's correct.

10 THE COURT: All right.

11 MR. MAHONEY: All right. My second motion --
12 now, I must concede that I have, during the course of this 13 afternoon, read some annotations generously provided to me
14 by Mr. Hammond. Among those annotations -- and I've been 15 reading enough that it's now making me need to use my 16 glasses a bit -- was State v. Scott, 72 Washington Appeals
17 207, which, if I interpreted things correctly, says whether 18 or not there should be a review of aggravating factors is a 19 question of law. And I would say, with regard to 20 deliberate cruelty, that this is an issue which should not 21 be submitted to the jury because as a matter of law it
22 should not be present in this case.

23 There are numerous cases, both recent and old,
24 which talk about deliberate cruelty. And both the statute
25 itself, which is 9.94A.535(3)(y), they indicate that

1 deliberate cruelty is something that substantially exceeds
2 the harm necessary to satisfy an element of the crime. I
3 believe that there is nothing in this case -- we have an 4 instance of one shot, that one shot being fatal.

5 The case law which is prior to the statute, as I
6 understand it, because I believe that was a recent 7 amendment, in State v. Barnett, 104 Washington Appeals 191,
8 and a number of other cases, have essentially held that 9 deliberate cruelty is not warranted as an aggravating
10 factor when it involves acts that are just associated with 11 the crime.

12 There is other case law that says if there is 13 unusual violence -- and these have been, by and large,
14 things where you might have multiple stabbings, or in one 15 case the victim was shot and then some time went by and the 16 victim was shot a second time while still living -- these 17 are the only things that I believe as a matter of law can 18 involve deliberate cruelty. I do not believe that there
19 are sufficient facts in the case at bar to warrant the jury
20 making a decision on deliberate cruelty as an aggravating
21 factor.

22 THE COURT: Well, it seems to me that we have a
23 conflict in the law. One, the case law, and now the 24 statutes, indicate that they want not the courts to make 25 these decisions about aggravating factors but they want a

1 jury to make these decisions. And for the spirit of that 2 law, it seems to me that it's not a question of law for the 3 Court to make a determination, it's a question for the 4 jury, and the jury can decide whether or not this is 5 deliberate cruelty, and the jury can decide whether or not
6 appropriately, under the law, it appears to me,
7 intimidation is a factor.

8 And we even went further to kind of anticipate 9 what the argument might be. There wasn't a definition for 10 intimidation, and so we looked at Black's Law Dictionary,
11 one that was 50 years old, and it's still the same
12 definition for a 2007 publication of Black's Law Dictionary
13 that says the same thing as far as defining intimidation.

14 So that, it seems to me, with the spirit that the 15 state of the law is, makes it appropriate to leave it up to 16 the jury to see if there are aggravating factors for 17 deliberate cruelty, having defined it, and aggravating
18 factors for intimidation, having defined it as best we can.

19 MR. MAHONEY: Okay. I might add this one thing, 20 and that is, it strikes me that it is comparable to the 21 common motion at the close of both cases as to whether 22 there is sufficient evidence to dismiss or to carry the 23 case out.

24 THE COURT: Probably is, and I just found that we 25 got past that threshold. So, in the spirit, as I've

1 indicated, I think you got past that, and I'm going to 2 leave the decision to the jury.

3 MR. MAHONEY: Of course, I'm at a point of 4 raising issues in case there should be a conviction and a
5 possible appeal.

6 THE COURT: Sure.

7 MR. MAHONEY: In that regard, I will address
8 intimidation. The statute that involves intimidation
9 appears to state it -- and that is, again, 9.94A.530(3) -- 10 or .3(h)(ii) states that the aggravating factor is 11 deliberate cruelty or intimidation of the victim.

12 It is our position that it may not be both, that 13 it may only be one, since both have been selected. And I
14 think the rule of lenity requires that, since otherwise it
15 would be ambiguous, and since these both -- both of these 16 issues are presented to the jury, and as a matter of law
17 both should not be presented, that we therefore object on 18 that basis. In other words, there should -- an election
19 should be made as to which of those two the jury decides
20 upon as an accurate --

21 THE COURT: How can a court of law decide
22 deliberate cruelty and intimidation, and then turn around 23 and have the law say that you can't consider them as 24 aggravating factors to increase the sentence? I mean,
25 first of all, you say that the court has to find, by law,

1 deliberate cruelty and intimidation. And then the law
2 says, even though you find it, the jury has to decide
3 whether it is sufficient, or not, and that there is 4 deliberate cruelty and intimidation in order to increase
5 the sentence outside of the guidelines.

6 MR. MAHONEY: Well, the first question the Court
7 posed to me is -- I say it should be decided as a matter of 8 law, that is, not a matter of law in terms of is there an 9 aggravating factor, but a matter of law as to whether there
10 is sufficient evidence to present the issue of whether or 11 not there is an aggravating factor.

12 THE COURT: And I think --

13 MR. MAHONEY: -- before the jury. And then, in 14 this -- and that would apply to anything.

15 THE COURT: And I guess I'm saying I'm not taking 16 that issue away from the jury.

17 MR. MAHONEY: I recall that. However, my last 18 position was one that the statute itself, on this 19 particular section, words it in the alternative, that is,
20 deliberate cruelty or intimidation of the victim. And that 21 being the case, there must be an election of one or the 22 other; and that my interpretation, since the statute would 23 appear to be ambiguous here, is that the rule of lenity
24 applies and therefore both alleged aggravating factors
25 cannot be submitted to the jury but merely one of the two.

1 THE COURT: And I'm looking at it, it seems to 2 me, that by definition there is -- you can distinguish the 3 two.

4 All right. Any other objections?

5 MR. MAHONEY: There will be, but not as -- they 6 will be to the instructions themselves.

7 THE COURT: That's what I'm asking, any
8 objections to the Court's instructions?

9 MR. MAHONEY: Yes, because my prior ones I don't 10 think were instruction exceptions -- although I'll get to 11 that -- but, in fact, were just motions without regard to 12 the instructions.

13 THE COURT: Okay. Your motions are overruled, 14 then.

15 MR. MAHONEY: Yes.

16 In terms of my exceptions --

17 THE COURT: Objections to the instructions.

18 MR. MAHONEY: Yes.

19 THE COURT: Okay. One thing that I remember you
20 saying, while you're looking there, you objected when we 21 informally talked about them about not giving the lesser 22 included of first manslaughter and second manslaughter, and 23 I assume that you want to make that part of the record.

24 MR. MAHONEY: I will, but that would be my 25 exception to failure to give, whereas now I'm looking at

1 exceptions --

2 THE COURT: Objections. By rule, you don't need
3 exceptions anymore, just objections for giving or not
4 giving. Don't confuse me.

5 MR. MAHONEY: I'm more likely to be the one
6 confused.

7 THE COURT: And the reason I didn't give first
8 and second degree manslaughter is because I didn't think 9 there was any evidence to support it.

10 MR. MAHONEY: Well, I'll get to that. But, first 11 I would like to look at the ones that the Court is 12 proposing to give, if I may.

13 THE COURT: Okay.

14 MR. MAHONEY: Now, mine are not numbered.

15 THE COURT: So you haven't numbered yours yet.
16 We have numbered them for the Court, of course, and we have 17 numbered them for the jury because they're going to have a 18 copy. So let's just start with, let's take the wording of 19 the instruction you are objecting to, and that will be --

20 MR. MAHONEY: I shall. Looking at the 21 instruction which is towards the end, which begins: "You
22 will also be furnished with additional Special Verdict
23 Forms."

24 In the body of that instruction, in paragraph 2
25 you have the discussion of aggravating factors. For the

1 reasons given in my motion, or motions, I should say, that 2 the Court has just ruled on, I object to the giving of that
3 instruction.

4 THE COURT: The one that says: "You will also be
5 furnished with a Special Verdict Form for Count I. If you
6 find the defendant not guilty on Count I, do not use the 7 Special Verdict Form," and so on.

8 MR. MAHONEY: Yes. So I except to the giving of 9 that -- or object, if you prefer, the giving of that 10 instruction for the reasons that I outlined in the motions
11 I made prior to progressing to the instructions.

12 THE COURT: Okay. That's part of the record of 13 why I'm giving this instruction.

14 MR. MAHONEY: Yes.

15 Then, with regard to at least in the instructions
16 I have, the next instruction, which says: "For purposes of 17 a Special Verdict, the State must prove" -- directing the 18 Court's attention to the last paragraph.

19 THE COURT: I've got that one.

20 MR. MAHONEY: "Deliberate cruelty means
21 gratuitous violence or other conduct that inflicts
22 physical, psychological or emotional pain as an end in 23 itself."

24 I believe that because of the cases cited in my 25 earlier argument, which indicate that deliberate cruelty is

1 gratuitous violence that goes beyond the violence that 2 amounts to the element of the crime, and the statute even 3 says substantially exceeds harm necessary to satisfy an 4 element, that that is not laid out in deliberate cruelty.
5 I would propose that an addition be made to this
6 instruction which might be put in after the word "conduct"
7 which would say "over and above the act of causing death."
8 Since, certainly, causing death is going to --

9 THE COURT: It says, "Deliberate cruelty means
10 gratuitous violence or other conduct that inflicts
11 physical, psychological or emotional pain as an end in 12 itself."

13 MR. MAHONEY: Well, if we believe that he 14 intended to --

15 THE COURT: Is that the sentence you are talking 16 about?

17 MR. MAHONEY: Yes.

18 THE COURT: What do you want to add to that?

19 MR. MAHONEY: I would add, after the word
20 "conduct," "over and above the act of causing death."

21 THE COURT: Wait a minute. The instruction I'm 22 looking at, the last sentence it is of Instruction 24,
23 which starts at the top: "For purposes of a special 24 verdict, the State must prove beyond a reasonable doubt the 25 presence of an aggravating factor." And then the last

1 sentence says: "Deliberate cruelty means gratuitous
2 violence or other conduct that inflicts physical,
3 psychological or emotional pain as an end in itself."

4 I don't see where you are talking about conduct.

5 MR. MAHONEY: What I am reading says gratuitous
6 violence or other conduct. Following the word "conduct,"
7 unless it has been changed and I was not given the change,
8 after the word "conduct" --

9 THE COURT: Let me show you Instruction 24. I'm 10 surprised that you don't have -- Is that the instruction
11 you're talking about?

12 MR. MAHONEY: Yes. The word "conduct" appears 13 right here. I would caret in the language that I cited to 14 the Court.

15 THE COURT: You're absolutely right. I just 16 glossed over that because it was in the first paragraph.
17 And then the last paragraph, "conduct" is again in that 18 paragraph: "Deliberate cruelty means gratuitous violence
19 or other conduct that inflicts physical, psychological, or 20 emotional pain as an end in itself." And at the end of 21 that you want to add something?

22 MR. MAHONEY: In between "conduct" the words
23 "conduct" and "that" --

24 THE COURT: Inflicts?

25 MR. MAHONEY: That inflicts, yes. I would add:

1 "Over and above the act of causing death," because 2 certainly shooting someone is a physical act that is going
3 to cause pain.

4 Even the process, if we are to believe --

5 THE COURT: That's where your language could go
6 at the end, after "as an end in itself, over and above."

7 MR. MAHONEY: I have no pride of authorship with 8 regard to where.

9 THE COURT: Do you have any objection to that?

10 MR. HAMMOND: I do, Your Honor. If you look at 11 the first paragraph of that instruction, what it indicates 12 is that the aggravating factor alleged in this case is that 13 the offense involved domestic violence and the defendant's
14 conduct during the commission of the offense manifested
15 deliberate cruelty. If you put in the language Counsel is 16 suggesting, it is going to be contradictory because it is 17 going to be both telling them that they have to look at the 18 conduct during the offense, which is in this case murder, 19 and then it is also going to be telling them that it has to 20 be something above and beyond murder.

21 MR. MAHONEY: I believe that as this instruction
22 reads, the jury can easily be misled from the case law and 23 the statute, which I cited, to come to a conclusion that it
24 is going to be both an infliction of physical pain to shoot
25 someone, that it will be an infliction of psychological or

1 emotional pain to be pointing the gun, and, as speculated
2 by Mr. McAdam, grabbing --

3 THE COURT: It doesn't meet the definition of 4 gratuitous violence. If the crime itself -- if they find
5 that to have been committed, they sure are not going to be 6 able to say it is gratuitous. And so that's where 7 gratuitous violence then would be conduct that inflicts
8 physical, psychological, or emotional pain as an end in
9 itself.

10 MR. MAHONEY: I would respectfully disagree with 11 the Court. And, additionally, I would state that, since 12 the statute itself says that it is something that 13 substantially exceeds harm necessary to satisfy an element,
14 that reading that statute -- this instruction does not 15 sufficiently conform to the statute.

16 THE COURT: Your objection is noted.

17 MR. HAMMOND: Just to make a brief record, the 18 State's position is, not everybody who is murdered knows
19 they are going to die. And sort of the underlying facts we 20 are relying on in both the intimidation and deliberate
21 cruelty front.

22 MR. MAHONEY: I would next then either except or 23 object to the Court's failure to give the defendant's
24 proposed statute with -- and let me grab mine -- and these 25 are not numbered so, again, I will read the first few

1 words, which begins: "As to Count II of the Information,
2 necessity is available as a defense."

3 And we object to the Court's failing to give that
4 instruction for the reasons that -- well, I guess we didn't
5 discuss it on the record, but I believe that it can be 6 inferred from the facts, both for this argument and 7 subsequent argument, as well as the discussion on the 8 Court's proposed instructions, I think it's important to 9 note that the entire case with regard to proof of the 10 elements of the two charged crimes is circumstantial.
11 There is no direct evidence to the actual acts which would 12 constitute the murder. There is no direct evidence as to 13 the facts which would constitute possession. And that, for 14 that reason, inferences can be made from the facts that are 15 there. I believe as to this particular objection that an 16 inference can be made that following the acts which 17 resulted in the death of Ms. Carter, that a person in a 18 temporary state of confusion could easily do something such 19 as carry the gun upstairs without intending to possess it,
20 and that there would need to be something -- this being a 21 possible theory of the defense that can be inferred from 22 these facts -- that would warrant the giving of this
23 instruction.

24 THE COURT: I don't think there is a wit of 25 evidence to support that theory, and that's why I'm not

1 giving that instruction.

2 MR. MAHONEY: All right. The defense next
3 objects to the Court's failure to give the proposed
4 instruction which begins: "911 emergency calls and a dying
5 declaration have been admitted in evidence." And it is a 6 cautionary instruction. It was an instruction that was 7 given in essence, not the exact words, but in essence was 8 given in State v. Giffing, 45 Washington Appeals 369, and 9 was reproduced in the footnote of that case by the court in 10 its decision as a justification for the court in that 11 particular case not to have gone against the putting into 12 evidence -- I believe they were -- well, it was something
13 that was ruled to have been a dying declaration. I don't 14 have the case before me, so I can't state specifically.
15 But, I think that that case, by inference, approves the 16 giving of this instruction since they rely on it in the 17 body of their decision and reproduce it in a footnote.

18 THE COURT: And I think that's a comment on the 19 evidence and I'm not giving that one.

20 MR. HAMMOND: And as for the State to make
21 additional record on that issue, also, I did get Giffing
22 late this morning, never had a chance to read the entire 23 opinion. I did read the one page that I was provided, and 24 it appears to be dicta, so it doesn't appear to be solid
25 authority for the proposition that the defense is entitled

1 to the instruction.

2 THE COURT: All right. I'm not giving it.

3 MR. MAHONEY: Next, I would do this as a group,
4 if that's appropriate to the Court, the Court's failure to 5 give the defense proposed instruction on lesser included,
6 which begins: "If you are not satisfied beyond a
7 reasonable doubt," which names, in addition to murder two,
8 manslaughter one and manslaughter two; for the same
9 reasons, the failure to give the definitions of the 10 offenses of manslaughter one and manslaughter two, and the 11 failure to give the proposed to-convicts with regard to 12 those.

13 Now, the basis for that is, once again, as I
14 indicated to the Court, we need to keep in mind that all of 15 the evidence that relates to the alleged crimes is 16 circumstantial evidence. If inferences can be made from 17 this circumstantial evidence, it then becomes a defense
18 which the defendant is entitled to instructions on. I
19 believe that you certainly -- since the only thing that you
20 really have is a scream was heard, a shot was fired,
21 Ms. Carter died as a result of the shot being fired, the --

22 THE COURT: That's not the only thing they have.

23 MR. MAHONEY: I'm about to add a few things, Your 24 Honor. According to Mr. McAdam, the position of the body, 25 the blood drops, the blood spatters and so forth, would

1 indicate that Ms. Carter was next to the left-hand side of 2 the wall in the utility room. All of the other factors
3 would seem to indicate, since the front door had been 4 closed and they suddenly appear in the utility room, that 5 they were in the process of walking towards the back door.
6 I believe that these are things that may be inferred from 7 this fact: The fact that the defendant's t-shirt had
8 gunpowder residue on it and actually had been burned
9 through by the gunpowder, and that his flesh beneath had 10 also been burned by it; and the testimony of 11 Ms. Lawrence -- I believe her name was Brenda Lawrence -- 12 would show that his gun was being held in somewhat the 13 position that my hand is now (demonstrating) with the 14 barrel going from right to left in an upward position.
15 Given this fact, I believe -- and the facts that they 16 appeared to be walking towards the back door -- I believe 17 that a reasonable inference can be made that, as they 18 walked, some event could have occurred above and beyond,
19 especially since Mr. McAdam admitted that there were 20 circumstances other than the one he liked the most, which 21 could have resulted in these things.

22 If, then, this amounts to negligence -- and I
23 believe Officer Kim testified that they are trained that it
24 is negligent to carry the weapon with the muzzle facing up
25 rather than down --

1 THE COURT: No. He said the other way around.
2 He said he is trained to hold the revolver down.

3 MR. MAHONEY: Yes, so the muzzle of the revolver
4 would be down.

5 THE COURT: So it would be negligent otherwise to 6 have it in any other position, and that's why you want
7 second degree. And you want first degree because you think
8 the whole thing is reckless. And I'm saying, again, that,
9 in my mind, there isn't any evidence for either scenario.

10 MR. MAHONEY: Well, I was merely outlining some 11 of those facts. And I can go on. That would allow the 12 defense to infer from the circumstantial evidence that 13 there was something other than an intention to inflict
14 death, which would then mean that if the defendant's acts
15 were either reckless in proceeding in that fashion, or 16 negligent, that we then could argue to the jury
17 manslaughter one and manslaughter two. Since I believe 18 there are facts from which such inferences can be made, we 19 are entitled to an instruction on our theory of the case.
20 And both of these instructions fit with that theory of the 21 case and therefore should be given along with their other
22 instructions, vis-a-vis, the definition to convict, et 23 cetera.

24 THE COURT: If there was any evidence to support
25 it, I would give it.

1 MR. HAMMOND: And the State has the same position
2 as the Court, there has to be substantial evidence
3 indicating that the lesser and only the lesser happened.

4 THE COURT: Any other objections?

5 MR. MAHONEY: For purposes of the record, I would
6 indicate that the standard is not substantial evidence. As 7 I read the case law, if there is any evidence from which 8 the defense theory could be argued, that they are entitled
9 to an instruction on that theory of the case.

10 THE COURT: For their theory of the case. And I
11 agree with you. And I don't think there is.

12 MR. MAHONEY: Okay. Now, that is all of my 13 objections, but I would want some direction on something I
14 would raise now, if the Court deems that it's appropriate
15 at this time.

16 THE COURT: What's the direction?

17 MR. MAHONEY: I believe that on the issue of 18 intent and knowledge as to Murder 1 and Murder 2, that I
19 can make these types of inferences from the evidence that 20 is in the record, even if I'm not entitled to argue that it
21 would support a lesser crime. In other words, I don't want
22 to be held in contempt and suddenly said, "Mahoney, you 23 shouldn't have argued that," because I certainly intend to.

24 THE COURT: I'm going to allow you to.

25 MR. MAHONEY: Okay. Also, the topic hasn't come

1 up yet and I'm raising it now. It's 4:00. I think it is 2 too late to argue.

3 THE COURT: Well, we are going to go until we get
4 finished. I warned the Counsel that we were going to start
5 this at 1:30. I'm not going to release this jury for 6 Friday, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday. We're going to get 7 our arguments in and get the jury to begin deliberations.
8 We are going to do it tonight. We are going to take as 9 much time as we need for Counsel, and we are going to take
10 a break in between, but this is, unfortunately, a long
11 weekend and I don't think it is fair to either side to 12 leave it in the posture that it would be for Friday,
13 Saturday, Sunday, and Monday.

14 MR. MAHONEY: For purposes of the record, I would
15 indicate that tomorrow is a court date. And while I
16 realize that this Court may have set other hearings, I
17 believe that this case should take precedence, that 18 going -- and this is bound to go substantially beyond the 19 court day -- I believe that it prejudices us in that the 20 jury is not in a position to go that long, that it becomes 21 a violation of due process, and that we should return
22 tomorrow morning for argument.

23 MR. HAMMOND: I have no problem with going 24 tomorrow morning, Your Honor, if the Court can adjust its 25 calendar. I don't know how many civil matters you have on.

1 THE COURT: That's the best argument you've had 2 all day. Due process is important. So, we're going to let
3 them go. We're going to set everything over tomorrow
4 that's on the civil calendar and the criminal calendar.
5 Maybe we will get to the criminal calendar.

6 JUDICIAL ASSISTANT: You only have one thing on 7 in the afternoon.

8 THE COURT: Whatever it is. We will start
9 tomorrow morning at 9:30. Excuse them now. Go in there
10 now.

11 And we will stay in session a moment.

12 MR. HAMMOND: I did have to address one thing
13 Mr. Mahoney said before his eminently persuasive argument
14 that he just made.

15 JUDICIAL ASSISTANT: Judge, do you want them here
16 at 9:00 or 9:30?

17 THE COURT: 9:30.

18 (Jurors excused.)

19 THE COURT: Did you fix the stipulation, is that 20 what you are doing?

21 MR. HAMMOND: Yes.

22 THE COURT: As long as we have got until 23 tomorrow, get your staff to take care of that "bailiff" in 24 two places.

25 MR. HAMMOND: Will do.

1                   We are just filing the stipulation that we read
2                   into the record, Your Honor.

3                   THE COURT: I'm not entering into the 4                   stipulation. This stipulation is between the parties, not
5                   the Court. All right. We will file it.

6                   MR. MAHONEY: If it requires an interlineation,
7                   that does not bother me.

8                   THE COURT: I think it does. It says: "It is 9                   hereby stipulated by and between the defendant, Donnell
10                  Wayne Price, and the State of Washington, that the 11                  following is true: As of September 3rd, 2006, the 12                  defendant, Donnell Wayne Price, had previously been 13                  convicted of a crime that makes him ineligible to possess a 14                  firearm as is required to be proven beyond a reasonable 15                  doubt by the State of Washington as an element of Count II,
16                  unlawful possession of a firearm in the second degree."

17                  MR. MAHONEY: That doesn't say you're entering 18                  into it. Just us.

19                  THE COURT: That's right, and I'm not.

20                  MR. MAHONEY: Okay. I thought I missed that and 21                  maybe it had wording saying "the Court."

22                  THE COURT: There's a signature space here for 23                  the Court, and I'm not part of this.

24                  MR. MAHONEY: That's right. Since that goes back
25                  to the jury; is that right?

1 THE COURT: No, it will not.

2 MR. MAHONEY: All right. That's fine.

3 THE COURT: It just is filed in the court file.

4 MR. MAHONEY: Good enough. See you all tomorrow.

5 MR. HAMMOND: Thank you, Your Honor.

6 There was one other issue.

7 THE COURT: Did you want to add something to the 8 record, you said, Mr. Hammond?

9 MR. HAMMOND: I did, but I can't remember what it
10 is now. It will come to me as soon as I get in the 11 elevator, and I will do it first thing tomorrow morning.

12 THE COURT: You said --

13 MR. HAMMOND: Some time had already passed
14 between -- it was the last issue we addressed before
15 Mr. Mahoney argued to start tomorrow based on the due 16 process argument.

17 THE COURT: Fairness is what you talked about and 18 that's what I bought. But, just before that we were 19 talking about negligence and recklessness for first and 20 second manslaughter.

21 MR. HAMMOND: Right. Yes, you brought me right
22 back to it, actually. Between the two he made a mention of 23 concern, he wanted direction from the Court on whether he 24 could make certain arguments. Obviously, he can argue 25 inferences from facts that are in evidence. I know he

1           probably wouldn't do this, but I better say it just to set
2           the ground for any objection I might have to make. To get 3           up there and make reference to facts that are not in 4           evidence would be different. I think he knows the 5           distinction between that, and he is cautious in his 6           wording, but I want to make clear if I heard anything
7           resembling that, I'm going to object.

8                         THE COURT: All right.

9                         MR. MAHONEY: Same here.

10                        THE COURT: All right. 9:30 tomorrow.

APPENDIX “D”

INSTRUCTION NO. 23

You will also be furnished with additional special verdict forms relating to aggravating factors that have been alleged by the State on Count I. If you find the defendant not guilty on Count I, do not use these special verdict forms. If you find the defendant guilty on Count I of the crime of Murder in the First Degree or Murder in the Second Degree, you will then use these additional special verdict forms and fill in the blank with the answer "yes" or "no" according to the decision you reach. In order to answer the special verdict form "yes" you must unanimously be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that "yes" is the correct answer. If you have a reasonable doubt as to the question, you must answer "no."

The State has alleged that the following aggravating factors exist in this case: (1) That the current offense involved domestic violence and the defendant's conduct manifested deliberate cruelty toward the victim; and (2) That the current offense involved domestic violence and the defendant's conduct manifested intimidation of the victim. You are not to consider the allegations that these aggravating factors exist as proof that they exist.

You should deliberate on each question presented on the special verdict forms. In order to answer any question, you must unanimously agree on the answer. You should consider each question separately. Your answer to one special verdict should not control your answer to the other verdict.

INSTRUCTION NO. 25

For purposes of a special verdict, the State must prove beyond a reasonable doubt the existence of an aggravating factor. An aggravating factor alleged in this case is that the offense involved domestic violence, and the defendant's conduct during the commission of the offense manifested intimidation of the victim.

A crime involves "domestic violence" when it is committed by one family or household member against another. "Family or household members" includes adults who have or have had a dating relationship.

"Intimidation" means unlawful coercion; extortion; duress; putting in fear.

APPENDIX “E”

1 neglected the family or his friends. Thank you.

2 MR. MAHONEY: I might ask if any of
3 his fellow workers or other friends wish to step
4 forward and speak on his behalf? I would ask that 5 Mr. Price make whatever statement.

6 THE COURT: Mr. Price?

7 MR. PRICE: First getting on to God
8 who is ahead of my life, Judge, State,
9 Mr. Mahoney, to the Carter family and the Wright
10 family, to my family, my friends and relatives and 11 loved ones, as I stand here today, I come to you
12 with a touch of reality that comes straight from 13 my grieving heart, not to lecture, but to share
14 words of hope and encouragement. My first
15 response is to first express my love to the Carter
16 family and the Wright family, not only to show but 17 to tell them I am extremely remorseful as the 18 incident that have occurred, for this situation.
19 These are painful times for a person, but the 20 promise of healing enable us to look past the 21 pain, to disclose, to comfort, for passion in our
22 spiritual lives through times of pain and trial
23 and may a good life through times of pain and 24 trial ultimately result if we will allow God to 25 use us. Then, for that purpose, pain and

1 suffering never despair us, but they are valuable
2 lesson for ones who endures them. Most of all
3 living by faith means that trusting that you will 4 have mercy on me and please forgive me for the 5 incident that have occurred and to show that faith
6 that is trusting in God for salvation, we don't
7 fear judgment, for Jesus, our Savior, has prepared
8 a place for us in heaven. Martin Luther King said
9 that the only saving faith is that which clothe
10 itself, God for life or death. Can we have that 11 faith? We seek to live as God, people in our 12 society, that does not recognize God at all. God
13 often use our Christian friends who are wise
14 enough to help us to deal with reality. A 15 Christian hope is not wishful thinking, but where 16 there is confident expectation of ones
17 faithfulness meaning it overcome any challenge to 18 our relationship with the Lord. We have the 19 remaining faith faithful in spite of oppressions
20 in our faith to overcome. Thus, the overcome is a 21 person who does not melt away when fate is under 22 fire. By giving people labels with negative
23 overturn, we can dismiss their observation
24 unfairly and injustice and therefore irrelevant to 25 a discussion of a proper behavior and fairness for

1 all. Truth is the truth no matter how many or how 2 many holds to future hold to it, if any at all.
3 As we see bitterness, insults, any animosities
4 present in our media and norm, the destructive
5 ways of pain given us a badly distorted
6 presentation of life and of God, then we 7 experience his comfort daily. As for my
8 conclusion is that no matter I will always love
9 the people to respect, regardless of race,
10 religion, color or disorderly or any creed to the 11 Carter family the rights to the relatives, the 12 friends, their loved ones. I don't know them by 13 nature but I love them anyway. I feel their pain
14 and their suffering. To my family and my friends,
15 we may be separated but by love remain the same,
16 but my love remain the same. To the Court, I show
17 respect that we will last through all of humanity
18 that will change my life but not my love because 19 it will always remain the same toward all mankind
20 and great joy and pain. By furthering my 21 education and spreading my love in the prison
22 system to better my life as a whole, I'll walk
23 with my faith with God. I would like to thank the 24 Court for giving me this opportunity to speak on 25 my behalf as to show not only in my heart but within my soul the remorse that I feel that would never leave my soul. True enough, there wasn't nobody there and the situation will always remain in my heart as a hurt and pain. As for my family as to show love to each one of them as they chose love and spirit. I pray that we all remain the same. I thank the Court for giving me this opportunity and I ask that you have mercy and leniency on me. Oh, Lord, my God, help that I may spread love throughout all eternity, regardless of where I am, that God may continue to bless me in faith and in wisdom. Thank you.

MR. MAHONEY: May it Please the Court, I believe that the argument that Counsel made was essentially an argument that his actions reflected murder in the first degree and the jury, of course, found that. I, at the time, argued murder in the second degree. I still believe that. The jury did not believe it. In essence, the argument that counsel made this morning is that he was guilty of murder in the first degree and he now is. That in and of itself does not set him apart from other persons convicted of first degree murder. The difference that we're looking at is should we look at this sentencing as an

1 opportunity to inflict revenge or to punish in a
2 manner similar to the way other persons are 3 punished. Of course the family, and I'm certainly 4 not surprised that the family say that he should 5 be locked away and the key should be thrown away,
6 I don't attempt to put words in their mouth, but 7 it wouldn't surprise me if they would exhibit the 8 same sort of attitude as persons in the past would 9 have argued for in position of death. The real
10 thing that we're looking at here is is there a 11 difference, and you've been exposed to all of the 12 facts throughout the trial, and my argument is 13 merely that this man should be in a position after 14 he has been punished and he should be punished
15 where it will be a severe punishment, and that 16 certainly given his age of 44, whatever punishment
17 you impose he will be an old man when he exits
18 prison. The idea that there should be no sense of 19 forgiveness and that he should be locked away for 20 life is one that if it really was imposed should 21 be imposed by a jury in an aggravated murder case.
22 In essence, each of the persons coming here have 23 said that he should be in prison for the remainder 24 of his life. The law did not contemplate that for 25 this level of act, and I would say that he should

1 have an opportunity to be released in his senior
2 years to where he can help in the past as those 3 persons who have spoken have indicated he has 4 helped. He has worked as a minister and may in 5 the future should he be released at some point. I
6 would ask that the Court not impose the high end
7 of the range, not find those factors which, in 8 essence, would give him a life sentence.

9 THE COURT: First I want to address
10 the standard range and the criminal history. I'm 11 satisfied that the standard range as indicated by 12 the State including the 60 months enhancement for 13 the firearm is 341 to 434 months and I'm satisfied
14 based upon the exhibits in the record and also the 15 evidence at the time of trial based upon the 16 testimony, including the Defendant. Now,
17 Mr. Price, based upon the verdict of the jury in 18 Count I, guilty of murder in the first degree,
19 Count II, guilty of unlawful possession of a 20 firearm in the second degree, and the special 21 verdicts that you were armed with a firearm at the 22 time of the commission of the crime and a special 23 verdict of manifest intimidation, it's the 24 judgment of the Court that you are guilty as the 25 jury found. I'm going to sentence you to the high

1 end of the standard range of 434 months which
2 includes 60 months for the firearm enhancement,
3 plus it seems to me that if an enhancement of 60
4 months is applicable for having a firearm it sure
5 should be applicable for the manifested
6 intimidation that was exhibited in this case by 7 you and so the total months will be 494 months.
8 This was an incident that sticks out in my mind
9 that was an execution over control of another
10 human being, lost that control and you executed
11 her. The police were outside the home. You knew 12 they were there, and instead of coming out you
13 slammed the door and went back in and moments
14 later you executed this woman. Remorse you've 15 spoken to. I question the genuiness. That's not 16 part of this exceptional sentence, but it's 17 something that I feel compelled to state. Olga
18 Carter was begging to get away. She even wrote a 19 note, a dying note, to her daughter. She knew 20 death was imminent. That's the ultimate in 21 intimidation, it seems to me. If I felt that it
22 would hold up under the law and I feel that it
23 would not because the jury itself said it wasn't
24 deliberate cruelty, I would impose the 600 months
25 that the State is requesting, but I think I'm well

1 within the range that is contemplated and imposing
2 this exceptional sentence under these
3 circumstances. The other standard conditions
4 including the financial conditions will be made
5 applicable to this judgment and sentence.

6 MR. HAMMOND: Your Honor, the 7 standard range on Count II is 12 to 16 months.

8 THE COURT: 16 months to run
9 concurrently.

10 MR. MAHONEY: I might say, Your
11 Honor, I was so focused on the first count that I
12 certainly was incorrect when stating there would 13 be an offender score of zero. Obviously, the 14 other current offense would add 1 point.

15 THE COURT: I'm satisfied from the 16 record and the representations made by the State
17 that the standard range that I have indicated is 18 lawful.

19 MR. HAMMOND: Your Honor, I'd ask
20 that there be no contact by the Defendant with any 21 members of the victim's family.

22 THE COURT: That will be the order
23 of the Court.

24 MR. HAMMOND: We need a date for 25 our restitution hearing and also presentation of
