MR. McNEIL and MR. RICE WERE PRESENT.

1 THE COURT: Did you understand it?

2 MR. RICE: Yes.

3 THE COURT: Do you understand that by signing this,
4 and if I accept it, it means that your trial date will not
5 be as scheduled? Now, these were set to be tried by the 6 10th of April, 10th or 12th of April. That that's going 7 to be gone and the trial date will probably be -- 8 depending upon when the U.S. Supreme Court files its 9 opinion, it could be -- I guess it could be clear into 10 1990 if they have it reheard and go clear into another 11 session and don't file their opinion until sometime in the 12 fall. But it appears that probably it will be filed 13 sometime in June -- if it's filed in June sometime, 120
14 days thereafter. You are saying that you are agreeing you 15 can have your trial within 120 days thereafter.

16 Is that your understanding?

17 MR. RICE: Yeah. In between September the 1st and 18 15th, Your Honor.

19 THE COURT: Well, that's not what this -- that's not 20 what this waiver now says. You haven't signed another one 21 so I am asking you about the one you now have. The one 22 you now have says - I will explain it to you - that you
23 will agree that your attorney can file pretrial motions - 24 Well, I have already ordered how those are going to be 25 decided; and we will call these capital motions - within

1 30 days of the date on which the opinion of the U.S.
2 Supreme Court is filed. The prosecutor would have 15 days
3 thereafter. Then there would be a hearing on pretrial
4 motions within 60 days. And it says, "shall begin on the 5 60th day." But I think I have discretion in that to set 6 it within those 60 days. And then your trial would then 7 begin 90 days -- It says, "...on the 90th day following 8 the pretrial motions," but they can be tried any time
9 before the 90th day.

10 What that means is: The U.S. Supreme Court decides 11 those cases; files its opinion; there is 30 days for the 12 filing of motions and then 90 days thereafter to try you.
13 That's 120 days.

14 So by this you are consenting to having your case 15 heard 120 days after the U.S. Supreme Court files its 16 opinions.

17 I said an awful lot there. Did you understand it?

18 MR. RICE: Yeah, somewhat.

19 THE COURT: Let me say it one more way. The U.S.
20 Supreme Court files its opinions.

21 MR. RICE: Yes, sir.

22 THE COURT: One hundred and twenty days thereafter
23 you have to be brought to trial.

24 MR. RICE: Yeah.

25 THE COURT: That's what this waiver says.

1 Do you understand it that way?

2 MR. RICE: Yes, I understand. That's -- Yeah.

3 THE COURT: And you agree that that can be done; is 4 that right?

5 MR. RICE: Yes, sir.

6 THE COURT: Did anybody force to you do this?

7 MR. RICE: No, nobody.

8 THE COURT: Did anybody threaten you to get you to 9 sign this?

10 MR. RICE: No, sir.

11 THE COURT: Do you think that I in any way as the 12 judge have made some kind of an order that makes you think 13 that you have to sign this?

14 MR. RICE: No, sir, I don't.

15 THE COURT: You can be seated.

16 I would also come back to Mr. McNeil and ask him a 17 question. Mr. McNeil, do you understand by signing your 18 waiver in this case that you are agreeing that your case 19 can be brought to trial 120 days after the U.S. Supreme 20 Court opinions are filed in these cases?

21 MR. McNEIL: I understand it completely.

22 THE COURT: Not these cases, but the cases before 23 them. Do you understand that?

24 MR. McNEIL: Yes.

25 THE COURT: Do you think that I have made any kind of

1 a ruling or any court has made any kind of ruling that's 2 forcing you to sign this waiver?

3 MR. McNEIL: None.

4 THE COURT: Because I want to dispel that. I am more
5 than willing to have these cases tried in April. No
6 problem with that. And we will just do it if you want to 7 do so. Do you understand that?

8 MR. McNEIL: Yes.

9 THE COURT: Do you still wish to have your signature
10 on this waiver of trial time limits?

11 MR. McNEIL: Yes, I do.

12 THE COURT: Did you do so voluntarily?

13 MR. McNEIL: Yes.

14 THE COURT: Okay. You can be seated.

15 I don't think that signing the waiver until 16 September 1 is necessary. We have got these waivers, so I 17 will just decide which case is going to be tried first and 18 we will move it up in the 120-day period.

1 THE COURT: All right. My order will be at this time
2 that State v. McNeil will be tried first, State v. Rice
3 will be tried second.

4 State v. McNeil will be set for motions, capital
5 motions or any other motions that are still pending, 6 within 15 days of the date that the decision is filed by 7 the U.S. Supreme Court in those other cases. The state
8 will have 10 days thereafter to respond to the motions;
9 and they will be heard within five days after the state
10 responds. That's a total of 30 days.

11 The trial, State v. McNeil, will be held starting on 12 the 60th day after the filing of the U.S. Supreme Court 13 opinions. That will give 30 days between the time the 14 motions have been heard and the time that we will start 15 the trial.

16 State v. Rice will start within the 120 days, and I 17 guess I will just say on the 120th day following the 18 filing of the opinions by the U.S. Supreme Court. It will 19 still be subject to the same motion times as State vs.
20 McNeil; and the motions will all be heard together just as 21 we have been doing. That's the 15 days, the 10 days and 22 the five days. That will give a period of time of about 23 90 days between the time of the hearing of the motions in 24 State v. Rice and the time it goes to trial.

25 If there are no capital motions required -- Well, I

1 don't know what other motions we have other than capital
2 motions. I will just keep the same time limits no matter
3 what, whether there are capital motions or not. Same 4 limits. Those are within the time limits within the 5 waivers signed by both of these people. I think that's a 6 way to handle it.

7 So State v. McNeil will be tried first.

8 MR. TAIT: Does Your Honor still want the confession
9 hearing to --

10 THE COURT: Yes, I do. The same order I issued 11 before still stands on motions.

12 MR. TAIT: Fourteen days.

13 THE COURT: Fourteen days on each one of them; and 14 they will be heard.

15 Be sure, as I have indicated to you previously, to 16 provide me with copies, as you have been doing, of all 17 motions and documents which are filed so that I can have 18 those read well in advance and be fully prepared to hear 19 the motions.

20 Anything further?

21 Mr. Rice's waiver has already been filed with the 22 clerk also?

23 MR. HOFFMAN: It has, Judge.

24 THE COURT: Okay. Anything further to do in these 25 two cases?

AFTERNOON SESSION

(September 8, 1988)

THE COURT: Good afternoon, counsel.

There is really basically one issue before me in the arguments that have been made whether or not the Eighth Amendment of the United States Constitution and article 1, section 14 of the Washington State Constitution prohibit execution of anyone under the age of 18 as cruel punishment under the state constitution, or cruel and unusual punishment under the federal constitution.

In arriving at a decision of whether or not a person, and I guess it would be someone who is 16 or 17, and in particular in these cases someone who is 17, is subject to capital punishment under the federal and state constitutions, or maybe not under the federal and under the state, I think it is extremely helpful to have reviewed the cases cited from the state of Washington as well as the Thompson case. I cannot, as the prosecution asks, consider that Thompson decided a very limited issue dealing with Mr. Thompson only and anyone who is 15 years of age, or on those particular circumstances, because there are guidelines within the case which I believe are important to the decision in this case.

1 Equally important is the Washington State
2 Constitution. In the last few years, as pointed out by
3 Mr. Frost, the Supreme Court of the state of Washington
4 has looked to our constitution to decide constitutional
5 issues, recognizing, of course, that the state
6 constitution cannot decrease the rights that individuals
7 have under the federal constitution. The federal
8 constitution affords certain minimum rights, certain
9 rights and standards which we are all compelled to follow.
10 The Washington State Constitution in some instances grants
11 even greater rights to individuals than does the federal
12 constitution as evidenced by search and seizure cases
13 already decided; and although one of those has to some
14 extent been overruled, the state Supreme Court,
15 nevertheless, applies a stricter rule with regard to 16 searches and seizures pursuant to the state constitution
17 than under the federal constitution. And, in fact, when
18 the United States Supreme Court told the Washington State
19 Supreme Court it had decided a case incorrectly under the 20 federal constitution and that a person's rights had not 21 been violated, our Supreme Court said, "Well, we will
22 decide the case strictly upon the Washington State
23 Constitution, and our constitution grants greater
24 individual rights under the circumstances than does the 25 federal constitution. We won't even decide this under the

1 federal constitution, we will decide it under our own
2 constitution."

3 It is becoming increasingly important in this state
4 to review the Washington State Constitution. As pointed
5 out by counsel, the Washington State Constitution under
6 article 1, section 14, reads, "Excessive bail shall not be
7 required, excessive fines imposed, nor cruel punishment
8 inflicted." Really the only difference between the Eighth
9 Amendment to the federal constitution and the state
10 constitution is that Washington prohibits cruel
11 punishment; in other words, cruel punishment cannot be
12 inflicted, and does not refer to cruel and inhuman
13 punishment. Inhuman is not included in the Washington
14 statute.

15 I attempted to locate a case which might help me in 16 deciding whether or not the state constitution is to be
17 interpreted differently than the federal constitution.
18 About the only indication I could find is a statement
19 contained in the Rupe case, which has been cited by 20 counsel, and State v. Forrester, at 21 Wn.App. 855.

21 Under State v. Forrester, the test which is to be
22 utilized is:

23 "...whether, in view of contemporary standards of 24 elemental decency, punishment is of such 25 disproportionate character to the offense as to shock the general conscience and violate principles
of fundamental fairness."

1 Under Rupe, 108 Wn.2d 734, the court essentially
2 affirmed that position (Rupe was decided in 1987)
3 although a statement is contained therein that the state
4 constitution requires even greater safeguards under the
5 circumstances of that case.

6 At Page 777, the court in Rupe states:

7 "Under the federal constitution, the death penalty
8 may not be imposed arbitrarily and capriciously, and 9 the jury must adhere to the substantive factors
state law lays before it."

10 Then it says our state constitution may require even 11 greater safeguards, relying upon State v. Bartholomew, the 12 second case referred to as Bartholomew II. Quoting from
13 Bartholomew II:

14 "Where the trial which results in imposition of the 15 death penalty lacks fundamental fairness, the 16 punishment violates article 1, section 14 of the state constitution."

17 None of these cases were in the context of juveniles,
18 or people under the age of 18, and let's say for purposes
19 of this decision over the age of 15.

20 To digress just a little, when an argument is made as 21 to one day over 15, or one day over 16, or within one day
22 of 16, to me that means nothing because the Supreme Court
23 has said at age 15 and below, you shall not impose the 24 death penalty. To me that means if 15 years, 364 days, 25 23 hours, 59 minutes and 59 seconds old, a person is still

1 15 and you shall not impose it. It is a guideline the
2 Supreme Court of the United States has adopted. It does
3 not make any difference age-wise, according to them.

4 There is some guidance, however, with regard to
5 article 1, section 14. If there is a violation of 6 fundamental fairness, or if contemporary standards of
7 elemental decency have been violated by imposing the death
8 penalty, then I believe our state Supreme Court would 9 hold, under those circumstances, a violation of article 1,
10 section 14.

11 That really does not say a whole lot more than is 12 said in Thompson because Thompson -- and I better refer to 13 the case and get the proper language. Thompson recognizes
14 as a very important element to be considered the "evolving
15 standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing
16 society." I do not believe that is anything other than 17 saying what does society expect under the circumstances?
18 What is decent? If you go beyond the bounds of decency,
19 then that would be cruel punishment.

20 Keeping that in mind, we should all recognize the 21 Eighth Amendment and article 1, section 14 really contain
22 categorical prohibitions against cruel and inhuman
23 punishment and cruel punishment. I would also quote to 24 counsel from page 4894 of 56 Law Week from the opinion of 25 Justice Stevens. It says:

1 "The authors of the Eighth Amendment drafted a
2 categorical prohibition against the infliction of
3 cruel and unusual punishments, but they made
4 no attempt to define the contours of that category.
5 They delegated that task to future generations of
6 judges who have been guided by the 'evolving
7 standards of decency that mark the progress of a
8 maturing society'."

9 Which sounds quite similar to the statement contained in 10 Forrester and what I believe our state Supreme Court would 11 rely upon.

12 The quotation also leads me to believe there is a
13 difference between Justice O'Connor's opinion and that of 14 the plurality insofar as related to the legislature. As 15 Justice O'Connor says: "Let the legislature do it. Send 16 it to the legislature and let them decide what the age
17 limit will be."

18 Now, Mr. Tait and Mr. Bothwell have pointed out, in 19 response to the argument of Mr. Hansen and Mr. Sullivan, 20 that there are several places where the legislature
21 mentioned in the opinion of the plurality and in the 22 footnotes, and what have you; but I think there is a
23 distinction. The plurality believes the definition of the 24 contours of the category, as referred to by Justice
25 Stevens, are to be provided by judges and not the 26 legislature. They are to be provided by judges, however,
27 relying upon what the legislature has done in certain
28 circumstances; therefore obtaining certain guidelines from

1 the legislature, guidelines from what juries have done,
2 guidelines from standards of decency within the community.

4 In deciding these cases, I believe I must look first
5 to the state of Washington. I am a state judge. Our 6 state Supreme Court will undoubtedly be involved in
7 determining this issue, whether in these cases or another,
8 at least sometime in the near future. I look to our 9 constitution first, keeping in mind the federal
10 constitution provides minimum standards, and I must adhere 11 to the decision in Thompson insofar as it sets out those 12 minimum standards; but I feel compelled to look to the 13 state to see what has been accomplished in the state and
14 what guidelines we have in the state of Washington.

15 One of the critical issues in these cases, at least
16 counsel believe, is with regard to the proceedings that 17 took place prior to these two men being transferred into 18 Superior Court as adults. They were, of course, in 19 Superior Court in the juvenile process through a 20 declination proceeding. That would be a decline of 21 jurisdiction in the juvenile court and being transferred
22 to adult court to be tried as adults.

23 There is, I believe, a very substantial difference
24 between the Oklahoma statutory scheme and the Washington 25 statutory scheme. In Washington -- Let me get the statute. In Washington, under RCW Chapter 13.40, if a

1 person is 16 or 17 and there is an allegation of a Class A
2 felony, which we have here, or attempt to commit a Class A
3 felony, a decline hearing is mandatory unless it is waived
4 by the court, the parties and the parties' counsel. In
5 other words, there must be a decline hearing in the 6 state of Washington unless everybody agrees there will not
7 be and all waive the hearing.

8 Thompson demonstrates the Oklahoma statutory scheme
9 is different. The difference is extremely important and
10 is demonstrated at page 4905 as follows:

11 "Under Oklahoma law, anyone who commits a crime when 12 he is under the age of eighteen is defined to be a 13 child, unless he is sixteen or seventeen and has committed murder or certain other specified crimes..."

15 Now that is much the same as Washington; but then it
16 continues:

17 "...in which case he is automatically certified to 18 stand trial as an adult."

19 So in Oklahoma if you are charged with the crime of 20 murder and you are 16 or 17, you are automatically an 21 adult. You are tried as an adult. In the state of 22 Washington if you are 16 or 17, you are automatically
23 entitled to a hearing where it will be determined whether 24 or not you should be tried as an adult. Part of that 25 process is set out in case law, both state and federal, as

1 well as RCW 13.40.110.

2 Under RCW 13.40.110, the court may order a case
3 transferred after a decline hearing for adult criminal
4 prosecution. There must be a finding the declination
5 would be in the best interests of the juvenile or the
6 public; and the court is required to consider relevant
7 reports, facts, opinions, and arguments presented by the
8 parties and their counsel.

9 Now that seems to sound like almost any other hearing
10 except when you consider what must be considered by the 11 court pursuant to Kent v. United States, which was decided 12 in 1966, and has been elaborated upon by our courts in 13 these hearings. If anyone here looks at the record of the 14 decline hearing, you will know how extensive it was and 15 what all was gone into. They really are quite protective 16 of the rights of an individual with a presumption that 17 that individual can be as a juvenile rehabilitated and 18 treated within the juvenile system unless certain unique
19 circumstances are present.

20 What is taken into account in some of the factors are 21 as follows: The seriousness of the alleged offense and 22 whether protection of the community necessitates
23 prosecution under the adult system. Protection of the 24 community. Do community standards dictate there should be
25 a transfer to adult court? The degree of premeditation,

1 willfulness, violence and aggression involved in the
2 alleged offense. Well, for purposes of this hearing, to
3 me that is not as important as some of the other ones.
4 Whether the alleged offense was against persons or
5 property; greater weight being given to offenses against
6 persons especially if injury resulted. The prosecutive
7 merit of the complaint, the desirability of trial and
8 disposition of the entire offense in one court when
9 defendants or associates are adults. That does not apply
10 here. But the next one is sophistication and maturity of 11 the juvenile determined by consideration of his home,
12 environmental situation, emotional attitudes, and pattern
13 of living record and previous history as a juvenile and 14 prospects for adequate protection of the public, and 15 likelihood of reasonable rehabilitation of the juvenile 16 through services and facilities currently available to the 17 juvenile court.

18 A decision was made in these cases following an 19 extensive hearing and going into the background of these 20 individuals, particularly related to their sophistication
21 and maturity, and also as to consideration of their 22 emotional attitudes, their patterns of living, their 23 environmental situations. It went into the backgrounds of 24 these two individuals very extensively. Only after that 25 hearing was it determined these people would be

1 transferred to this court, the adult court. They were 2 both about 17, between 17 and 18 at the time of this
3 offense.

4 The court in Thompson did not decide whether 17-year
5 olds or 16-year olds can receive the death penalty, and
6 chose instead to accept certiorari in two separate cases
7 wherein they will decide that issue. I cannot guess as to
8 why the court did that. I think the court had before it
9 the perfect opportunity to make the decision: Do we
10 apply the death penalty to juveniles? The court chose not 11 to. One of the critical reasons, at least I consider that 12 they did not do so, is because it was just about
13 universally agreed, or at least the conclusion was that it
14 was almost universally agreed, anyone who is the age of 15
15 should not receive the death penalty because it is:

16 "...generally abhorrent to the conscience of the 17 community."

18 They were looking at the various legislative
19 enactments, what ages were set for purposes of applying
20 the death penalty, and it seemed to them almost universal
21 throughout the states if you are 15 years of age, you are 22 not going to be executed because you do not have the 23 degree of maturity and sophistication an adult would have.
24 However, it is clear from the opinion they did not decide
25 the issue as to 16- and 17-year olds, and expressly chose

1 not to do so even after being asked to do so.

2 At page 4896 of the opinion the court says:

3 "When we confine our attention to the 18 States that
4 have expressly established a minimum age in their
5 death-penalty statutes, we find that all of them
6 require that the defendant have attained at least the 7 age of 16 at the time of the capital offense."

8 To me it was important to them that someone is at least
9 age 16.

10 An argument has been made that the legislature must 11 set the age and then let the courts act upon that age.
12 But what has happened, in the quote I gave initially at 13 the start of my opinion, is our Supreme Court has said it
14 is up to the judges to make that determination and the 15 U.S. Supreme Court has made the determination for 15-year
16 olds and has decided, no, but did not make the decision as 17 to 16- and 17-year olds. It is up to the courts to render 18 that decision.

19 I do not feel the Thompson opinion is authority for 20 the proposition or can be argued - well, it can be 21 argued - but it is not authority for the proposition that
22 16- and 17-year olds should not receive the death penalty
23 for their actions because it would be cruel and inhuman
24 punishment or cruel punishment. I cannot accept that 25 argument. I realize juveniles, people under the age of 18, are essentially presumed not to have the same

1 culpability as people who are older. I recognize that
2 because the Court recognizes it; however, I believe in
3 looking to Washington, and I am looking to the state of
4 Washington, at what the citizens of this state have
5 determined and what the legislature has determined, that
6 this state feels if, following a proper hearing, a
7 declination hearing, a juvenile has the right
8 sophistication and maturity, they can have such 9 culpability that they can receive the ultimate penalty and 10 that is the death penalty.

11 The death penalty was reinstated due to a public
12 outcry in the state of Washington. To me that speaks very 13 loudly in the state of Washington. That does not seem to 14 be mentioned in the Thompson opinion whether any of these 15 other states had that happen where the death penalty was 16 thrown out, suddenly it is reactivated because the people
17 get upset, and then the legislature acts on it also.

18 Another thing that is important to point out is under
19 the juvenile act -- I thought I had a copy of that here.
20 But under the juvenile code one of the things the state
21 has determined - and I made a copy but I forgot to bring 22 it with me - is juveniles should be more answerable for 23 their offenses. There is to be greater protection for the 24 citizenry from criminal behavior. Juveniles are to be
25 more accountable for their criminal behavior. To me that

1 speaks loudly of what the citizens of this state say. The
2 citizens of this state, through the legislature and
3 through the process of citizen legislation have said, We
4 want the death penalty.

5 Now, the question becomes: Is it required there be a
6 specific age set out? Does Thompson say that? I do not
7 believe that is what Thompson says. I think the state of
8 Washington has clearly said, We have set out the 9 guidelines. If a person goes through the process from 10 juvenile to adult court and all of the background is 11 looked into and he or she is determined to have the
12 sophistication and maturity to stand trial as an adult,
13 more safeguards have been provided, and he or she is then
14 subject to all of the penalties imposed by the statute
15 which they have violated. The penalties in this case are 16 either life without release or parole, or death, depending 17 upon what a jury decides, if the jury decides guilt of 18 aggravated first degree murder. That, of course, is a
19 big hurdle.

20 To me, under these circumstances the public has said
21 if you commit the crime, you shall be punished
22 commensurate with the crime. And when the opinion in 23 Thompson says at 4897 - I read part of that to you
24 earlier - it says:

25 "The road we have traveled during the past four

1 decades - in which thousands of juries have tried
2 murder cases - leads to the unambiguous conclusion
3 that the imposition of the death penalty on a 15-year
4 old offender is now generally abhorrent to the
5 conscience of the community."

6 I can paraphrase and say in light of Forrester, and the 7 other tests as to whether or not the punishment fits the 8 crime, that probably it is now generally abhorrent to the 9 conscience of the community to have two people brutally
10 killed. Although no one has ever said anything about 11 victims in this case and whether or not the rights of 12 victims -- and I don't find anything like that in the 13 Thompson opinion. I think that has something to do with 14 the situation -- our legislature has said, Yes, we are 15 going to protect our citizens and this is the standard way
16 of adopting it. To me that is very important. This is 17 the standard way to adopt it.

18 Consequently, I believe, No. 1, according to
19 article 1, section 14 of the Washington State
20 Constitution, there is no prohibition against asking for 21 the death penalty in a situation involving 16- and 17-year
22 olds herein limited to 17-year olds because they were 17
23 at the time. No. 2, I do not believe the Eighth Amendment
24 of the United States Constitution, applicable to the 25 states through the Fourteenth Amendment, prohibits the death penalty in cases involving 16- and 17-year olds. I

1 look mainly to the state of Washington because I believe
2 Washington has a proper and acceptable procedure. I
3 believe it is distinguishable from the situation in the
4 Oklahoma case. I also look to the federal opinion and I
5 can draw no other conclusion then that when the state asks
6 for and gave notice of the death penalty in this case, it
7 is constitutional.

8 The motion to have the death penalty aspects of this
9 stricken is denied.

10 Now, I do not know if counsel have spoken at all
11 about guidelines as to time limits for pretrial motions or 12 anything, if you had an opportunity to do that.

13 MR. FROST: Yes, Your Honor, I believe we have.

14 First of all, could the Court order that we be 15 provided with a written copy of the Court's oral opinion
16 in this matter?

17 THE COURT: So ordered.

State v. McNeil

if they could use the telephone. She let them in. Mr. McNeil asked for a drink of water while Mr. Rice made a telephone call. As Mrs. Nickoloff finished her dinner in the kitchen, Mr. Rice began to stab Mr. Nickoloff in the living room. Mr. McNeil then grabbed Mrs. Nickoloff and stabbed her to death. They stole two television sets from the house, gave one to a friend for payment on a debt and sold the other for $50.

The juvenile court declined jurisdiction and the State gave notice it intended to seek the death penalty.¹ Shortly before trial, the State agreed to forego the death penalty in exchange for pleas of guilty by Mr. McNeil. The record is ambiguous as to whether the plea agreement included a sentencing recommendation from the State as to the imposition of two consecutive life terms. For the purposes of this appeal, we will assume it did not.

First, Mr. McNeil contends the record reveals no facts were developed during the sentencing hearing supporting the age, particular vulnerability or physical condition of the victims. The entry and acceptance of the plea and the sentencing were conducted at the same hearing. The facts were admitted orally and in writing, under oath, by Mr. McNeil at the hearing. Admitted facts may be the basis for an exceptional sentence. State v. Young, 51 Wn. App. 517, 521, 754 P.2d 147 (1988). Additionally, five exhibits were admitted, including the autopsy report, pictures, a video tape of the scene, a letter written by Mr. McNeil to a girlfriend shortly after the crimes were committed admitting the crimes, and a transcript of an interview with Mr. McNeil by police during their initial investigation. There is ample evidence in the report of proceedings and exhibits to support the factual findings made by the court. There was no error.

Second, Mr. McNeil argues the second consecutive life term without parole is excessive because one cannot serve more than one such term.

The minimum sentence for conviction of aggravated murder is life imprisonment without parole; the maximum sentence is death. RCW 9.94A.310. RCW 9.94A.400(1)(a) provides in part: "Consecutive sentences may only be imposed under the exceptional sentence provisions of RCW 9.94A.120 and . . . any other provision of RCW 9.94A.390." RCW 9.94A.390(2)(b) includes as an aggravating circumstance particular vulnerability due to advanced age, disability, or ill health. Thus, there is both a factual

No. 10289-1-III

and a legal basis for imposing consecutive life terms without parole.

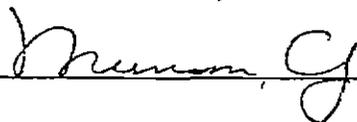

Whether the sentence is excessive is reviewed under an abuse of discretion standard. State v. Oxborrow, 106 Wn.2d 525, 530, 723 P.2d 1123 (1986). The statutory maximum, death, is the only limit to the court's discretion. Oxborrow, at 533; State v. Creekmore, 55 Wn. App. 852, 865-66, 783 P.2d 1068 (1989), review denied, 114 Wn.2d 1020 (1990). Consecutive, multiple life sentences without parole are less severe than death. The question whether two consecutive life sentences is excessive is academic; the sentence is ultimately limited by Mr. McNeil's life span.

Affirmed.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON

Roll No. 357 347

IN AND FOR YAKIMA COUNTY

BETTY MCGILLEN, YAKIMA COUNTY CLERK

STATE OF WASHINGTON,

Plaintiff,) vs.) RUSSELL DUANE McNEIL,) Defendant.)

NO. 88-1-00428-1
FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS CONCERNING
CrR 3.5 HEARING

THIS MATTER having come on regularly before the above-entitled court upon the motion of the plaintiff herein; the defendant appearing personally and being represented by his attorneys, Christopher Tait and Thomas Bothwell of Yakima, Washington, the court having considered the evidence presented at this CrR 3.5 hearing on July 24, 1989, through July 26, 1989, as well as the files and records herein, and having heard the arguments of counsel, and being fully advised in the premises; the court enters the following:

UNDISPUTED FINDINGS OF FACT

I.

On January 26, 1988, a break in the investigation of the Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff homicides occurred when Sammy Lopez provided Yakima Sheriff's Detectives with information connecting Russell McNeil and Herbert Rice, Jr. to the television sets taken from the Nickoloff home during the homicides.

II.

That information led Sheriff's detectives to the residence at 21 North "G" Street, Toppenish, Washington, where they were looking for the defendant, Russell Duane

3 McNeil. They arrived at that residence at 10:25 p.m. on 4 January 26, 1988. The officers identified themselves to the 5 defendant's brother and his brother's girlfriend and they 6 were granted permission to enter the home. The defendant
7 was there, he was not asleep, however, he had prepared for 8 bed and had just gone to bed.

9 The officers identified themselves to Russell Duane 10 McNeil by showing a badge and stating they were from the 11 Yakima Sheriff's Office. The officers asked the defendant 12 to come with them for questioning and he said "Sure." The 13 defendant was not advised of any rights at that time.

14 The defendant rode to the Toppenish Sheriff's 15 Department substation with Det. Rod Shaw arriving some time
16 before 11:00 o'clock p.m. on January 26, 1988. Det. Hafsos 17 was the last to arrive at the substation and he testified he 18 arrived there at 10:58 p.m.

19 Upon arrival, Det. Shaw read the defendant his Miranda 20 warnings off a Sheriff's Department issued card. A copy of 21 the card used is admitted into evidence as Exhibit "G" for 22 the purposes of this CrR 3.5 hearing.

23 The defendant was then read his rights again from a 24 Sheriff's Department issued sheet which is admitted at this 25 CrR 3.5 hearing as Exhibit "F". This was accomplished by 26 reading to the defendant from the sheet each separate right
27 one at a time. The defendant was then asked after each 28 right was read whether he understood the right, the 29 defendant said "Yes", and then was asked to initial it, and 30 the defendant did initial it on the sheet. This procedure

3 was used through all nine numbered rights, including Right
4 No. 9 with the asterisks which is applicable only to 5 juveniles. No tape recording was made of this advice of 6 rights. Thereafter, the detectives asked a few questions of 7 the defendant. His answers to those questions were, and 8 tended to be incriminating. Officers Hafsos and Shaw then 9 determined the Toppenish substation was not the proper 10 facility to take a complete statement and decided to go to 11 Yakima where they had better facilities. The defendant and 12 the Sheriff's Department officers were at the Toppenish 13 substation approximately ten minutes before leaving for 14 Yakima, Washington.

15 The defendant rode with Det. Shaw on the trip to 16 Yakima, Washington, driving up Highway 97. Conversation
17 between Det. Shaw and the defendant, in question and answer
18 form, resulted in the defendant further incriminating
19 himself in the Nickoloff homicide investigation. This lead 20 Officer Shaw to decide to go to the Nickoloff residence to 21 conduct more questioning. (The defendant testified he did 22 not remember the discussion with Det. Shaw in the car prior 23 to going to the Nickoloff residence. Therefore, the court 24 did not consider this matter truly disputed by the 25 defendant). No one exited Det. Shaw's vehicle at the 26 Nickoloff residence. The defendant indicated he had been 27 there at the time of the homicides and he showed Det. Shaw 28 where he had parked his vehicle. The defendant first 29 attempted to talk his way out of the situation while 30 discussing the case at the Nickoloff residence. He stated

3 to Det. Shaw that he had stayed in the car and worked on his 4 stereo while Mr. Rice went into the house.

5 Det. Shaw and the defendant then traveled to Yakima,
6 Washington, arriving shortly after midnight on January 27, 7 1988. The defendant was taken to the interview room of the 8 Yakima Sheriff Detective's Office and seated at a desk and 9 chair. The defendant was interviewed by Detectives Hafsos 10 and Shaw. The defendant was again verbally advised of his 11 Miranda warnings for the third time before questioning re-12 commenced at the Yakima Sheriff's Department in the 13 interview room. This unrecorded interview lasted for 14 approximately one hour.

15 The formal taped statement given by the defendant 16 started at 1:13 a.m. on January 27, 1988, and concluded at 17 2:30 a.m., one hour and 17 minutes later. The actual 18 recorded cassette tapes used for this statement were 19 admitted as Exhibits "C-1 and C-2" in this CrR 3.5 hearing.
20 Those tape recordings are in order and nothing has been 21 alleged to be missing, added, or altered concerning the tape 22 recorded statement. A proper chain of evidence has been 23 shown concerning the cassette tapes of the defendant's 24 statement. The transcripts of the taped statements have not 25 been fully finalized with some minor discrepancies in the 26 transcripts to be taken up at a later time.

27 At the time the above-described statements were taken 28 from the defendant by the Yakima Sheriff's Detectives, the 29 defendant was not under the influence of drugs and/or 30 alcohol. The officers did not mention that the possible

3 .punishments for the crimes being investigated included life
4 imprisonment without parole and the death penalty. There
5 was no definition of legal terms given to the defendant,
6 such as jurisdiction. There was no elaboration concerning 7 the defendant's rights other than the actual reading of his 8 Miranda warnings to him. He was asked if he understood each 9 of the rights, he stated that he did understand them and 10 acknowledged this by initialing each of the individual 11 rights on the sheet admitted as Exhibit "F" in this CrR 3.5
12 hearing.

13 The defendant was approximately seventeen years and 14 five months old on January 26 and 27, 1988, at the time of 15 this questioning. He had been living with his brother, Ed,
16 who is three years older than the defendant, on "G" Street 17 in Toppenish, Washington. He had been at this residence for 18 approximately two months. His brother Ed was living with a 19 woman named DeAnn Teacher and her two children. The 20 defendant was allowed to reside with his brother in return 21 for assisting with household duties and babysitting chores.
22 The defendant could come and go as he pleased. He had an 23 automobile which he had worked to pay for. Defendant had 24 been attending Pace Alternative School since coming to live 25 with his brother in Toppenish, Washington, and was in the 26 equivalent of the eleventh grade, which the defendant stated 27 was his proper grade level.

28 Prior to returning to the Yakima area in October, 1987,
29 the defendant, McNeil, had lived with his father in Sedro 30 Wooley, Washington, since April, 1987, except for

3 approximately three months during the summer when he worked 4 in a firewood business and lived on his own in a trailer on 5 the job site in the Everett/Marysville, Washington, area.
6 The defendant returned to live with his father when school
7 started and stayed with him and went to school until a 8 dispute with his father over his car caused him to move out 9 and return to Toppenish, Washington, to live with his 10 brother. Russell McNeil did not pay rent or other household
11 bills while at his brother's residence and was occasionally
12 given $10 to $20 spending money by his brother or DeAnn
13 Teacher. The defendant, McNeil, also worked as a ranch hand 14 during 1985 and 1986, and on certain occasions, he was 15 entrusted with the caretaking of the ranch facilities and 16 house for several days, up to a week at a time, although it 17 was a simple job according to the defendant.

18 Russell McNeil has had at least two previous contacts
19 with the criminal justice system as a juvenile on burglary 20 charges. He also has had two other contacts with the law on 21 traffic offenses which were not detailed during this CrR 3.5
22 hearing. Court documents concerning the two burglary
23 charges are contained in Exhibits "H" and "I" which were 24 admitted in this CrR 3.5 hearing. During those contacts
25 with the juvenile criminal justice system, the defendant 26 admits that he on at least one occasion was represented by 27 counsel and entered a plea of guilty to a charge of 28 burglary. The defendant was additionally advised of his 29 constitutional rights by arresting officers on at least one 30 of the two burglary arrests, and possibly in both cases. In

3 any case, it is undisputed that the defendant had previously
4 been represented by an attorney on juvenile second degree
5 burglary charges in which the defendant appeared in court, 6 was arraigned on the charges, had counsel appointed to 7 represent him, entered a plea of guilty and was sentenced on 8 the charge.

9 III.

10 The exhibits referred to herein are also incorporated 11 by reference into these undisputed facts.

12 DISPUTED FACTS

13 I.

14 Detectives Hafsos and Shaw both testified in the CrR
15 3.5 hearing that prior to asking the defendant McNeil any 16 questions at the Toppenish substation, they advised him they 17 were investigating the Nickoloff homicides, and that they 18 believed McNeil was possibly involved or connected to the 19 television sets taken from the Nickoloff residence. The 20 defendant, Russell Duane McNeil, testified he was not told 21 at the beginning of his interrogation at the substation that 22 this concerned the Nickoloff homicides. Instead, he 23 believed it was about some car prowls he had been involved 24 in previously.

25 II.

26 Detectives Hafsos and Shaw testified that after 27 starting the questioning at the Toppenish substation and 28 obtaining preliminary incriminating responses from the 29 defendant, they advised the defendant that they were going

3 to take him to Yakima to continue the statement where they 4 had better facilities.

5 The defendant testified that this did not happen.

6 III.

7 Detectives Hafsos and Shaw testified that the defendant
8 was very direct in his answers to their questioning and 9 answered without hesitation. He was alert, cooperative, and 10 did not appear confused. Detectives further testified the 11 defendant was extremely calm, very "matter of fact",
12 completely detached from the situation, fairly well-spoken,
13 and never asked any questions of the officers. Detective
14 Shaw further testified that the officer's tone of voice did 15 not change throughout the questioning and that he tried to 16 talk in the same tone of voice as the defendant McNeil did.

17 The defendant McNeil disputes, in some respects, all of 18 these characterizations of his behavior while being 19 questioned by the officers. The defendant also testified 20 that the attitude and tone of voice of the officers were 21 aggressive and ~~led~~ ^{led} him to believe that he had to answer 22 their questions and had to answer in a certain way. The 23 defendant McNeil stated that the voice of Detective Shaw
24 changed when he took the taped statement in that his voice 25 mellowed out. The defendant McNeil testified that he 26 believed that he was being picked on during the questioning, 27 and that he was scared, nervous and jumpy. The defendant 28 further testified that he was tired throughout the 29 questioning and wanted to go home and go to sleep.

IV.

The defendant McNeil testified that he requested to make a phone call to his Mom at the Toppenish substation and later again at the Detective's Office of the Sheriff's Department in Yakima, Washington. The defendant testified that the officers told him that they were the only ones who could help him when he asked to use the telephone. The defendant also testified that he requested a cigarette which the officers gave him prior to questioning at the Detective's Office of the Sheriff's Department in Yakima. The defendant also stated that in answer to his request to make a phone call the officers also stated that he could not have a phone call until he was under arrest.

Detectives Hafsos and Shaw testified that no request was made for a phone call or a cigarette and no comment was made to the defendant about being able to phone only after being arrested, or that they were the only individuals who could help him. The detectives further testified that the defendant was not given any cigarettes.

V.

The defense suggested through cross-examination of Detective Shaw that at the time of the questioning of the defendant McNeil, the officers were tired, maybe not as sharp as they should be, that they were looking for a lead and once they had found this one, proceeded a little over-exuberantly, and possibly made some mistakes.

Detective Shaw testified he was not tired or exhausted. He did testify that later on at the end of the questioning

3 that he was tired, but not exhausted, and that it did not
4 affect the manner in which he proceeded.

5 VI.

6 The State's evidence as contained in Exhibits "H" and 7 "I" indicated that the defendant was represented by an 8 attorney in both of his burglary cases, one at the age of 9 thirteen, and the other at the age of sixteen. The 10 defendant disputed whether he was ever represented by Sharon
11 Carberry who was the attorney of record in the earlier
12 burglary, including at the time the defendant entered a plea 13 of guilty to the charge and was sentenced.

14 VII.

15 The defendant McNeil testified he did not understand 16 his rights in their entirety and that the only reason he 17 answered the officers' questions was he had decided to go 18 along with them. He also thought that he could get an 19 attorney later who could help him out of this situation.
20 The defendant further stated he thought he should go ahead
21 and cooperate and that he felt relieved to be able to talk 22 about this with someone.

23 The detectives testified that the defendant stated he 24 understood each of his rights on numerous occasions, 25 appeared to understand those rights, was cooperative, and 26 agreed to talk to the officers without qualification.

27 CONCLUSIONS AS TO DISPUTED FACTS.

28 I.

29 The court resolves all disputed facts in favor of the 30 State.

3 II.

4 The court must decide on the credibility of witnesses
5 testifying concerning the disputed facts. The court
6 listened to the testimony of the officers and the defendant
7 and observed their demeanor throughout, and also listened to 8 both the officers and the defendant talking in the taped
9 statement taken from the defendant and played at this CrR
10 13.5 hearing. The court concludes the officers who testified 11 concerning disputed facts are more credible than the 12 defendant's evidence on these disputed issues.

13 CONCLUSIONS AS TO ADMISSIBILITY

14 I.

15 From the time the defendant McNeil was contacted at his 16 residence on "G" Street in Wapato, Washington, and the 17 Sheriff's detectives requested that he come with the 18 officers, the defendant was not free to leave and was in 19 custody for purposes of his interrogation on January 26 and 20 27, 1988.

21 II.

22 The advice of rights given to the defendant on four 23 occasions throughout this questioning was extensive and 24 detailed. The officers followed all rules of interrogation 25 they were required to follow. The defendant was read his 26 rights on more than one occasion, they were clearly 27 presented, and he was asked if he understood, and he said
28 that he did understand, and agreed to waive his rights and 29 talk to the officers.

3 The issue of declining jurisdiction of a juvenile was 4 clearly presented to the defendant including the advice
5 provided in Exhibits "F" and "G" that were admitted in the 6 CrR 3.5 hearing. The defendant acknowledged that it was 7 read to him and that he stated he understood. The court
8 concludes he understood his rights, including the specific 9 warnings that "the juvenile court could decline jurisdiction 10 in his case, and it could be heard in adult court", and 11 "what he says could be used against him in adult court if 12 the juvenile court decides that you are to be tried as an 13 adult."

14 There were no promises made or improper influence
15 exerted by the officers to get the defendant to answer
16 questions. The court concludes after observing the officers
17 and the defendant testify about the questioning on January 18 26 and 27, 1988 in this hearing, and after listening to the 19 tape recorded statement of January 27, 1988, that there was 20 no undue pressure put on the defendant, or any pressure at 21 all while giving his statement. The defendant's voice
22 inflections and the content of his statements do not 23 indicate he was scared, was being forced to answer questions 24 or was so sleepy or tired that he didn't understand. The 25 defendant was not confused and his answers to questions made 26 sense and were not dis-jointed. The defendant also 27 demonstrated that on some occasions he exercised his own
28 will by indicating he did not want to answer some questions 29 or just plain didn't answer.

3 manner of answering questions and how he formed sentences in 4 his conversations with police officers and determined that 5 his grammar is quite good. There has been nothing presented 6 by either side to indicate that the defendant had an 7 impaired capacity to understand the warnings given to him,
8 his capacity to understand the nature of his Fifth Amendment
9 rights, and the consequences of waiving those rights.

10 The court concludes the defendant's statements provided
11 on January 27 and 28, 1988, to Yakima Sheriff's detectives
12 concerning the Nickoloff homicides were given knowingly, 13 voluntarily, after an intelligent waiver of his 14 constitutional rights and are therefore admissible in the 15 trial of this case.

12 An exceptional sentence above the standard range should 13 be imposed based upon the following Findings of Fact and 14 Conclusions of Law:

15 FINDINGS OF FACT

16 I.

17 The victim, Dorothy Nickoloff, was 74 years of age, and 18 the victim, Mike Nickoloff, was 82 years of age at the time
19 of their murders. Mr. Nickoloff required the aid of a 20 walker or wheelchair to get around. Mrs. Nickoloff was 21 small and frail in stature. They lived alone in their 22 rural home in the Parker area of Yakima County, Washington.
23 The Nickoloffs were chosen as a target in this case because 24 the co-defendants knew they would be an easy mark.

25 CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

26 I.

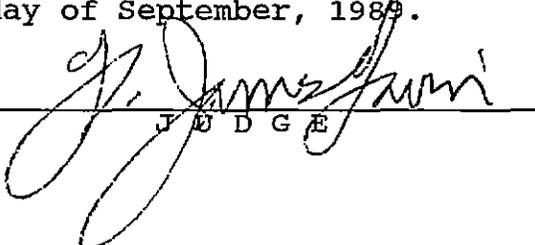

27 Based upon the above stated Findings of Fact, the court
28 concludes that the defendant knew that the victims in this

11 I have been fully informed and fully understand that the Court
12 must impose a sentence within the standard sentence range

15 either I or the State can appeal that sentence. If the sentence is 16 within the standard sentence range, no one can appeal the 17 sentence.

19 what I did that resulted in my being charged with the crimes in 20 the Information, dated March 15, 1988.

21 This is my statement.

22 That on or about January 7, 1988, I was driving my car
23 around the area outside Wapato, Washington with Chief Rice.
24 Chief mentioned that he knew where we could get some money.
25 He said it would be easy. He said they were old people, and that 26 the man couldn't walk very well. He said we could just go in,
27 surprise them, stab them, and take their money. He directed me
28 to the victims' house on Kays Road. I had never been there before, 29 and I did not know the people who lived there. I was armed with 30 a knife, and so was Chief. In the car, he showed me his knife, and 31 asked me if I had mine. I showed it to him. I knew that the knives Chief and I had would be used to stab the old people who lived there. Chief and I discussed how we would do this, and we agreed that we would get inside the house by asking to use the telephone. After making the phone call, we would stab the old people and take their money, or whatever we could find to sell. I parked my car in the driveway near a concrete planter, and we went first to the front door, and then to the back door. Mrs. Nickoloff asked us in when Chief told her that we needed to use the phone. Chief made a phone call, and I asked for a drink of water. Mrs. Nickoloff was finishing her supper after Mr. Nickoloff had gone into the living room. While Mrs. Nickoloff was eating, she and I both saw Chief Rice begin to attack Mr. Nickoloff with his knife. She got up from her chair and started to go toward the living room. I grabbed her, and forced her to the floor. While she was pinned to the floor, I stabbed her many times. Chief Rice continued to stab Mr. Nickoloff. I did not stab Mr. Nickoloff. After both Mr. and Mrs. Nickoloff had been stabbed, Chief and I removed two TV sets and put them in my car. We then drove to Wapato, and Chief gave one of them to another person to pay a bill he owed. The other TV was sold by Chief, and I received about $15.00 from that sale. I believe that Chief received about $35.00 from that sale.

I am very sorry that this happened. I feel awful about this. I was 17 when this happened, and I never imagined how awful this would be. I know that I have let down the people who care most about me, and more importantly, I know that I have ruined the lives of two innocent people and all their family. My own life is ruined, as are the lives of many, many people who did nothing wrong. I am very sorry.

MOTION

Defendant RUSSELL McNEIL, through counsel, moves this Court to order that Defendant is entitled to a verbatim report of proceedings, as described below, at public expense. This Motion is based upon the record and file herein, and the below Declaration of Counsel.

DATED this 16th day of August, 1989.

DECLARATION

THOMAS BOTHWELL, under penalty of perjury of the laws of the State of Washington, hereby certifies and declares that the following is true and correct:
The undersigned, on behalf of the Defendant, is moving this Court to authorize, at public expense, a verbatim report

1 of the following proceedings: The hearing in Defendant's
2 plea of guilty in Yakima County Superior Court, Juvenile 3 Division, cause No. 83-8-820-5. The undersigned have 4 listened to the tape. Having reviewed it, and the Clerk's
5 Papers relative to the Court's accepting the Defendant's plea 6 of guilty to the charge of second-degree burglary, the 7 undersigned asserts that there may indeed be one or more bona
8 fide reasons to challenge the validity of the Defendant's 9 plea.

10 The distinct "revolutions" of the tape (#83-122) have 11 been noted by the Clerk, Ms. Sharron Garrett, as from 1889 to 12 2195.

13 The undersigned submits that a verbatim report of the 14 proceedings is necessary for the court to evaluate the merits of 15 Defendant's Motion in limine, to exclude reference to the prior 16 conviction.

17 The undersigned also notes that a statutory mitigating 18 factor relative to the death penalty is the Defendant's 19 absence of prior record. (RCW 10.95.060(1)).

BETTY MCGILLEN
YAKIMA COUNTY CLERK

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON
IN AND FOR YAKIMA COUNTY

STATE OF WASHINGTON,	1988 AUG 11	AM 11 00
Plaintiff,)	NO. 88-1-00428-1
vs.)
RUSSELL DUANE McNEIL,)	MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION
Defendant.)	TO DEFENSE MOTION FOR )	ADDITIONAL PEREMPTORY
)	CHALLENGES

The defense has requested an additional twelve peremptory challenges during jury selection in this case. They cite unfavorable pre-trial publicity as the basis for this request.

State v. Persinger, 62 Wn.2d 362, 365, 382 P.2d 497 (1963) states:

"The Sixth Amendment of the United States Constitution and the tenth amendment of the Washington Constitution provide that one accused of a crime has the right to a trial by an impartial jury. However, neither constitution requires congress or a state legislature to grant peremptory challenges to an accused. Nor does either constitution provide for any particular method of securing to an accused the right to exercise the peremptory challenges which a legislative body grants him. Holmes v. United States, 134 F.(2d) 125 (1943); Philbrook v. United States, 117 F.(2d) 632 (1941); 31 Am. Jur., Jury Sec. 230. The matter of peremptory challenges rests entirely with the legislature. People v. Kassis, 145 Misc. 493, 259 N.Y.S. 339 (1931); People v. Doran, 246 N.Y. 409, 159 N.E. 379 (1927); 31 Am. Jur., Jury Sec. 230. It is limited only by the necessity of having an impartial jury. 31 Am. Jur., Jury Sec. 230.

3 [3] Codefendants are not denied a fair
4 trial by an impartial jury merely because 5 they are required to exercise collectively
6 their peremptory challenges. The law pre-7 sumes that each juror sworn in a case is 8 impartial and above legal exception,
9 otherwise he would have been challenged
10 for 'cause'. United States v. Marchant &
11 Colson, 25 U.S. 480, 6 L. Ed. 700 (1827).
12 A peremptory challenge is not aimed at 13 the disqualification of a juror. It is 14 exercised upon qualified jurors who have 15 not been excused for 'cause'. People v.
16 Roxborough, 307 Mich. 575, 12 N.W. (2d)
17 466 (1943); Hall v. United States, 168
18 F. (2d) 161, 4 A.L.R. (2d) 1193 (1948).
19 In other words, a peremptory challenge 20 is not exercised in the selection of 21 jurors, but in their rejection.
22 People v. Roxborough, supra. It
23 enables a party to say who shall not 24 try him; but not to say who shall be 25 the particular jurors to try him.
26 United States v. Marchant & Colson,
27 supra.

An accused cannot complain if he is tried by an impartial jury. He can demand nothing more. If, from those who remain, an impartial jury is obtained, the constitutional rights of an accused are maintained. People
v. Roxborough, supra; Hayes v. Missouri,
120 U.S. 68, 30 L.Ed. 578, 7 S. Ct.
350 (1887)."

The issue of a request for additional peremptory challenges was specifically considered in State v. Kinder, 21 Wn. App. 622, 625, 587 P.2d 551 (1978):

"The defendant asserts that the denial of his request for an additional peremptory challenge violated his right to trial by an impartial jury, although defendant himself passed the juror for cause. The law presumes that each juror sworn in a case is impartial and above legal exception, otherwise, he would have been challenged for cause. State
v. Persinger, 62 Wn.2d 362, 382 P.2d 497
(1963). Both the sixth amendment to the United States Constitution and the tenth amendment to the Washington Constitution

3 provide that one accused of a crime is 4 entitled to trial by an impartial jury,
5 but there is no constitutional right to 6 peremptory challenges. State v. Persinger,
7 supra; State v. Nelson, 18 Wn. App. 161, 566
8 P.2d 1375 (1976).

9
10 The number of challenges to be afforded
11 defendants is a procedural matter
12 properly controlled by court rule." Cf.
13 State v. Tharp, 42 Wn.2d 494, 256 P.2d 14 482 (1953).

16 State v. Wilson, 16 Wn. App. 348, 356, 555 P.2d 1375
17 (1976) also considered the issue of a defense request for 18 additional peremptory challenges for exactly the same reason 19 as in our present case, pre-trial publicity. The court
20 stated:

22 "The defendant suggests that the extensive
23 pretrial publicity warranted favorable 24 consideration of a request for additional 25 peremptory challenges. There is no consti-
26 tutional right to peremptory challenges.
27 State v. Persinger, 62 Wn.2d 362, 382 P.2d
28 497 (1963). Nevertheless, court rule
29 provides a limited number of them.
30 CrR 6.4(e)(1) provides in part:

In prosecutions for capital offenses the defense and the state may challenge peremptorily twelve jurors each; in prosecution for offenses punishable by imprisonment in a penitentiary six jurors each; . . .

As a matter of actual count, 71 prospective jurors were seated and examined; 13 were challenged peremptorily; 13 (including an alternate who was dismissed prior to the jury's deliberation) were chosen to try the issues; and 45 were excused for one cause or another. In State v. Haga, 13 Wn. App. 630, 536 P.2d 648 (1975), the court held that for purposes of determining the number of peremptory challenges, first-degree murder is not a "capital offense" unless punishable by death.
See also State v. Johnston, 83 Wash. 1, 144 P.
944 (1914). At the time of the commission of

3 these crimes Washington had no valid statutory 4 provision for imposition of the death penalty.

5 We find no error in the trial court's denial
6 of defendant's request for additional peremp-
7 tory challenges."

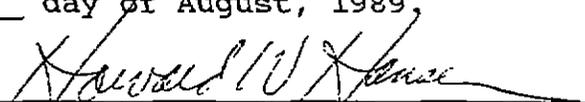

8 The latest word from our Supreme Court on this issue of 9 the number of peremptory challenges to be allowed the 10 defendant is contained in State v. Anderson, 108 Wn.2d 188,
11 192, 736 P.2d 661 (1987):

12 "While the number of peremptory challenges
13 allowed might be subject to change, any 14 amendment of CrR 6.4(e)(1) ought to be 15 through the orderly procedures established
16 by this court, GR 9, and not by case law."

17 The number of peremptory challenges in capital cases
18 have been set by statute and court rule at 12 challenges.
19 The Washington cases uphold that number and state if the 20 number available is to be changed, it should be accomplished 21 by legislative action, not by the courts.

22 The defendant can have as many challenges for cause as 23 is necessary in order for the defendant to get an impartial 24 jury. Peremptory challenges are to remove otherwise 25 qualified and impartial jurors without giving any reason or 26 cause. This is not constitutionally required and any 27 privileges allowed in this area is for the legislature to 28 decide. The defense request for additional peremptory 29 challenges should be denied.

NO. 88-1-00428-1

MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO MOTION TO EXCLUDE DEATH PENALTY BECAUSE HANGING IS CRUEL PUNISHMENT

12 The question raised by the defense that hanging is 13 cruel punishment has been reviewed by the Washington
14 appellate courts in recent years.

15 State v. Frampton, 95 Wn.2d 469, 627 P.2d 922 (1981)
16 was the first recent case to consider the matter. The 17 Washington Supreme Court upheld the use of hanging to carry 18 out a death sentence by a vote of 6 to 3 even though the 19 opinion of the court on the hanging issue is contained in 20 several concurring and dissenting opinions and is not 21 contained in the lead opinion of the case.

22 State v. Rupe, 101 Wn.2d 664, 701, 683 P.2d 571 (1984)
23 cites the Frampton case with approval:

24 In State v. Frampton, 95 Wn.2d 469, 627
25 P.2d 922 (1981), we rejected the argument
26 that death by hanging was unconstitutional."

27 State v. Campbell, 103 Wn.2d 1, 31, 691 P.2d 929 (1984)
28 cites both of the above cases with approval:

29 "We held that imposition of the death
30 penalty is not per se unconstitutional, since both the federal and state consti-

3 tutions recognized capital punishment
4 at the time of their adoption. Smith,
5 at 777-78. We further address the issue
6 of cruel punishment in State v. Frampton,
7 95 Wn.2d 469, 627 P.2d 922 (1981)
8 (rejecting an argument that hanging was 9 unconstitutionally cruel) and in State v.
10 Rupe, 101 Wn.2d 664, 683 P.2d 571 (1984)
11 (rejecting an argument that a choice
12 between hanging and lethal injection was 13 unconstitutionally cruel)."

15 Finally, the latest ruling by our Washington Supreme 16 Court on this issue was contained in its decision on a 17 personal restraint petition by the defendant, Charles R.
18 Campbell, in State v. Campbell, 112 Wn.2d 186, 192, _____
19 P.2d _____ (1989):

20 "In his pro se supplemental brief, Campbell
21 invites the court to reconsider its decision 22 that execution by hanging does not constitute 23 cruel and unusual punishment under the 24 eighth amendment to the United States Consti-25 tution and article 1, section 14 of the 26 Washington State Constitution. See State v.
27 Frampton, 95 Wn.2d 469, 627 P.2d 922 (1981).
28 Since we decided Frampton, at least two 29 other states have upheld statutes providing 30 for execution by hanging. DeShields v. State,
534 A.2d 630 (Del. 1987), cert. denied, 108
S. Ct. 1754 (1988); McKenzie v. Osborne, 195 Mont. 26, 640 P.2d 368 (1981). We decline to reconsider Frampton."

21 The Washington Supreme Court has had several 22 opportunities recently to consider this defense motion and 23 has consistently and unwaveringly stated that execution by 24 hanging does not constitute cruel and unusual punishment
25 under either the Federal Constitution or the Washington 26 State Constitution. Therefore, the defense motion to

3 exclude the death penalty aspects of this case because 4 hanging is cruel punishment should be denied.

- A. thorough review of the publicity generated to date.
- B. design of questionnaire
- C. public opinion telephone survey of 400 people
- D. review of survey results
- E. preparation of reports
- F. testimony at hearing on venue change

All these steps will be interspersed with conferences with counsel. In so doing, I believe that we will be able to examine the quantitative and qualitative impact of the publicity we have all seen. In particular, we will enable ourselves to "take the temperature" of the community with respect to these alleged crimes. It will cost at least $20,000.00 for this work, and possibly $30,000.00. Some of that cost depends on whether the telephoning is done long distance or locally.

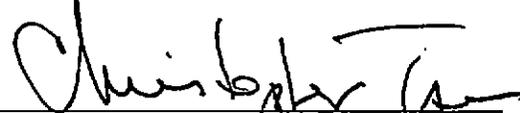

Absent this work, our Motion to Change Venue will be argued in somewhat of a vacuum. We know that much publicity has surrounded this case since before it was filed, but until this work is done and the results are in, we will not have been able to analyze that publicity in any meaningful way. Any decision made without such an analysis will be lacking in the substance and foundation necessary to the due process which we know is required.

18 THIS MATTER coming on regularly for hearing on

19 Defendant's motion for closure of the CrR 3.5 hearing; the Court

20 having considered arguments of counsel for the Plaintiff and

21 Defendant, as well as argument presented by MARK FICKES and

22 VELIKANJE, MOORE & SHORE, INC., P.S., attorneys for the Yakima

23 Herald-Republic¹; the Court having further considered the 24 AFFIDAVIT OF CHRISTOPHER TAIT and the AFFIDAVIT OF HOWARD W.

25 HANSEN, the Court makes the following,

FINDINGS OF FACT

26

27 (1) This case involves charges of aggravated, first-

28 degree murder (two counts) against the Defendant. The State is 29 requesting the death penalty.

30 (2) This case, and that of the companion co-Defendant,

31 has received a significant amount of pre-trial publicity, in the 32 media, e.g., newspaper, television, radio. Illustrative of the 33

34 ¹ The Court also inquired of all other representatives of 35 the media or public attending the hearing on motion for 36 closure; no one else requested the opportunity to present

3 relative notoriety is an article in the Yakima Herald-Republic, 4 January 1, 1989, issue, reporting that the "Nickoloff Murders" was 5 ranked as number two in "the top 10 local stories of 1988." This 6 case has also received additional publicity following the recent 7 United States Supreme Court decision allowing capital punishment
8 against 17-year-olds, as well as escalating publicity as the trial
9 nears. Trial is scheduled to commence September 5, 1989.

11 (3) This Court has not yet held a hearing on Defendant's 12 previously-filed motion for change of venue. (Defendant has not 13 yet requested a hearing on said motion.) Based upon the record 14 currently before the Court, this Court is not inclined to change
15 venue. However, the Court has reviewed a transcript of the Defen-
16 dant's statement which would be the subject of the CrR 3.5 17 hearing. Also, the affidavits of Mr. Hansen and Mr. Tait (with 18 attachments thereto) summarize other evidence which would be 19 presented at the CrR 3.5 hearing. It appears that most, if not 20 all, of the evidence which would be presented at the CrR 3.5
21 hearing has not previously been reported.

22 From the foregoing FINDINGS OF FACT, the Court now makes 23 and enters the following,

24 CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

25 1.0 Both the "reasonable likelihood" and "substantial 26 probability" standards are met as follows:

27 1.1 There is a substantial probability that irreparable 28 damage to Defendant's fair trial will result from conducting the 29 CrR 3.5 hearing in public;

30 1.2 Defendant has shown a reasonable likelihood of 31 prejudice to his fair trial right, if the CrR 3.5 hearing were 32 open.

33 1.3 There is a substantial probability that alternatives
34 to closure will not adequately protect the Defendant's right to a 35 fair trial. The alternatives considered include but are not 36 limited to:

- (a) Changing venue;
- (b) Conducting the CrR 3.5 hearing after a jury has been sequestered;
- (c) Continuing the trial date so as to possibly separate in time the trial from the publicity arising from the CrR 3.5 hearing; and
- (d) Allowing the public to attend the hearing, but entering a "gag" order, intended to restrain dissemination of information by those in attendance.

1.4 There is a substantial probability that closure of the CrR 3.5 hearing will be effective in protecting against harm or prejudice.

2.0 Because Defendant was a juvenile at the time of his statement, the CrR 3.5 hearing is anticipated to include a much more involved and detailed evidentiary presentation than is involved in an adult's CrR 3.5 hearing.

3.0 The various alternatives to closure do not sufficiently guarantee Defendant's right to a fair trial. Closure of the CrR 3.5 hearing is the least restrictive means available. If review of this order is requested, the record should also include this Court's oral ruling.

NOW, THEREFORE, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED as follows:

The motion for closure, joined in by the Plaintiff, is granted. This order relates only to the hearing to be conducted pursuant to CrR 3.5. These findings and conclusions relate to the particular evidence to be presented at a CrR 3.5 hearing and the particular facts of this case.

BETTY MCGILLEN
YAKIMA COUNTY CLERK

MEMORANDUM OF KAPP-TV IN SUPPORT OF MOTION TO QUASH OR MODIFY SUBPOENA
DUCES TECUM

I

STATEMENT OF FACTS

On or about July 31, 1989, a Subpoena Duces Tecum was served upon KAPP-TV for production of various materials regarding media coverage of the deaths of Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff. (A copy of the Subpoena is attached hereto and incorporated herein by reference). No return date is given on the Subpoena; however, the materials, which cover the span of a year and a half, are requested "immediately." The Subpoena seeks any and all transcripts and/or tapes from January, 1988 to date, concerning the Nickoloffs' deaths, "including but not limited to" certain specific events delineated in the Subpoena.

KAPP-TV is a local television station which operates on a tight budget, and whose employees typically devote in excess of forty hours per week to the business of gathering, editing, and producing the news. The Subpoena would require KAPP-TV employees to search through each day's paperwork for a year and a half to find stories related to this case, and would greatly disrupt the station's work.

There are typically six to ten stories produced each day.

KAPP-TV MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MOTION

208

1 The script for each story is logged into a looseleaf binder and 2 with each script there is a number for the videotape on which the 3 story appears. Assuming an average of eight stories per day, 4 five days per week, approximately 3,100 stories would have to be 5 reviewed to comply with the Subpoena. Once found in the log 6 book, the videotaped material can be located on the file tapes.
7 However, the videotaped material relating to the present case is 8 scattered across dozens of tapes, each tape being sixty minutes 9 long. KAPP-TV employees would have to scan through dozens of 10 sixty-minute tapes to locate each one or two-minute story.

11 Once the videotaped story is located, it must be recorded
12 onto another tape. This process of reviewing and copying 13 videotape would tie up one of KAPP-TV's three edit bays and its 14 only photographer, for hours. All of the edit bays, and the 15 photographer, are normally needed to put on the regular KAPP-TV 16 television newscast.

18 DISCUSSION

19 A. Compliance With the Subpoena Would Interfere With the 20 News Gathering Activities of KAPP-TV, Which Are Protected Under 21 the First Amendment of the Federal Constitution, and Article I, 22 Section 5, of the Washington State Constitution.

23 Our Federal and State Constitutions grant certain 24 protections designed to encourage and foster the freedom of the 25 press.

26 Congress shall make no law respecting an 27 establishment of religion, or prohibiting the 28 free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom 29 of speech, or of the press; or the right of the 30 people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the 31 Government for a redress of grievances.

32 First Amendment, United States Constitution.

33 Every person may freely speak, write and publish 34 on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right.

Article I, Section 5, Washington State Constitution.

KAPP-TV MEMORANDUM IN
SUPPORT OF MOTION

1 Several courts from various jurisdictions have recognized
2 the First Amendment implications and importance of the news
3 gathering process and rights of the press to publish what it
4 chooses, without serving as a resource library for litigants.
5 These courts have established that a reporter's materials such as 6 photographs and videotapes are qualifiedly privileged under the 7 First Amendment guarantees of free press and speech. United 8 States v. Cuthbertson, 630 F.2d 139 (3d Cir. 1980), cert. den.
9 449 U.S. 1126; Matter of Consumers Union, 495 F.Supp. 582
10 (S.D.N.Y. 1980); O'Neill v. Oakgrove Constr., 528 N.Y.S.2d 1, 523
11 N.E.2d 277, 71 N.Y. 2d 521 (1988); People v. Bova, 460 N.Y.S. 2d
12 230, 118 Misc. 2d 14 (1983); Bell v. City of Des Moines, 412
13 N.W.2d 585 (1987).¹

14 The basis for the qualified constitutional protections 15 afforded the press are that,

16 The autonomy of the press would be jeopardized if 17 resort to its resource materials by litigants 18 seeking to utilize the news gathering efforts of 19 journalists for their private purposes, were 20 routinely permitted. Moreover, because 21 journalists typically gather information about 22 accidents, crimes, and other matters of special
23 interest that often give rise to litigation 24 attempts to obtain evidence by subjecting the 25 press to discovery as a non-party would be 26 widespread if not restricted. The practical 27 burdens on time and resources, as well as the 28 consequent diversion of journalistic effort and 29 disruption of news gathering activity would be 30 particularly inimical to the vigor of a free
31 press.

32 ¹ To date, the Washington State Supreme Court has indicted 33 only that a common law privilege exists for news reporters where 34 information is gathered from confidential sources. Senear v.
Daily Journal American, 97 Wn.2d 148, 641 P.2d 1180 (1982);
Clampitt v. Thurston County, 98 Wn.2d 638, 658 P.2d 641 (1983).
The privilege applies in criminal proceedings, as well as civil matters. State v. Rinaldo, 102 Wn.2d 749, 689 P.2d 392 (1984).

KAPP-TV MEMORANDUM IN

2 For these reasons, the courts in New York and 3 elsewhere, Federal and State, have recognized a 4 reporter's qualified privilege under the First 5 Amendment guarantee of free press and speech. As 6 formulated by the decisions of these courts, the 7 privilege bars coerced disclosure of resource 8 materials, such as photographs, which are 9 obtained or otherwise generated in the course of 10 news gathering or news preparing activities,
11 unless the moving litigant satisfies a tripartite
12 test. Under the tripartite test, discovery may 13 be ordered only if the litigant demonstrates,
14 clearly and specifically, that the items sought 15 are (1) highly material, (2) critical to the litigant's claim, and (3) not otherwise available. Accordingly, if the material sought is pertinent merely to an ancillary issue in the litigation not essential to the maintenance of the litigant's claim, or obtainable through an alternative source, disclosure may not be compelled.

16 O'Neill v. Oakgrove Constr., 528 N.Y.S.2d at 3 (citations 17 omitted) (emphasis added).

18 The constitutional protections apply regardless of 19 whether or not confidential information is sought. Matter of 20 Consumers Union, 495 F.Supp. at 586; United States v.
21 Cuthbertson, 630 F.2d at 147, and regardless whether the case is 22 civil or criminal in nature.

23 [A]cceptance of defendants' view that their 24 constitutional interests in a criminal trial
25 preclude the existence of a journalist's
26 privilege in criminal cases would amount to a 27 finding that these interests always prevail over 28 the First Amendment interests underlying that 29 privilege. However, in Nebraska Press Association v. Stuart, 427 U.S. 539, 561, 96
S.Ct. 2791, 2803, 49 L.Ed.2d 683 (1976), the Supreme Court stated that:

30 The authors of the Bill of Rights did not 31 undertake to assign priorities as between 32 First Amendment and Sixth Amendment rights,
33 ranking one as superior to the other . . .
34 [I]f the authors of these guarantees, fully aware of the potential conflicts between

KAPP-TV MEMORANDUM IN
SUPPORT OF MOTION

1 them, were unwilling or unable to resolve
2 the issue by assigning to one priority over 3 the other, it is not for us to rewrite the 4 Constitution by undertaking what they 5 declined to do.

6 A defendant's Sixth Amendment and due process
7 rights certainly are not irrelevant when a 8 journalist's privilege is asserted. But rather 9 than affecting the existence of the qualified 10 privilege, we think that these rights are 11 important factors that must be considered in 12 deciding whether, in the circumstances of an 13 individual case, the privilege must yield to the 14 defendant's need for the information.

15 Cuthbertson, at 147.

16 The qualified constitutional protections recognized by 17 these courts should apply in a case such as this where the burden 18 placed upon KAPP-TV to comply with the Subpoena will result in 19 substantial disruption of KAPP-TV's news gathering efforts, and 20 diversion of KAPP-TV resources otherwise needed to gather,
21 produce and edit the news. These effects interfere with KAPP's 22 constitutional freedoms of the press.

23 Since the constitutional protections afforded the press
24 are of a qualified nature, the question becomes whether the 25 defendant can demonstrate that the evidence sought is necessary 26 to his defense and unobtainable from any less obtrusive source.
27 O'Neill, at 3; Bell v. City of Des Moines, at 587. It is 28 anticipated that the evidence in question is sought for defense
29 purposes pursuant to CrR 5.2(b)(2).

30 The court may order a change of venue to any 31 county in the state:

32 *

33 *

34 *

 Upon motion of the defendant, supported by affidavit that he believes he cannot receive a fair trial in the county where the action is pending.

SUPPORT OF MOTION

1 The factors which are to be considered in determining 2 whether a change of venue is appropriate, based upon pretrial 3 publicity, are:

4 (1) the inflammatory or noninflammatory nature of 5 the publicity; (2) the degree to which the 6 publicity was circulated throughout the 7 community; (3) the length of time elapsed from 8 the dissemination of the publicity to the date of 9 trial; (4) the care exercised and the difficulty 10 encountered in the selection of the jury; (5) the 11 familiarity of prospective or trial jurors with 12 the publicity and the resultant effect upon them;
13 (6) the challenges exercised by the defendant in 14 selecting the jury, both peremptory and for 15 cause; (7) the connection of government officials
16 with the release of publicity; (8) the severity 17 of the charge; and (9) the size of the area from 18 which the venire is drawn.

19 State v. Jeffries, 105 Wn.2d 398, 409, 717 P.2d 722 (1986); State 20 v. Rupe, 101 Wn.2d 664, 675, 683 P.2d 571 (1984); Orland, 21 Washington Practice, § 1606 (1983). The only factor which would 22 require review of KAPP-TV's transcripts or tapes is the first,
23 "the inflammatory or noninflammatory nature of the publicity."
24 The only evidence arguably necessary in this regard is the 25 material broadcast concerning the deaths and the subsequent 26 investigation and arrest of defendants. Tapes of the procedural 27 aspects of the case, which were broadcast and which are strictly 28 factual in nature, would not be necessary for defendant's 29 purposes. Jeffries, at 409.

30 KAPP-TV requests that the Court quash and/or modify the 31 Subpoena to the extent defendant seeks discovery of transcripts 32 and videotapes which are procedural in nature and unnecessary to 33 show prejudicial pre-trial publicity, KAPP-TV further requests 34 that defendant be required to demonstrate, to the Court's satisfaction, which of the delineated events in the Subpoena are reasonably necessary for defendant's purposes.

KAPP-TV MEMORANDUM IN
SUPPORT OF MOTION

1 demonstrate to the Court' satisfaction which of the enumerated
2 events in the Subpoena are reasonably necessary for defendants' 3 purposes herein. KAPP-TV also urges that to the extent any 4 discovery is permitted, denial of its Motion to Quash or Modify 5 the Subpoena should be conditioned upon the advancement of the 6 reasonable costs of producing the requested materials.

7 Respectfully submitted this 7th day of August, 1989.

1 budget of the station. I also helped design the station's filing
2 system for story transcripts, and the warehousing of videotapes.
3 As news director, and as a station manager, I am familiar with 4 the duties and responsibilities of each of the station's 5 employees, and the disruption to the news gathering process when 6 even one employee is not engaged in his normal activities. Every 7 employee typically devotes in excess of forty hours per week to 8 the team effort in gathering, editing and producing the news.

9 3. KAPP-TV has approximately ten employees in the news
10 department. The station usually has employed about five 11 reporters and/or producers, it has one photographer, and 12 approximately four anchors. KAPP broadcasts two news programs 13 daily, five days per week, and there are generally between six to 14 ten stories per day which we produce.

15 4. I have reviewed the Subpoena Duces Tecum served upon 16 KAPP on or about July 31, 1989, in the above-referenced matter, 17 and I am familiar with the procedure which would be required of 18 the station to comply with the Subpoena. (A copy of the Subpoena 19 is attached hereto and denominated Exhibit "A").

20 5. Of the KAPP-TV employees, the ones best suited to 21 research our files for the requested stories would be our only 22 photographer, Chuck Fuller, and myself. Our reporters, producers 23 and anchors must be free to gather the news, and handle their 24 assignments. The station photographer and I would be the most 25 likely candidates for researching the logbooks, locating the 26 videotapes, and then arranging for reproduction of the requested 27 footage.

28 6. In order to comply with the Subpoena, Chuck and I 29 would be forced to search through a year and a half's worth of 30 paperwork. Each story is logged into a loose leaf binder, there 31 being six to ten stories per day, and assuming an average of 32 eight stories per day five days per week, we will have to review 33 approximately 3,100 stories to find those sought pursuant to the 34

AFFIDAVIT OF
DAVE Ettl

1 Subpoena. Listed with each entry in the logbook is the number of 2 the videotape to which it corresponds.

3 7. The videotapes are each sixty minutes in length. The 4 stories which are requested would be scattered across dozens of 5 these videotapes, each story being one to two minutes long. To 6 find the story on the videotape, it would require one of us to 7 scan through all of the footage, searching for the story related 8 to this case. This process would, of necessity, tie up one of 9 our only three edit bays and, of course, our only photographer
10 and myself, when we would normally be engaged in other news
11 gathering activities, and where all the edit bays are generally 12 necessary for production of the news.

13 8. Once the stories were located on each of the tapes, 14 we would then have to deliver them to our production staff for 15 reproduction on another tape.

16 9. It is difficult to estimate the actual time necessary
17 to accomplish this task, since we are first and foremost a news 18 station, and we cannot neglect that function while we search for 19 subpoenaed materials. We are not in the position to tie up 20 equipment or people for hours, or days, at a time, as that 21 necessarily jeopardizes our ability to put on a newscast. I 22 estimate that it would take two full days to complete the process 23 without interruption, if we did not have a newscast to prepare.

24 10. KAPP has, on occasion, provided copies of broadcast 25 material on a limited basis, making copies of a single story, 26 where it does not jeopardize the station's ability to prepare for 27 each day's newscasts. In such cases, we generally charge $20.00
28 per story for the service, and we ask that the party requesting 29 the information provide us with a ½-inch tape which we dub at our 30 convenience. Compliance with this Subpoena would constitute a 31 significantly greater investment in time and equipment. For a 32 request such as this, it is my opinion that the sum of $650.00
33 would be a reasonable estimate for our costs, not including the 34

AFFIDAVIT OF
DAVE Ettl

1 tape. This would include a reasonable charge for labor of 2 $200.00 for the photographer's and my time, estimated to be 20
3 hours, together with the station's charge of $20.00 per story for 4 approximately 22 stories, or $450.00, for equipment costs and 5 other employee time spent dubbing and reproducing the tapes.

6 FURTHER, your Affiant saith naught.

RULING DENYING MOTION FOR DISCRETIONARY REVIEW

COLEMAN

Russell Duane McNeil has been charged by the Yakima County Prosecuting Attorney with two counts of aggravated first degree murder, each with an attendant notice of intent to seek the death penalty. On July 24, 1989, the trial court entered a discovery order requiring Mr. McNeil's counsel to produce to the prosecution a letter in counsel's possession which was purportedly written by Mr. McNeil to a young woman. Mr. McNeil now moves for discretionary review of this discovery order. Trial is presently set to begin on September 5, 1989.

Mr. McNeil advances several arguments why the trial court erred in requiring production of this letter. Although those arguments are summarized generally in Mr. McNeil's pleadings to this court, a detailed explanation of his factual and legal theories has been presented only at an in camera hearing held before the trial court. I have read the sealed record of that hearing, and have considered all of counsel's arguments, but find no basis for granting discretionary review.

Counsel first argues that the letter is simply not discoverable under CrR 4.7(b)(2)(x), because the defense has no plans to introduce the document at trial. This rule, however, allows the trial court to require inspection of any "physical or documentary evidence in defendant's possession; . . ." Unlike other discovery rules, e.g., CrR 4.7(g), this rule does not predicate discovery on the defendant's intent to use the evidence at trial. Although Mr. McNeil suggests that the judicial "gloss" given CrR 4.7(b)(2)(x) requires such a limitation, he cites no authority for this proposition and none has been found.

Nor has Mr. McNeil provided persuasive authority for his arguments that, under the "unique circumstances" of this case, the letter should be protected from discovery under the attorney-client privilege or the work product doctrine. To be protected as privileged communications, information or objects acquired by an attorney must have been communicated or delivered to the attorney by the client, and not merely obtained by the attorney while acting in that capacity for the client. State ex rel. Sowers v. Olwell, 64 Wn.2d 828, 394 P.2d 681 (1964). Here, the letter was delivered to the young woman to whom it was addressed, and only through a rather circuitous route made its way to counsel. There is no basis for concluding that this young woman or others who handled the letter acted merely as agents or a conduit for Mr. McNeil in his communication with counsel.

Similarly, counsel has provided no persuasive support for his contention that the letter represents work product protected from disclosure by CrR 4.7(f)(1). Even taking into account counsel's in camera representations and argument, there is simply nothing about this letter which qualifies as "opinions, theories or conclusions. . . ." Id. The possibility that a particular piece of evidence may lead counsel to entertain certain opinions, theories or conclusions about the case cannot somehow make the evidence a product of counsel's work to be protected from discovery, even if counsel may have had some hand in eliciting the evidence.

Finally, Mr. McNeil claims that requiring disclosure of this letter would violate his constitutional right against involuntary self-incrimination. There is no merit to this contention. A confession is involuntary in the constitutional sense only if it is the product of governmental coercion. Colorado v. Connelly, 479 U.S. 157, 93 L. Ed. 2d 473, 107 S. Ct. 515 (1986). Here, no allegation has been made that any government officer caused Mr. McNeil to write the letter. The possibility that some other sort of compulsion may have impelled Mr. McNeil is irrelevant under Connelly.

Mr. McNeil suggests that, since he (through his attorney) is now again in possession of the letter, the case is no different from one in which a defendant is compelled to give up incriminating documents which have never left his possession. He thus would find the compulsion forbidden by the Constitution in the prosecution's use of the discovery process to obtain the letter. This court rejected a strikingly similar argument in State v. Grove, 65 Wn. 2d 525, 398 P.2d 170 (1965). There, defense counsel had obtained a letter written from jail by the defendant to his wife. The State learned of the letter and obtained a court order requiring counsel to produce it. In reviewing the propriety of this order, this court first held that the letter was not a privileged communication between husband and wife, because the defendant gave it unsealed to a jail guard to be censored in accordance with jail procedures before being sent to the wife. The court then rejected the defendant's argument that court-ordered production of the letter violated the defendant's constitutional rights:

Counsel's argument seems to be that defendant's right to counsel, to communicate with counsel, and to abstain from testifying against himself, have been violated. . . . In fact, the letter, under the circumstances herein, involves no communication between attorney and client. What is involved is an effort to withhold evidence that was incriminating to the defendant.

Grove, at 528. While the court's reasoning might have been more fully explained, the court's conclusion is quite clear: "there was no violation of the privilege against self-incrimination. . . ." Id., at 529.

This conclusion finds support in the oft-stated notion that "[a] party is privileged from producing the evidence but not from its production." Johnson v. United States, 228 U.S. 457, 458, 57 L. Ed. 919, 33 S. Ct. 572 (1913). In Johnson the Court concluded that "[i]f the documentary confession comes to a third hand alio intuitu, as this did, the use of it in court does not compel the defendant to be a witness against himself." Id., at 459. The Court has employed like reasoning to reject an argument that production of a defendant's own records from the possession of her accountant violated the Fifth Amendment. Couch v. United States, 409 U.S. 322, 34 L. Ed. 2d 548, 93 S. Ct. 611 (1973). The Court explained that in such a case "the ingredient of personal compulsion against an accused is lacking." Id., at 329. Similarly, in a later case the defendants had obtained the documents in question from their accountants and shortly thereafter transferred them to their attorneys. The Court held that the defendants' Fifth Amendment privilege was not violated by compelled production:

The fact that the attorneys are agents of the taxpayers does not change this result. Couch held as much, since the accountant there was also the taxpayer's agent, . . .

"It is extortion of information from the accused himself that offends our sense of justice." Couch v. United States, supra at 328. Agent or no, the lawyer is not the taxpayer. The taxpayer is the "accused," and nothing is being extracted from him.

Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 391, 397-988, 48 L. Ed. 2d 39, 96 S. Ct. 1569 (1976).

Apparently the Supreme Court's most recent relevant pronouncement is in United States v. Doe, 465 U.S. 605, 79 L. Ed. 2d 552, 104 S. Ct. 1237 (1984). There, the Court said:

If the party asserting the Fifth Amendment privilege has voluntarily compiled the document, no compulsion is present and the contents of the document are not privileged.

Doe, at 612 n.10. The Court also concluded that "[t]he fact that the records are in respondent's possession is irrelevant to the determination of whether the creation of the records was compelled." Id., at 612. See also Andresen v. Maryland, 427 U.S. 463, 49 L. Ed. 2d 627, 96 S. Ct. 2737 (1976); Doe v. United States, 487 U.S. ___, 101 L. Ed. 2d 184, 108 S. Ct. ___ (1988).

Taken together, these cases support the trial court's decision here. The letter is no longer in Mr. McNeil's possession. Since he was not compelled by the State to write the letter, or to send it to the young woman, the Fifth Amendment provides no protection against its disclosure.

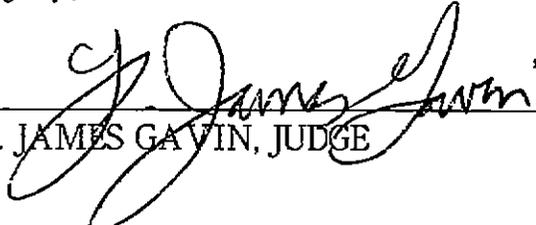

In sum, Mr. McNeil has provided no persuasive basis for granting discretionary review under the criteria of RAP 2.3(b). Accordingly, his motion for discretionary review is denied.

Dated at Olympia, Washington, August 4, 1989.

AFFIDAVIT OF

COUNTY OF YAKIMA)

My name is Christopher Tait. I am lead counsel for Russell D. McNeil, who is the defendant in this case.

This affidavit is made in support of my Motion to Close the 3.5 Hearing, and my Motion to Change Venue.

The evidence will show that on or about January 27, 1988, my client was taken into custody by detectives of the Yakima County Sheriff's Department.

Within minutes of his arrest, the evidence will show that the defendant began answering questions about these homicides. He admitted being in the house when the victims were killed. He admitted driving to their house with Herbert Rice, who is charged with the same crimes in a companion case. He admitted knowing that Herbert Rice was armed with a knife before their arrival at the victims' home. He admitted stabbing one of the victims with a knife which he had in his possession. He described the location of the victims' bodies. He described items of personal property which were removed from the victims' house.

The evidence will show that certain answers given by this defendant matched other items of physical evidence. This will be offered by the prosecution as proof of the defendant's involvement, as if only the perpetrator of the crime could have known certain facts.

The statement given by defendant will be offered as a "full confession" by this defendant. Since Herbert Rice is not involved in this hearing, the public will be forced to speculate about the content of any statement given by Mr. Rice. Some may conclude that Mr. McNeil is more culpable than Mr. Rice, simply because the content of his statement is publicized first. This speculation, occurring only a month before trial, will be very damaging to this defendant.

This case was identified by readers of the Yakima Herald Republic as the number two news story of 1988. Attached hereto and hereby incorporated by reference is a copy of that article.

Attached hereto and hereby incorporated by reference are copies of narrative reports written by Deputies Hafsos and Shaw concerning their arrest of and interrogation of Russell McNeil. I expect their testimony at this 3.5 Hearing to be consistent with their reports. Particular attention is drawn to the report of Deputy Shaw, and the manner in which he asked Russell McNeil if he had murdered Mrs. Nickoloff.

This case has been the subject of massive pre-trial publicity. More publicity is expected before the trial begins. Attached hereto and hereby incorporated by reference are copies of a few articles about this case. In addition to the publicity generated by the media, there are rumors and stories circulating throughout the community which are EXTREMELY inflammatory. These rumors have little or no connection to the facts of this case. However, their importance lies in their falsity, and in their SPECTACULAR quality. Even if only a few members of our community have heard these rumors, their impact is devastating. If these rumors become more widespread, or if a new wave of publicity attends this hearing, the result is worse yet.

This affiant is mindful of the high cost of changing venue, and of the Constitutional provisions which keep our courts open. It is against that backdrop that your affiant respectfully advises the Court that it is my sincere belief that venue should be changed, and that this hearing should be closed.

Homicide -----January 7th, 1988
Mike & Dorothy Nickoloff
January 26th, 1988

This officer was advised by Detective Rod Shaw of information he had received from Deputy Warwick, that might relate to the Nickoloff homicide. Contact with the informant was scheduled for 1300hrs., this date. See Detective Shaws report for details.

At approx. 1500hrs., this date, this officer was advised that a Sammy Lopez had some additional information and that Detective Shaw was making contact. At this time, Mr. Lopez gave Det. Shaw a 13" black & white t.v. that he stated was given to him by Chief Rice and another subject named Russ, last name unknown. See Detective Shaws report for details.

This officer and Det. Shaw proceeded to the Gill residence for identification on the television. She is the Nickoloff's daughter. See Det. Shaws report for details. Information received from Lopez at approx. 1800hrs., revealed that the subject identified as Russ might have attended the Pace Alternative School in Wapato. At approx. 1800hrs., this officer and Detective Shaw contacted Mr. Erickson at the school who advised that with the description and first name given to him, the subject we were looking for could be a Russell McNeil, age 17 who lived at 21 North 'G' Street, in Toppenish. See Det. Shaw's report for additional information concerning this contact.

At approx. 1745hrs., Det. Shaw contacted this officer and advised that Sammy Lopez had called and advised that he had located the other television. Contact was made with Lopez and he directed us to his residence where a 13" color television was located. The brand was a JC Penney's. In checking the television, no identification with the Nickoloff's name or social security number could be found. The serial number on the back of the television was #50101884, and model number is #658-2093. See Detective Shaws report for additional regarding the television's and where they were located.

This officer when checking the back of the television observed a small clip on the antenna screw. It appeared that the antenna was pulled from the set, and in doing so ripped away from the antenna lead.

At approx. 1800hrs., this officer and Det. Shaw made contact at the Will & Marie Nickoloff residence for the purpose of identifying the two televisions. See Det. Shaws report regarding this information.

At approx. 1830hrs., this officer called and talked to the supervisor at Park Side Nursing home and inquired about Mike Nickoloff's stay. She advised that if patients come into the home with televisions, that they are documented with putting the persons name on them with tape and writing down identification numbers on their admittance forms. In this case the records reflect that a remote control was identified and that the model number of the television, a 13" JC Penney was documented as #658-2093.

At this time Detective Shaw and myself were at the scene of the homicide and the remote control and the television antenna were located in the bedroom where the JC Penney television was located. The antenna lead was missing a small clip and the one located on the back of the television appears to be from the lead. The remote has a tape on the side with the name Nickoloff. Both these items were entered into evidence, by Detective Shaw.

At approx. 2200hrs., these officers were notified that activity was detected at 21 North "G" Street, in Toppenish.

 At approx. 2240hrs., contact was made at 21 North 'G' Street, Toppenish. Det. Shaw and myself knocked and the door was opened by a male subject who later was identified as Ed McNeil, brother to Russell McNeil. We were advised that Russ was home and in bed in the rear of the house. Ed went and advised Russ that the Sheriff's Dept. wanted to ask him some questions. Russ got dressed and he was advised that we would be going to the Toppenish Sub-Station for an interview. He agreed to go along with these officer's and was transported by Detective Shaw.

At the Toppenish Sub-Station Detective Shaw read Russell McNeil his Miranda Warnings and Russ advised he understood them and agreed to talk to us. The Miranda Warnings were witnessed by Deputy John Lewis. The time of Miranda was 2258, January 26th, 1988. See attached to Det. Shaws report. This officer talked to Russ and he advised that he was with Chief when the televisions were picked-up and disposed of. At this time this officer advised all parties that this interview would continue in Yakima at the Sheriff's Dept. At approx. 2310hrs., Detective Rod Shaw transported Russ McNeil to the Sheriff's Dept., in Yakima. While enroute to Yakima, McNeil took Det. Shaw to the Nickoloff residence. See Det. Shaw's report.

Upon arriving at the Sheriff's Dept., Russ McNeil was taken to the Detective Division, interview room. Again Detective Shaw read McNeil his Miranda Warnings, and McNeil stated that he understood them. The interview that followed has Russ McNeil and Chief Rice as being involved in the Homicide. See Det. Shaws report for items discussed.

Russell McNeil was very cooperative and gave his consent to search his bedroom at 21 North 'G' in Toppenish. He also advised that we could take his vehicle that was used the night of the incident. He advised that this vehicle was parked on the north side of the residence and that it was being worked on. Russell also stated that a toolbox belonging to his brother Ed was located in the trunk area, and that to make sure to remove and give to his brother. Russell described his vehicle as a red Plym. Horizon.

A consent to Search was obtained from Russell McNeil and from the renter of the property, Mary Teacher, both of which live at 21 North 'G', in Toppenish. After a statement was obtained from McNeil, this officer along with Detective Shaw made contact at 21 North 'G' in Toppenish and several items of clothing and the above described vehicle were picked-up and entered as evidence. See the attached evidence forms submitted by Detective Shaw.

 At approx. 0400hrs., January 27th, 1988, this officer along with Detective Shaw, Sgt. M. James and Sgt. C. Gonzales made contact at the Herb Rice residence which is located on Highway #97, approx. 1/2 mile south of Progressive. Detective Shaw knocked on the front door, and approx. 1-minute, a male subject came to the door and Detective Shaw identified himself and this person known to Det. Shaw was identified as Herb Rice Sr. Mr. Rice invited these officers into his house and Det. Shaw asked if Chief was home and Mr. Rice answered in the affirmative. Mr. Rice advised he would advise his son that we would like to talk to him. Approx. 20 seconds later a male subject came into the living room who was identified as Chief Rice. This officer read Rice his Miranda Warnings and advised him that we would like to talk to him downtown. Rice stated to his father something about burglaries. After his Miranda Warnings were read to him, Chief was advised that we would like to search his bedroom and he agreed and signed a consent to search. This was witnessed by Sgt. James. At this time Chief Rice was given a pair of pants, shirt and pair of shoes and he was transported to the Sheriff's Department in Yakima for a interview. At 0446 hrs., this officer read him his Miranda Warnings again and he advised he understood and initialed by each. This was witnessed by this officer. During the interview of Chief Rice, Detective Rod Shaw and myself were present. During this statement, Chief Rice got up from his chair and demonstrated how he killed Mr. Nickoloff. Chief advised that he was standing behind Mr. Nickoloff as he turned around and asked what he was doing and raised his hands. At this point Chief advised that he stabbed Mr. Nickoloff in the face area and chest area, repeatedly. Chief raised his hand and demonstrated this action toward Detective Shaw and after stabbing him in the chest and face area, Chief made a slicing action across the throat area, advising he did this to Mr. Nickoloff. For additional information concerning this interview read Detective Shaw's report and the statements from Chief Rice and Russell McNeil.

Both McNeil and Rice were booked into the Juvenile facility for INV-Homicide. This was done by Deputy B. Camarata.

Per Prosecutor Sullivans request this officer contacted the Washington State Toxicology Lab in Seattle, Scan-742-3536, and found that they do not have the equipment to determine the level of LSD in blood samples. They advised that the University of Utah might have that capability and contact was made with a technician at that location, Ph. 801-581-5117, and she advised that this process has not been implemented as of this date. She advised that this process is expected on line sometime in July or August, 1988. This person also advised that when this process is available, that it will detect LSD in the blood up to 72hrs., after consumption.

HAFSOS ALSO CALLED THE TOPPENISH PD AND REQUESTED A UNIT DRIVE BY 21 N. "G" STREET TO ASCERTAIN IF ANYONE WAS HOME. APPROXIMATELY 20 MINUTES LATER, WE WERE ADVISED THAT SOMEONE WAS NOW IN THAT RESIDENCE.

THE COLOR TV SET RECOVERED AT THE LOPEZ RESIDENCE BORE A BROKEN WIRE AT THE BACK OF THE SET. HAFSOS RETRIEVED A TV ANTENNA WITH A BROKEN WIRE FROM MR. NICKOLOFF'S BEDROOM WHICH IS THE SOUTHERN MOST BEDROOM IN THE HOUSE. THE FOLLOWING ITEMS WERE REMOVED FROM THE CRIME SCENE AND PLACED INTO EVIDENCE:

1. TV ANTENNA WITH BROKEN WIRE
2. JC PENNEY REMOTE CONTROL SENDING UNIT
3. JC PENNEY STATEMENT BEARING THE NICKOLOFF ACCOUNT NUMBER
4. A CHECK REGISTER BEARING AN ACCOUNTING OF CHECK NUMBER #240
5. CHECK NUMBER #240, MADE OUT TO PENNEYS IN THE AMOUNT OF $269

AFTER I PLACED THE ABOVE ITEMS IN THE TRUNK OF MY VEHICLE, WE SECURED THE HOUSE AND DETAILED THE ADDRESS IN TOPPENISH, 21 N. "G" STREET. AFTER KNOCKING ON THE DOOR AND RECEIVING A QUICK RESPONSE, WE IDENTIFIED OURSELVES TO THE ANSWERING PARTY. WE ASKED IF RUSS WAS HOME AND RECEIVED AN ANSWER IN THE AFFIRMATIVE. ED, WHO WAS THE ANSWERING PARTY AND IS THE BROTHER OF RUSS, SAID HE WAS IN THE BEDROOM. WE FOLLOWED ED TO THE BEDROOM WHERE WE ASKED HIM TO GET DRESSED AND COME TO THE TOPPENISH SUB-STATION FOR AN INTERVIEW. HE AGREED TO DO THIS AND PRESENTED NO PROBLEM TO HAFSOS OR ME. I TRANSPORTED RUSS McNEIL TO THE SUB-STATION, FOLLOWED BY HAFSOS IN HIS VEHICLE. DEPUTY JOHN LEWIS, WHO HAD BEEN IN THE AREA, ACCOMPANIED US TO THE STATION.

UPON ENTERING THE SUB-STATION, I ASKED FOR AND RECEIVED THE FOLLOWING INFORMATION:

RUSSELL DUANE McNEIL DOB 8-13-70
21 N. "G" STREET, TOPPENISH
STUDENT, PACE SCHOOL IN WAPATO

Miranda #

WITH DEPUTY LEWIS PRESENT, I READ McNEIL HIS RIGHTS. HE SAID HE UNDERSTOOD THEM FULLY. I FILLED OUT A MIRANDA AND WAIVER OF RIGHTS FORM AND REVIEWED EACH ITEM LISTED, LINE BY LINE, WITH McNEIL. McNEIL SAID HE UNDERSTOOD HIS RIGHTS AND SIGNED THE FORM IN ADDITION TO INITIALS PLACED IN NINE DIFFERENT LOCATIONS ON THE FORM. THIS WAS WITNESSED BY DEPUTY LEWIS AND ME. (2258 HOURS).

LT. HAFSOS BEGAN THE INTERVIEW BY TELLING McNEIL WE WERE INVESTIGATING THE HOMICIDES OF MIKE & DOROTHY NICKOLOFF AND WE HAD INFORMATION HE WAS INVOLVED. I TOLD HIM WE HAD A WITNESS WHO PLACED HIM IN THE COMPANY OF "CHIEF" RICE AT A TIME RICE WAS TRYING TO UNLOAD TWO TELEVISION SETS. HAFSOS ASKED HIM IF HE KNEW RICE AND McNEIL SAID YES. HAFSOS THEN ASKED HIM IF HE WAS WITH RICE DURING THE TIME RICE HAD THE SETS AT THE LOPEZ RESIDENCE. AFTER A PAUSE, McNEIL SAID, "YES, I WAS THERE". WITH THAT, HAFSOS ADVISED McNEIL WE WOULD CONTINUE THE INTERVIEW IN YAKIMA.

MCNEIL WAS PLACED IN MY VEHICLE, UNCUFFED, AND WE BEGAN THE DRIVE TO YAKIMA. AT A POINT BETWEEN TOPPENISH AND WAPATO, [WE BEGAN TO DISCUSS THE NICKOLOFF CASE. I ADVISED MCNEIL OF THE SERIOUSNESS OF THIS MATTER AND THE FACT IT WOULD BE SOLVED SHORTLY. MCNEIL INTERRUPTED ME IN MID-SENTENCE AND SAID:]

"I STAYED IN THE CAR."

WHEN I SAID, "AT THE NICKOLOFF RESIDENCE?", MCNEIL REPLIED,

"YES"

I ASKED MCNEIL IF HE COULD DESCRIBE THE NICKOLOFF RESIDENCE. HE REPLIED,

"THERE ARE BUSHES IN FRONT AND STEPS YOU GO UP TO GET TO THE DOOR."

AT A POINT NEAR WAPATO, I ASKED MCNEIL WHAT TYPE OF DRIVEWAY SURFACE WAS THERE. HE SAID,

"THERE WAS SNOW ON THE GROUND.....IT WAS SNOWING."

AT THAT POINT, I DECIDED TO MAKE A DETOUR TO THE NICKOLOFF RESIDENCE AND I ADVISED HAFSOS OF THE SAME. AS I PULLED INTO THE NICKOLOFF DRIVEWAY, I ASKED MCNEIL IF THIS WAS THE HOUSE. HE REPLIED,

"YEAH"

I ASKED HIM WHERE HE PARKED HIS VEHICLE AND HE POINTED OVER HIS LEFT SHOULDER AND SAID,

"BACK THERE.....BY THAT CONCRETE THING.....THE FRONT OF THE CAR

I BACKED MY VEHICLE AND ASKED MCNEIL TO INDICATE THE APPROXIMATE LOCATION. HE SAID,

"THE FRONT OF THE CAR WAS EVEN WITH THAT CONCRETE THING."

I ASKED MCNEIL IF HE GOT OUT OF THE CAR AND HE SAID,

"I JUST WENT TO THE FRONT DOOR, THEN GOT BACK IN MY CAR."

I ASKED MCNEIL WHAT RICE DID WHEN HE (MCNEIL) GOT BACK INTO HIS CAR. HE SAID,

"HE WENT AROUND BACK."

I ASKED MCNEIL IF HE SAW ANYTHING WHILE HE WAS IN HIS CAR. HE REPLIED,

"NO, I WAS LOOKING DOWN."

WHEN I QUESTIONED THE MEANING OF THAT RESPONSE, McNEIL SAID:

"I WAS WORKING ON MY STEREO.....THE WIRES WERE LOOSE."

I ASKED McNEIL IF HE ENTERED THE DRIVEWAY WITH THE VEHICLE LIGHTS ON OR OFF. HE SAID,

"OFF" (HIS TAPED STATEMENT RESPONSE: "LIGHTS WERE ON")

I SPOKE BRIEFLY TO LT. HAFSOS THEN HEARD HIM ADVISE McNEIL THAT WE WERE INTERESTED IN JUST THE TRUTH. McNEIL ACKNOWLEDGED THAT WITH A NOD OF THE HEAD AND

"YEAH"

AS WE LEFT THE NICKOLOFF DRIVEWAY, I ASKED McNEIL IF THIS WAS THE DIRECTION HE LEFT THE NICKOLOFF RESIDENCE ON THE NIGHT OF 1-7-88 (MEANING EASTBOUND ON KAYS). McNEIL DID NOT RESPOND VERBALLY BUT NODDED HIS HEAD. AT THE STOP SIGN ON KAYS AT LATERAL B, I ASKED McNEIL IF HE TURNED OR CONTINUED STRAIGHT ON KAYS. HE SAID,

"STRAIGHT"

APPROACHING THE STOP SIGN ON KAYS AT LATERAL A, I ASKED McNEIL IF HE TURNED OR CONTINUED STRAIGHT. HE REPLIED,

"TURNED RIGHT.....DOWN TO KILES.....TURNED AGAIN TOWARDS WAPATO."

I ASKED McNEIL IF ANYTHING HAD BEEN THROWN OUT OF THE CAR AT A POINT BETWEEN THE NICKLOFF'S RESIDENCE AND LATERAL A. HE SHOOK HIS HEAD, INDICATING NO. I PROCEEDED NORTH ON LATERAL A AND CONTINUED TALKING ABOUT THE HOMICIDES INCLUDING THE FACT I DID NOT BELIEVE HE STAYED IN THE CAR. McNEIL BEGAN TO TALK AND THE FOLLOWING TOOK PLACE:

UPON ARRIVING AT YSO, McNEIL WAS TAKEN TO THE DETECTIVE INTERVIEW ROOM WHERE I READ HIM HIS RIGHTS. McNEIL SAID HE UNDERSTOOD THEM. LT. HAFSOS AND I BEGAN TO INTERVIEW McNEIL PRIOR TO TAKING A TAPED STATEMENT. IN THE INTERVIEW, McNEIL SAID HE SAW RICE NEAR THE JACKPOT STATION ON HWY 97, PICKED HIM UP AND THEY BEGAN TO CRUISE THE AREA. AFTER CRUISING FOR THE NEXT ONE TO ONE AND A HALF HOURS AND, AFTER STOPPING AT SEVERAL DIFFERENT LOCATIONS, RICE TOLD McNEIL, "I KNOW WHERE WE CAN MAKE SOME MONEY." RICE X DIRECTED HIM TO THE NICKOLOFF RESIDENCE. WHILE ENROUTE, RICE MADE THE FOLLOWING COMMENTS AS TOLD TO US BY McNEIL:

"I'VE VISITED NEXT DOOR."

"WE'LL TAKE THEM BY SURPRISE."

"WE'LL GO IN AND TAKE WHATEVER."

McNEIL SAID BOTH OF THEM WENT TO THE FRONT DOOR AND, RECEIVING NO ANSWER, PROCEEDED TO THE BACK DOOR. McNEIL SAID HE KNOCKED ON THE DOOR AND CHIEF DID THE TALKING WHICH INCLUDED THE REQUEST TO USE THE PHONE. THE DOOR HAD BEEN OPENED BY MRS. NICKOLOFF WHO DIRECTED CHIEF TO THE PHONE IN THE KITCHEN. AT THAT TIME, McNEIL SAID HE ASKED TO USE THE BATHROOM. MRS. NICKOLOFF DIRECTED HIM TO THE BATHROOM WHILE CHIEF MADE USE OF THE PHONE. McNEIL SAID HE WALKED PAST MR. NICKOLOFF WHO WAS SEATED, WATCHING TV.

(he was in the kitchen)

McNEIL, WHO HAD WALKED THROUGH THE KITCHEN AND THE LIVING ROOM TO GET TO THE BATHROOM, RETURNED TO THE KITCHEN AND ASKED FOR A GLASS OF WATER. MRS. NICKOLOFF, WHO WAS EATING AT THE TIME, POINTED TO THE CUPBOARD CONTAINING THE GLASSES. McNEIL SAID HE DRANK THE GLASS OF WATER WHILE MRS. NICKOLOFF CONTINUED EATING. McNEIL THEN APPROACHED CHIEF WHO WAS STANDING IN THE LIVING ROOM TALKING TO MR. NICKOLOFF. McNEIL RETURNED TO THE KITCHEN AND ASKED FOR A SECOND GLASS OF WATER. AFTER FINISHING THAT, HE TURNED AND LOOKED TOWARD THE LIVING ROOM. HE SAW CHIEF HOLDING A KNIFE IN HIS RIGHT HAND WHICH WAS AT HIS SIDE. McNEIL SAID MRS. NICKOLOFF MUST HAVE SEEN THE KNIFE AT THE SAME TIME BECAUSE SHE STOOD UP AND YELLED SOMETHING. McNEIL SAID HE GRABBED HER BY THE NECK, THEN FORCED HER TO THE FLOOR. HE PLACED HIS KNEE ON HER TO HOLD HER DOWN, THEN PROCEEDED TO STAB HER WITH A KNIFE HE REMOVED FROM HIS JACKET POCKET. AT THE SAME TIME, HE COULD HEAR WHAT HE ASSUMED TO BE "STABBING SOUNDS" COMING FROM THE LIVING ROOM. JUST PRIOR TO THAT SOUND, HE HEARD CHIEF YELL SOMETHING ALTHOUGH HE IS NOT SURE WHAT. AT FIRST, HE THOUGHT IT WAS CHIEF YELLING, "DIE!" BUT HE IS NOT SURE IF THAT WAS THE WORD USED. McNEIL SAID HE THOUGHT HE STABBED MRS. NICKOLOFF "ABOUT 25 TIMES" AND SHE STOPPED YELLING "AFTER THE THIRD STAB." WHEN ASKED TO DESCRIBE HER POSITION ON THE FLOOR, McNEIL SAID SHE WAS FACE DOWN WITH HER HEAD AGAINST A WALL. McNEIL SAID HE USE A "CASE" NIFE AND THAT ALL THE STAB WOUNDS WERE TO THE BACK, NONE TO THE CHEST.

McNEIL SAID CHIEF CAME INTO THE DOORWAY DIVIDING THE KITCHEN/ DINING ROOM AND SAID, "COME ON." BOTH WALKED THROUGH THE LIVING ROOM AND PAST MR. NICKOLOFF. BOTH LOOKED INTO THE SOUTH (MR. NICKOLOFF'S) BEDROOM, THEN THE MIDDLE BEDROOM. McNEIL SAID HE RETURNED TO THE SOUTH BEDROOM WHERE HE BEGAN TO REMOVE A COLOR TV SET. AT THE SAME TIME HE COULD HEAR CHIEF GOING THROUGH SOME PAPERS AND DRAWERS IN THE OPPOSITE CORNER OF THE BEDROOM. CHIEF PROCEEDED TO THE MIDDLE BEDROOM WHERE HE REMOVED A SMALL TV SET FROM A CABINET IN THE NORTHWEST CORNER OF THE ROOM. McNEIL SAID HE CARRIED THE TV FROM THE SOUTH BEDROOM TO THE MIDDLE BEDROOM AT WHICH POINT HE BEGAN TO OPEN THE CABINET DOORS. ABOUT THIS TIME, "CHIEF CAME IN AND GOT ME AND WE LEFT." BOTH EXITED THE BACK DOOR AND PROCEEDED TO McNEIL'S VEHICLE. McNEIL SAID HE SAW A SMALL TV IN THE BACK SET. THE SET HE REMOVED FROM THE SOUTH BEDROOM AND CARRIED OUT THE BACK DOOR WAS ALSO PLACED IN THE BACK SEAT. McNEIL SAID HE BACKED OUT OF THE DRIVEWAY AND PROCEEDED EAST ON KAYS TO LATERAL A, THEN SOUTH TO KILES KORNER, THEN EAST ON W. WAPATO ROAD. DURING THIS PERIOD OF TIME, CHIEF TOLD McNEIL, "DON'T SAY ANYTHING TO ANYONE."

McNEIL SAID THEY DROVE TO A RESIDENCE, HE REFUSED TO NAME THE LOCATION OR THE OWNER, WHERE THEY CLEANED UP. PRIOR TO THIS, CHIEF HAD REMOVED THE SHIRT HE WAS WEARING AND PLACED IT ON THE FLOORBOARD, PASSENGER SIDE, OF THE CAR. McNEIL SAID BOTH OF THEM HAD A LARGE AMOUNT OF BLOOD ON THEIR HANDS AND THEY USED TO KITCHEN SINK AT THE ABOVE LOCATION TO CLEAN UP. ACCORDING TO McNEIL, NEITHER HE OR CHIEF WORE GLOVES DURING THE ATTACKS.

McNEIL SAID THEY DROVE TO THE SAMMY LOPEZ RESIDENCE WHERE THEY TOLD HIM THEY HAD TWO TV'S FOR SALE. LOPEZ ACCOMPANIED THEM TO AN UNKNOWN LOCATION WHERE THE SET WAS SOLD FOR $50, $40 IN CASH AND $10 WORTH OF MARIJUANA. McNEIL SAID HE WAS GIVEN ABOUT $15 BY CHIEF AFTER THE MONEY HAD BEEN HANDED TO CHIEF BY LOPEZ. McNEIL THEN DROVE LOPEZ BACK TO HIS RESIDENCE, DROPPED CHIEF OFF AT HIS ON HWY 97, THEN PROCEEDED HOME.

Death penalty filing upheld

Judge says prosecutor acted properly in Nickoloff murder case

By GARY E. NELSON
Of the Herald-Republic

Yakima County Prosecutor Jeff Sullivan acted properly, the trial judge ruled Tuesday, when he decided to seek the death penalty against two young men accused of aggravated first-degree murder in the stabbing deaths of an elderly Parker couple.

Attorneys for defendants Russell McNeil and Herbert Rice had argued that Sullivan should be ordered to explain why he is seeking the penalty for the first time since he was first elected prosecutor in 1974. But Yakima County Superior Court Judge F. James Gavin ruled that Sullivan properly asked defense attorneys to present mitigating factors before he made the decision, and need not defend his reasoning.

Rice and McNeil are accused of stabbing Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff to death in the couple's rural Parker farmhouse in January 1978. The cases against them are the county's first capital cases since 1938.

McNeil's trial is now scheduled to begin Sept. 5, with Rice's trial to follow beginning Oct. 23. Both will offer defenses generally denying the charges, and will not offer affirmative defenses, such as insanity or self-defense, their attorneys said.

Yakima County Superior Court Judge F. James Gavin listens Tuesday to a variety of motions preceding the Nickoloff murder trial.

The defendants, both of whom will turn 19 next month, were 17 when the murders they are charged with occurred. Their trials were postponed indefinitely earlier this year while

The high court ruled last month that the constitution does not bar such executions.

Gavin, who will preside over the two trials, heard a variety of motions Monday and scheduled later hearings on other matters in the complex cases.

Gavin postponed until July 24 a ruling on defense requests to bar the press and public from a pretrial evidence-suppression hearing. The hearing is to decide whether taped statements the defendants made to police after their arrests may be used as evidence during their trials.

Prosecutors and attorneys for Rice said they would not object to holding the hearing after a jury is selected for that trial, which would remove any need to close the hearing.

But Chris Tait, attorney for McNeil, objected to holding the hearing after jury selection, arguing that would restrict his questioning of potential jurors.

Court rulings on the question of open, or closed pretrial hearings have attempted to balance the right of the public to an open justice system with the right of a defendant to a fair trial, both of which are protected by the Constitution.

Also Monday, Gavin agreed to order McNeil's attorneys to turn over a letter the defendant wrote to his girlfriend while in jail after his arrest. The letter was later given to Tait's office by McNeil's mother, prosecutors said.

with only Tait, an associate and Tait's co-counsel Tom Bothwell present, Gavin ruled Tait must turn over the letter. Tait and Bothwell had asked for the private meeting to explain to Gavin why the letter was protected by attorney-client privilege from disclosure to prosecutors.

Tait and Bothwell said they may ask the state Court of Appeals to review Gavin's ruling.

In their challenge to Sullivan's capital punishment decision, defense attorneys argued that it is unclear why Sullivan picked this case to seek the death penalty. Sullivan has never before sought the penalty since he was elected prosecutor in 1974.

He has had several opportunities, defense attorneys argued, including several cases of aggravated first-degree murder, the only crime that can result in the death penalty under state law.

"We've had people coming up with machine guns, and mowing down strangers, killing one and maiming another," Bothwell said. "No death penalty was filed in that case. In fact, aggravated first-degree murder was not even charged in that case."

Deputy prosecutor Howard Hansen said a case in Pierce County that resulted in a similar challenge led to the Supreme Court upholding that prosecutor's choice, after the prosecutor was ordered to take the witness stand and defend it. Another case, in which a special penalty was thrown out, resulted from an overly rigid selection procedure, Hansen said.

Gavin ruled that Sullivan, like the Pierce County prosecutor, gave defense attorneys an opportunity to present evidence of mitigating circumstances affecting their clients before he decided to seek the death penalty.

Michael Frost, defense attorney for Herbert Rice, listens during Tuesday's courtroom session in the Nickoloff murder case.

That opportunity, the state Supreme Court said, provided the "safety valve" to prevent arbitrary application of the death penalty. Gavin agreed, and said Sullivan need not justify his decision further.

Letter ruling in Nickoloff case will be appealed

By GARY E. NELSON

Of the Herald-Republic

Attorneys for capital murder defendant Russell Duane McNeil will ask the state supreme court to let them keep from producing a letter McNeil wrote to his wife after his arrest.

Prosecutors want the letter, saying it is evidence in the case and should be turned over to them.

McNeil's attorneys, who were given the letter by a relative of McNeil, say it is protected by attorney-client privilege. McNeil is scheduled to stand trial Sept. 5 for the murders of elderly Parker residents Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff, who were found stabbed to death in their Parker farmhouse in January 1988. Co-defendant Herbert "Chief" Rice will face a separate trial scheduled to begin Oct. 23.

Yakima County Prosecuting Attorney Jeff Sullivan is seeking the death penalty against both defendants, who were 17 when the murders occurred. Both will turn 19 next month.

Judge F. James Gavin said during a pre-trial hearing in Yakima County Superior Court on Wednesday that he wants the case to proceed as rapidly as possible. But the matter of the letter could delay that process.

Attorneys Chris Tait and Tom Bothwell explained to Gavin last week why they believe the letter should remain in their hands in an unusual session closed to the public and even to prosecutors.

After that explanation, however, Gavin ruled they must turn over the letter to prosecutors, and gave them until noon Wednesday to do so.

In court Wednesday, Tait and Bothwell told Gavin they will appeal his ruling to the Supreme Court, and asked him to stay his order until that is accomplished.

"If the contents of this letter are ever disclosed, irreparable, irretrievable damage will be done to the defense case," Bothwell told Gavin.

Deputy prosecutor Howard Hansen objected to delaying the trial, and told Gavin that if a stay is ordered, the Supreme Court should do it.

Gavin agreed, saying he is convinced his ruling was correct. Instead of a stay, Gavin postponed the effective date of his order requiring the defense to produce the letter until noon, Aug. 11.

Attorneys mull closed hearing Taped statements of Nickoloff murder suspects at issue

By MARK WALKER
of the Herald-Republic

Yakima County Prosecutor Jeff Sullivan has issued a written opinion contending that closing a hearing regarding statements made by murder defendants Herbert Rice Jr. and Russell McNeil is probably the right thing to do under existing state law.

Sullivan's opinion released Friday closes case law in Washington that allows judges to close pre-trial hearings when it is shown that disclosure of information about a case could severely hamper a defendant's right to a fair trial.

The opinion was written after attorneys suggested to Judge F. James Gavin that recorded statements taken from Rice and McNeil following their arrests in connection with the January 1987 stabbing deaths of Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff of Parker could be prejudicial if reported and severely hamper efforts to seat an impartial jury.

The two defendants, both age 17 when they were arrested, are charged with aggravated first-degree murder and could face the death penalty if convicted.

Defense attorneys have indicated they want to close a hearing where taped statements from the defendants could be played, although neither side has filed a formal motion asking the hearing be closed to the public. Defense attorneys have said the tapes are so sensational that their disclosure would virtually rule out the chances of a fair trial.

"If the court can find there is a substantial risk in receiving a fair trial, then I believe the court can close the hearing," Sullivan said after issuing his opinion on the closure issue.

Rick Hoffman, one of two attorneys representing Rice, said he doesn't think the tape needs to be played to decide the admissibility of the statements.

"But if the court decides the tapes must be played, then we would join in asking the hearing be closed," Hoffman said.

Sullivan said that he believes the hearing could be open to reporters if they agree beforehand to report only that information attorneys and the judge agree can be disseminated.

"We have been able to work out such agreements in the past and if the media makes a request, I would be willing to work with the media," Sullivan said.

A trial date for Rice and McNeil has not been set pending the outcome of a case before the U.S. Supreme Court regarding the application of the death penalty to defendants who are convicted of committing murder when they were juveniles.

Gavin has ruled that McNeil's trial start 60 days after that decision has been rendered.

The Supreme Court decision on the juvenile death penalty is expected to be issued late this summer or early next fall.

Ollie Humphrey, a centurarian whose life has paralleled and been intertwined with Washington's life as a state, recalls the past with his daughter, Margaret O'Neill, 63, of Scottsdale, Ariz. Humphrey was a cattle rancher and wheat farmer near Tilton.

Decision affects 3 youths in state

The Associated Press

At least three young men accused of killing elderly victims in Washington state will be affected by a U.S. Supreme Court ruling yesterday that said states may execute juveniles who committed their crimes at ages 16 and 17, prosecutors said.

Prosecutor Jeff Sullivan and Dan Clem, Kitsap County prosecuting attorney, said they anticipated the decision. The 5-4 ruling said the death penalty for older juvenile killers does not violate the Constitution's ban on "cruel and unusual punishment."

Sullivan is seeking the death penalty against Russell McNeill and Herbert Rice. McNeill and Rice were 17 when they allegedly stabbed an elderly Yakima Valley couple to death in January 1988 in a robbery that netted two television sets.

Both teens were charged with aggravated first-degree murder. McNeill's trial is scheduled to start in August and Rice will go on trial 60 days later. Their trials had been delayed pending today's Supreme Court decision. Clem recently filed notice that he will seek the death penalty against Michael Furman, who was 17 when he allegedly killed an 85-year-old Port Orchard woman in April. Furman's trial is scheduled for September. Clem said he was "not surprised" by the high court's ruling, but anticipated a bigger majority in favor of executing older juveniles.

Teresa McMahill of the Washington Coalition to Abolish the Death Penalty in Seattle said the court's ruling was disturbing, especially in light of its decision last year that executing 15-year-olds was unconstitutional.

"The court is out of step with evolving standards of decency," she said. "Juries are not sentencing juveniles to death at any great rate."

Death sentences for juveniles probably will not increase in the wake of the ruling, she said. While the public generally supports the death penalty, "when you refine the question to include juveniles and the mentally retarded, there is a dramatic change," she said, "and people don't support it."

Prosecutors expected ruling on executing teens

By The Associated Press

Prosecutors in Washington counties where teen-agers face possible death sentences said they anticipated Monday's U.S. Supreme Court ruling that states may execute juveniles who commit crimes at ages 16 and 17.

At least three young men accused of killing elderly victims in Washington state will be affected by the high court's 5-4 ruling, which said the death penalty for older juvenile killers does not violate the U.S. Constitution's ban on "cruel and unusual punishment."

The cases involve defendants who were 17 when they allegedly committed their crimes.

Meanwhile, groups opposed to the death penalty said the Supreme Court's split ruling flies in the face of public sentiment against executing teen-agers and mentally ill defendants.

In Yakima County, Prosecutor Jeff Sullivan has asked for the death penalty against two 18-year-olds accused of aggravated first-degree murder. Dan Clem, Kitsap County prosecuting attorney, also has asked that an 18-year-old be sentenced to death upon conviction.

Both Sullivan and Clem said they anticipated the court's ruling which involved Kentucky and Missouri murders committed by teenage boys. Both said the younger the defendant, the harder it is to convince a jury the death penalty is appropriate.

"Clearly, if somebody is mentally ill or very young, that is a factor that would be considered by prosecutor and jury," Sullivan said. "The younger they are, the more difficult it is" to gain a death sentence.

Sullivan is seeking the death penalty against Russell McNeil and Herbert Rice, both 18, who were 17 when they allegedly stabbed an elderly Yakima Valley couple to death in January 1988 in a robbery that netted two television sets. Killed were Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff.

Both teens were charged with aggravated first-degree murder. McNeil's trial is scheduled to start in August and Rice will go on trial 60 days later.

Their trials had been delayed pending Monday's Supreme Court decision.

Clem recently filed notice that he will seek the death penalty against Michael Furman, who was 17 when he allegedly killed an 85-year-old Port Orchard woman in April. Furman had gone door to door seeking odd jobs, and allegedly killed the woman after an argument.

Furman's trial is scheduled for September.

The court's ruling goes against public opinion, claimed an opponent of the death penalty.

Teresa McMahon of the Washington Coalition to Abolish the Death Penalty in Seattle said the court's ruling was disturbing, especially in light of its decision last year that executing 15-year-olds was unconstitutional.

"The court is out of step with evolving standards of decency," she said. "Juries are not sentencing juveniles to death at any great rate."

Death sentences of juveniles probably will not increase in the wake of the court's ruling, she said.

While the public generally supports the death penalty, "when you refine the question to include juveniles and the mentally retarded, there is a dramatic change and people don't support it," she said.

Sullivan said prosecuting attorneys feared the Supreme Court would instruct states to refer the issue to their legislatures.

NICKOLOFFS

More than a year has passed since elderly Parker residents Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff were viciously stabbed to death in their rural farmhouse, and still the case has generated more questions than answers.

By GARY
E. NELSON
Of the Herald-Republic

Firefighters and sheriff's detectives summoned to the couple's home at Kays Road and Lateral B last Jan. 7 found a horrifying scene. The bodies had been stabbed so many times that investigators at first thought the murder weapon was a shotgun.

County Coroner Leonard Birkinbine said the scene was the worst he had ever encountered.

Autopsy reports later revealed Dorothy Nickoloff had been stabbed more than 75 times. Her husband had wounds to his hands indicating he had tried to ward off the blows.

Other details are still sketchy. Yakima County Superior Court Judge F. James Gavin ordered the official court file in the case sealed to prevent publicity from jeopardizing the trial.

Neighbors and relatives of the Nickoloffs must wait several more months for the answers to questions that may, after all, be unanswerable:

Why were two harmless, frail people so brutally murdered?

Were the murder suspects involved with illegal drugs?

Why were two television sets missing from the couple's home? Was robbery the motive, or only an afterthought to provide a reason, however flimsy, for what was fundamentally an irrational crime?

How could two 17-year-old youths possibly commit such an atrocity? And if they did, what punishment should they receive?

Even the question of punishment is unresolved, and will remain so until the U.S. Supreme Court rules this spring in two cases expected to decide whether it is constitutional to execute defendants who were under 18 years old when they committed their crimes.

The case against Herbert "Chief" Rice and Russell Duane McNeil is on hold until after that ruling is handed down. The two young men, both 18 now, could see their 19th birthdays come and go before facing trial.

Both were born in August.

They were arrested last January, two weeks after the Jan. 7 murders, and have been in jail ever since. Each is charged with aggravated first-degree murder, the only crime in Washington punishable by death.

The only other penalty possible for aggravated first-degree murder is life in prison without possibility of parole.

Yakima County Prosecuting Attorney Jeff Sullivan decided last summer to seek the death penalty if Rice and McNeil are convicted. But defense attorneys challenged the constitutionality of applying that penalty to juveniles, arguing that to do so would constitute cruel and unusual punishment, which is prohibited under the Eighth Amendment to the Constitution.

The case was postponed while defense attorneys asked the state Supreme Court to rule on the issue. It refused to do so.

At that point, it appeared the case would proceed without waiting for the U.S. Supreme Court to rule. But only last month, Gavin granted defense requests to delay the trial until after the ruling.

The high court ruled last year that it is unconstitutional to execute juveniles under the age of 16, but is now considering two cases which would decide the issue for all persons up to age 18.

Still unresolved is the question of whether Rice and McNeil can receive a fair trial in Yakima County. Gavin will rule on that issue before the trials begin. The defendants will be tried separately, McNeil first, Gavin has decided.

McNeil's trial will begin within 60 days of the high court ruling, Rice's within 120 days. That means the first trial likely will begin in August, and the second in October.

Pair to be tried as adults in

By GARY E. NELSON
Of the Herald-Republic

The two 17-year-olds accused of brutally stabbing an elderly Parker couple will be tried as adults for the crimes, a Yakima County Superior Court Judge ruled Monday.

Judge Walter Stauffacher told a crowded courtroom that the case meets all seven of the applicable criteria necessary to shift jurisdiction to adult court. In particular, Stauffacher cited the brutality of the crime and the maturity of the defendants in announcing his ruling.

Herbert A. "Chief" Rice and Russell Duane McNeil, both 17, are charged with aggravated first-degree murder for the slayings.

Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff, both elderly and in ill health, were found dead in their home Jan. 7. Both had been stabbed repeatedly.

The criteria fall into four groups, Stauffacher said: the nature of the offense; the judicial proceedings involved; the individual involved; and the protection of the public and potential for rehabilitating the individual.

In court Monday, Stauffacher cited autopsy results that showed Dorothy Nickoloff was stabbed 75 to 85 separate times. Mike Nickoloff's wounds were such that a detective on the scene thought at first the man had been hit with a shotgun blast, Stauffacher said.

"The fury and the frenzy that is demonstrated through the autopsy reports indicate that it has to be the product of either a psychopathic or sociopathic individual," he said.

The crime involved both people and property, Stauffacher said, noting that two television sets were missing from the Nickoloff home. And evidence gathered by detectives establishes probable cause to proceed to trial.

McNeil and Rice are mature, living independent of their parents and supporting themselves, Stauffacher said. Both will turn 21 in August of this year, and Stauffacher noted that their birthdays are just two days apart.

Stauffacher said he saw no possibility that the two could be rehabilitated in the juvenile detention system.

If convicted as juveniles, Rice and McNeil could be held in custody only until they turn 21, and could be eligible for a minimum-security facility in their home community after serving 60 percent of the sentence.

If convicted of aggravated first-degree murder as adults, they could face the death penalty or life in prison without possibility of parole.

Each will be arraigned on two counts of aggravated murder this week. When that happens, Prosecuting Attorney Jeff Sullivan will have 30 days to decide whether to seek the death penalty in the case.

In the meantime, Rice is being held on $300,000 bail, McNeil on $250,000. Sullivan asked Stauffacher to order the two held without bail, but the judge elected to maintain the bail amounts originally set in the case.

He did, however, order that bail could be posted only in cash or in the form of a bail bond.

Closed hearing asked in double-murder case

Defense argues taped statements could jeopardize election of jury

By GARY E. NELSON
Of the Herald-Republic

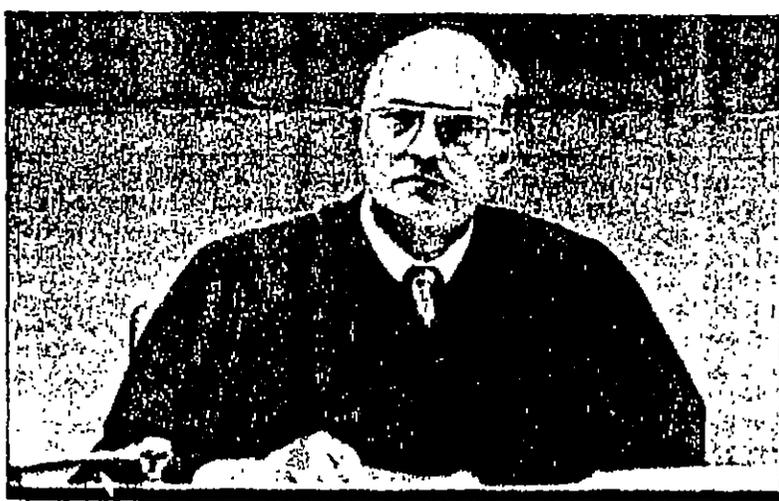

A Superior Court judge will decide soon whether to exclude the press and public from a pretrial hearing in the capital case of Russell Duane McNeil and Herbert "Chief" Rice.

Judge F. James Gavin heard motions in the double-murder case Monday, including requests from defense attorneys to close a hearing that will determine whether to admit into evidence recorded statements the defendants made to police when they were arrested.

Rice and McNeil are charged with aggravated first-degree murder for the stabbing deaths of Ike and Dorothy Nickoloff, an elderly Parker couple, in January 1978. They both could face the death penalty if convicted.

The crime carries only two penalties under state law: death, life in prison without possibility of parole.

Also Monday, attorneys for Rice and McNeil revealed what their clients' defenses will be when the case goes to trial later this year.

Superior Court Judge F. James Gavin listens to pretrial motions Monday. Defense attorneys want the press and public to be excluded from a pretrial hearing in the double-murder case.

McNeil will be tried first, then Rice.

The trials have been delayed until after the U.S. Supreme Court rules in two cases that involve the constitutionality of executing defendants who were juveniles when they committed their crimes. Rice and McNeil both were 17 when the Nickoloffs were killed.

The high court ruling is expected in June, and the first trial is scheduled to start within 60 days thereafter.

Defense attorneys told Gavin on Monday that tape recordings of statements the defendants made to police are so sensational that they would jeopardize their clients' ability to receive a fair trial if the details were publicized in advance.

Prosecutors want to play the tapes in court so Gavin can decide whether to admit the statements into evidence during trial.

"It seems to me that there is only one significant effect of that procedure, and that is to generate prejudicial pretrial publicity," said

Michael Frost, a Seattle attorney representing Rice. "I would submit that there is a real possibility of poisoning the well of prospective jurors in Yakima County."

Frost suggested that the evidentiary hearing be held after a jury is selected for the trial, which would allow the court to order jurors not to read or listen to news reports.

Chris Tait, attorney for McNeil, said, "There is material in these statements that is highly inflammatory and would captivate the attention of anyone who hears it."

Deputy Prosecutor Howard Hansen said the reason for holding the hearing this far in advance of the trial was to reduce any effect of publicity on the selection of an impartial jury. Jeff Sullivan, Yakima County prosecuting attorney, said the prosecution also would like to avoid publicity of the hearing, but noted that courts have ruled the press and public have a right to open courtrooms.

Sullivan suggested a meeting be held with news media representatives, who would be asked to agree not to report the proceedings until after jury selection was complete. That procedure has worked in the past, he said.

Gavin said he will listen to the tapes to determine whether they pose a significant threat to a fair trial, and asked attorneys in the case to prepare briefs outlining previous court rulings on closed court hearings. No date was set for a subsequent hearing on the matter.

Later in Monday's all-day court hearing, defense attorneys revealed the defenses their clients will rely on during their trials.

Tait said McNeil will deny that the murders were premeditated, a claim the prosecution must prove to convict the two of first-degree murder.

In addition, Tait said, his client will deny striking any fatal blows to either victim.

Police and autopsy reports indicated the Nickoloffs were repeatedly stabbed, Mrs. Nickoloff as many as 75 times.

McNeil will not claim insanity or incompetence to stand trial, Tait said, and will not rely on alibi.

Frost said Rice will present a defense of "general denial," which he said will force the prosecution to prove each element of the crime charged. Rice also will not claim insanity or incompetence to stand trial, and will not rely on alibi, Frost said.

Plea to cut bail to allow visit to ill mom denied

By GARY NELSON
Of the Herald-Republic

Herbert "Chief" Rice Jr. asked a judge Thursday to reduce his bail so he could visit his dying mother, but the request by the capital murder defendant was denied.

Rice, 18, is charged, along with Russell Duane McNeil, in the January 1988 slayings of Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff, an elderly Parker couple who were stabbed to death in their rural farmhouse. The two defendants face the death penalty if convicted, and if the U.S. Supreme Court upholds the constitutionality of executing defendants who were juveniles when they committed their crimes.

Rice and McNeil both were 17 when the murders occurred. Their trials have been delayed until after the high court ruling, expected in June.

Rice's attorney, Rick Hoffman, told Yakima County Superior Court Judge F. James Gavin on Thursday that his client's mother is dying in a hospital near Spokane. The young man's grandmother, who lives in Prosser, is in declining health, Hoffman said.

"Mr. Rice would like to be able to see her before that option is forever closed," Hoffman said.

He also said Rice has changed since his arrest.

"This young man that stands before you now is a different person than the one who was arrested more than a year ago," Hoffman said.

Rice has family and friends who will provide him a support network, a place to live and a job, Hoffman told the judge. They also will require conditions of him beyond those the judge might impose if he were released, Hoffman said.

Hoffman asked that Rice's bail be reduced from $300,000 to $100,000, which he said Rice's family might be able to meet. Bail rules allow defendants to post a percentage of the amount in cash or put up property to be released on bond.

"I haven't seen my mother since I was a kid, 8 years old," Rice told the judge.

"It's not easy standing here in front of you," he continued. "I don't know my mom real well, and my grandma, she kind of raised me for a little while, and I'm real close to her," Rice said.

State law says no defendant in a capital case may be released at all unless conditions are imposed that reasonably assure he will show up for trial, the release will not substantially interfere with the administration of justice, and he will not pose an unreasonable risk to the community.

Deputy Prosecutor Howard Hansen said the prosecution is uncomfortable with any bail at all for Rice, preferring he be held without bail.

"I believe that it is just a situation that the assurances that are needed in a case like this just aren't there," Hansen said.

In denying Rice's motion, Gavin said a capital case is like no other.

He said he had received a number of letters from supporters of Rice, asking him to grant the motion.

"Many of them are quite compelling," Gavin said.

He observed that bail rules address the procedures for defendants, but do not address the rights of crime victims or their families. Gavin also noted that Rice himself might be at risk if he were released.

"There is still a substantial risk of interfering with the administration of justice," Gavin said, and a real danger Rice might flee.

The death penalty, he said, "is a very strong reason for not wishing to show up."

Elderly couple killed

PARKER — An elderly married couple were killed Thursday evening in their Kays Road home in what authorities said appeared to be a burglary.

Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff were found dead shortly before 7 p.m. by relatives who stopped by to check on the couple, authorities said. Yakima County Coroner Leonard Birkinbine estimated the shootings occurred about 5 p.m.

Firefighters from Parker were called to the scene at 7:04 p.m. and were soon followed by police.

Birkinbine and detectives from the Yakima County Sheriff's Department remained late Thursday at the Nickoloffs' home just west of Lateral B on Kays Road. One detective said it would be several hours before the police investigation progressed to where the bodies could be removed.

Sheriff Doug Blair and Birkinbine said it appeared the victims died from gunshot wounds. However, the causes of death in suspected homicides typically aren't established officially until autopsies are completed.

A neighbor, who asked not to be named, said Nickoloff was in his 80s and his wife was in her 70s. The couple had lived in the home for at least 40 years, the neighbor said.

"Why would anybody come in and just shoot them down? They didn't have anything of great value," the neighbor said. "It was just an ordinary house."

Nickoloff was a retired orchardist, the neighbor added.

Teens held in couple's slayings

Completed from Herald-Republic staff reports
 ● Britches say a reward fund started by concerned citizens prompted a tip that led to the arrest of two Toppenish youths Wednesday in connection with the slaying of an elderly Parker couple earlier this month.

The two 17-year-olds being held for questioning in the Jan. 7 stabbing deaths of Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff are expected to make their first court appearance Friday.

They were arrested by Yakima County Sheriff's deputies early Wednesday and are being held without bail at the county juvenile detention center. Their names were not released.

Yakima County Prosecutor Jeff Sullivan said he is directing Deputy Prosecutor Bob Northcott to ask the court to remand the youths to Superior Court, where they would be treated as adults.

Sheriff Doug Blair announced the arrests Wednesday morning, saying a citizen's tip and detectives' investigation led authorities to the two youths.

Both were arrested at their respective family homes outside Toppenish, Blair said.

The sheriff later confirmed that two knives have been confiscated in connection with the arrests, including one discovered Tuesday at an unspecified site in the Lower Valley.

The other knife was seized when the youths were arrested.

Blair said detectives believe burglary was the motive for the slayings. The bodies were discovered by relatives inside the couple's home on Kays Road just west of Lateral B.

Two television sets authorities believe belonged to the Nickoloffs were discovered and seized as evidence, Blair said.

Mike Nickoloff, 82, was a retired orchardist. Both he and his wife, Dorothy, 74, had what appeared to be defensive stab wounds, indicating they had fought with the assailant.

Each was stabbed more than 12 times. Burglary is the only known motive for the slayings, Blair said.

Under state law, the youths arrested Wednesday can be held for three days from the time of arrest, then must appear in court or be released.

Northcott said he was awaiting written reports before he could schedule a court hearing. The pair likely will appear for arraignment in juvenile court Friday morning, he said.

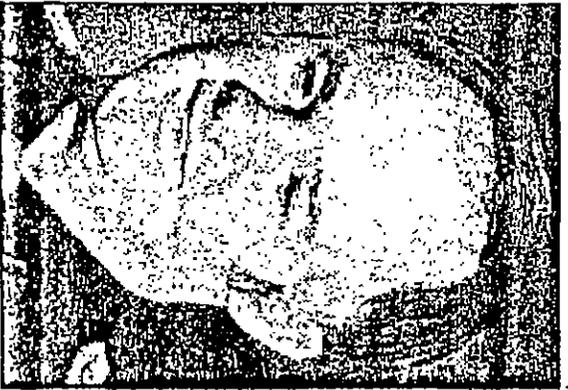

Sullivan said he wants the case remanded to adult court because of the boys' age and the nature of the crimes.

It was not known Wednesday if the boys are employed, enrolled in school or both.

Reports of the arrests were greeted with relief in the close-knit, rural farming neighborhood that was shocked by the brutality of the killings.

"I'm so damn happy I'm crying," said Ed Simmond Wednesday after learning that the reward he had been helping collect since Jan. 11 was a main factor in breaking the case.

Simmond had been pruning his pears with three orchard workers and had arrived back in (See ARRESTS, Page 2A)

the house just as Blair called. Simmond was elated.

"I hope this means we've spent the reward money," he said.

Sheriff's Lt. Ron Ward later was asked if the reward had anything to do with the arrests. "It had everything to do with it," he said, adding that an update story on the reward in Monday's Yakima Herald-Republic got someone's attention.

The Parker Bridge Road orchardist had known the Nickoloffs, who were originally from Bulgaria, all his life.

Simmond and three other longtime friends of the Nickoloff family initially guaranteed a $1,000 minimum. Union Gap Branch of Seafirst and Wapato Branch of Rainier National banks reported Wednesday the Nickoloff Reward Fund had grown to around $1,355.

"Farmers out here are generally very close. I think it has been difficult for everyone out here in the county," said Marlene Gill, a daughter of the murdered couple.

Gill said deputies had kept in touch with family members during the three-week investigation. On Monday evening, deputies indicated they had an important break in the probe, she said.

Gill declined to elaborate on what deputies told the family, but did say she was unaware of any ties between her parents and the two youths arrested.

The family was gratified to receive support in the form of letters, gifts, phone calls and the creation of the reward fund by neighbors, she said.

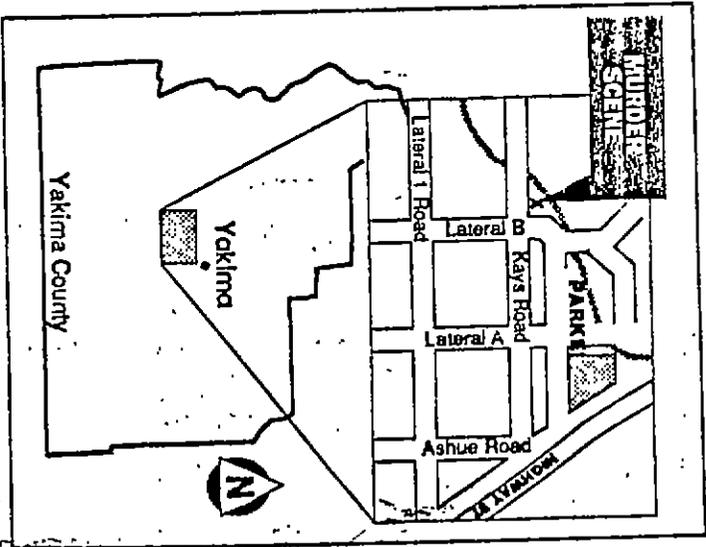

For some of those neighbors, the arrests won't signal a clear end to the tragedy.

"I thought I would be greatly relieved. But there are so many questions left unanswered," said Aileen Beddoe, whose family had lived near the Nickoloffs for decades.

They were a quiet, but friendly, couple who had operated their orchard for decades before retiring, she said.

"Yes, I'm relieved, but we will never totally recover," she said.

Said Wapato resident Jerry Wilson: "A lot of people have been sitting, watching TV with guns at their side. I think this will relieve a lot of people."

Two other rewards totaling some $3,500 have been raised for information leading to arrest and conviction in a brutal assault on Wapato High School teacher Coleman Burke last summer. Faculty members put up $1,000. Wilson and Bob Orozco started a reward drive that raised around $2,500.

Orozco said the latter sum also can be collected for information leading to conviction in the Dec. 1 murder of Joe Gonzalez, 40, of Wapato. The bludgeoned body of Gonzalez, an official of the Department of Social and Health Services office, was found Dec. 2 in a vacant lot in northeast Yakima.

Group charges civil rights violated in probe by FBI

WASHINGTON (AP) — A New York-based legal group charged Wednesday that the FBI violated the civil rights of hundreds of people in conducting a six-year investigation into organizations opposed to U.S. policies in Central America.

The FBI acknowledged that it had conducted an investigation into the Committee in Support of the People of El Salvador, or CISPES, but maintained that it was looking into "alleged criminal activity rather than the motives and beliefs of those being investigated."

And in an interview late Wednesday, Justice Department spokesman Pat Korten contended that the Center for Constitutional Rights, which has had the FBI documents for nearly two months, released the papers Wednesday because "they are attempting to influence the contra aid vote in the U.S. Congress."

"This has little, if anything, to do with the FBI and has a lot to do with their attempt to influence the Congress," Korten added. The Center for Constitutional Rights, founded in 1968 to provide "legal support to progressive movements," obtained 1,320 pages from FBI files through the Freedom of Information Act. Many of the pages contained blacked-out sentences or paragraphs, and the center said the documents represent only about a third of the government's files.

Among the organizations named in the FBI files were the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in Atlanta; the Maryknoll Sisters in Chicago; the United Steel Workers Union, the United Auto Workers Union and the National Education Association, all in Cleveland; Walker Methodist Community Church in Minneapolis; and the Women's Rape Crisis Center in Norfolk, Va.

Margaret Ratner, an attorney with the center who has studied the documents, said the FBI began its investigation in 1981 to determine if any members of CISPES, a group working to end U.S. intervention in Central America, were foreign highers, there is little chance the Sandinistas will bring in 1987," Reagan said, adding that access at the negotiating table depends on keeping the contra rebel alive.

The FBI's field offices for evidence to back up that claim said, so the focus of the investigation was turned into a "foreign intelligence-terrorist" in "even though no basis for surveillance."

"The new category allows FBI to utilize 'special techniques' that are considered illegal when applied to domestic investigations," she said.

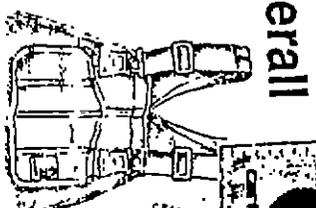

The FBI got its authority to conduct the probe from an executive order signed by President Reagan in December 1981 that allowed the bureau and the CIA to watch even if they are not suspected of breaking the law or acting on a foreign power, Ratner said. Ratner said the center is considering filing a lawsuit to stop the FBI from conducting similar investigations in the future.

Body discovered; county homicide toll rises to five

By CRAIG TROIANELLO
Of the Herald-Republic

SUNNYSIDE — Only three weeks into the new year, Yakima County's homicide rate climbed to five Monday with the discovery of a farm worker's body at a ranch about two miles west of Sunnyside.

The victim, who has not been positively identified, was found sprawled just outside a small house on the Newhouse Ranch off Concord Drive.

An autopsy is expected to be conducted today, but death is believed to have been caused by stab wounds to the lower abdomen, said Sheriff Doug Blair.

Blair said several knives, including one with blood on it, were recovered inside the house. However, testing will be required to determine if the blood is human because a chicken was apparently slaughtered in the house, Blair said.

The victim, a Hispanic male, is believed to have been in his late 20s or early 30s. His body, clad in long gray pants and a short-sleeved dress shirt, was found at about 8:30 a.m. by Steve Newhouse, whose family operates the large ranch, deputies said.

Judging from its frozen condition, the body probably had been there for several hours, said Lt. Bob Regimbal.

Blood found inside the house tends to indicate the man's wounds were inflicted inside the residence, although there are no witnesses nor suspects in the case, Blair said.

Deputies think others might have been living at the house and police were expected to question several people late Monday afternoon, Blair said.

The small house where the murder occurred is located amid grape fields and is surrounded by a multitude of orchard ladders and bins of cut fruit wood.

Al Newhouse said the victim had picked grapes at Newhouse's ranch several months ago, but was not working for the ranch at the time of his death.

The murder becomes the second such case Yakima County sheriff's deputies have had to deal with this year.

Deputies are still trying to piece together clues in the stabbing deaths of Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff, retired orchardists whose bodies were discovered Jan. 7 inside their Parker home. Both had been stabbed repeatedly. Deputies say little was taken from the house except one or possibly two televisions.

During the weekend, search and rescue personnel were scheduled to comb for possible evidence in the orchards surrounding the couple's home on Kays Road, Blair said.

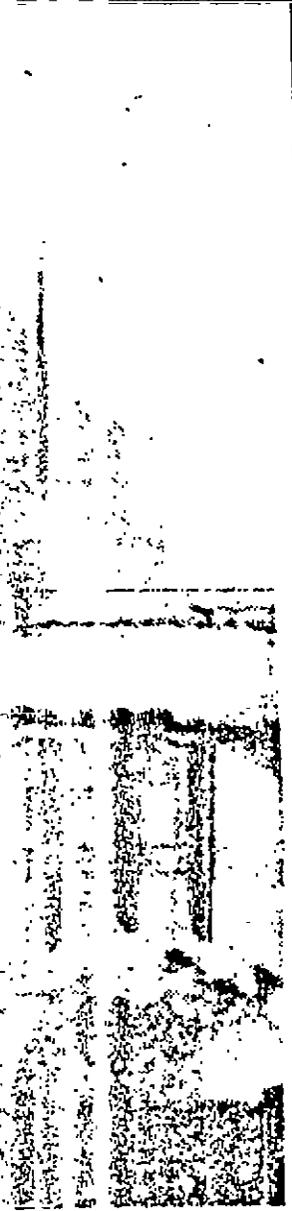

As of Monday, Yakima police had not made any arrests in the murder of Arturo Vargas. The 25-year-old Mexican national died of a single gunshot to the chest on Jan. 9. That shooting took place about 10 p.m. in the 300 block of East Spruce Street.

In the single murder case this year that has resulted in an arrest, Pedro Damacio Salgado remains held under $50,000 bail at Yakima County jail.

The 27-year-old Sunnyside resident is charged with first-degree manslaughter in the death of Jose Galvan, 43, also of Sunnyside. Galvan died of a single stab wound to the heart at the Allstate Apartments on Jan. 10.

Countywide, murders averaged about two a month last year for a total of 24 deaths, Blair said.

Sixteen of those deaths occurred in unincorporated areas of the county; the rest occurred within various city limits.

The victim, believed to have been in his late 20s or early 30s, was found on the ground just outside the door of a small house on the Newhouse Ranch at Concord Drive west of Sunnyside.

Al Newhouse identified the man as a former grape picker who had worked elsewhere for the past several months.

Deputies said there are no suspects in the case, which is the fifth murder committed in Yakima County this year.

Search fails to yield clues

PARKER — Yakima County sheriff's deputies say no new evidence turned up during a search of the orchard and other property surrounding the home of Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff, the elderly couple stabbed to death Jan. 7.

Yakima County search-and-rescue personnel combed the area during the weekend in an attempt to find new clues in the brutal slayings that shocked this rural community.

Crime experts from around the state are helping analyze what happened at the residence, said sheriff's I.I. Jerry Hafsos.

The bodies of the couple were discovered at their Kays Road home by relatives. The 83-year-old retired orchardist and his 75-year-old wife had been stabbed repeatedly and a small amount of property was reported taken from their home.

So far there are no suspects in the case, Hafsos said.

One of the Nickoloffs' friends and neighbors who started the fund said Friday it is "above $1,300 and climbing as feeling out here continues to run high." Accounts of Nickoloff Reward Fund are open in Union Gap Branch, Seafirst Bank, 2514 Main St., Union Gap,

Two other reward funds totaling about $3,140 are posted in Central Valley Bank, Wapato, for information leading to a conviction in an unprovoked assault last summer on Wapato High School teacher Coleman Burke in the school parking lot. Faculty members put up $1,000, and a separate fund started by Bob Orozco and Jerry Wilson now exceeds $2,200.

Orozco said the latter fund is flexible and also offered for information leading to arrest and conviction of the murderer or murderers of Joe Gonzalez, 40, of Wapato, an employee of the Department of Social and Health Services in Yakima. GRANGER — School officials have decided to call a halt to their pursuit of students receiving an education out of district, after learning about new regulations dealing with the problem.

During a special session Monday, Superintendent Larry Simonsen told school board directors he recently learned of regulations that allow certain seniors an automatic release from the resident district if they already have been attending another school and show a "hardship."

In addition, students who have been attending out-of-district schools with the knowledge of any school board member or the superintendent may be exempt from returning to the home district, Simonsen said.

Last summer a survey identified about 80 Granger-resident students as attending school in Sunnyside, Zillah and Toppenish schools. The loss costs Granger School District an estimated $210,000 in state funds, an amount nearly equal to the district's last levy of $225,000.

Simonsen said hearing each challenge to residency in court would cost the district a substantial amount of money without any guarantee of a return.

"In view of what we have learned and the animosity, or perhaps I should say the tensions, it creates within the district and between local school districts, the key question is do you want to persist and proceed with this or drop it?" Simonsen asked board members.

Board member Larry Sizer said he felt it would be better to drop the problem. The state clarifies the definition of residence and how it can be added. The district could add more money in the attempt to solve the problem than it would get in the process.

Simonsen suggested that the office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction and the station dealing with the problem.

Board member Tim Sizer said he wouldn't do the district's wheels and try to get it on a level. He said the district should concentrate on energy improving the district and sent a program that would stay or return to district.

Crime experts seek evidence in killings

PARKER — Crime experts from around the state are continuing to comb for evidence at the Kays Road farmhouse where an elderly couple was killed last week.

So far, the investigation into the violent stabbing deaths of Dorothy and Mike Nickoloff has not focused on a suspect or suspects, said Ron Ward, chief criminal deputy with the Yakima County Sheriff's Department.

Instead, experts in fingerprinting, psychology, blood splattering and other sciences are continuing to search the house for potential evidence, Ward said.

The bodies of the 83-year-old retired orchardist and his 75-year-old wife were found Thursday evening by a visiting son and daughter-in-law. Both had been repeatedly stabbed. Dorothy Nickoloff suffered more than a dozen stab wounds to the back. Their bodies were found in the kitchen and living room. Deputies say there were no signs of forced entry at the house located just west of Lateral B.

Public hearing set on budget requests

ELLENSBURG — Kittitas County commissioners Tuesday backed away from their previous refusal to fund a Superior Court emergency budget request, and agreed to hold a public hearing Jan. 26 to consider several amendments to the 1987 budget.

The court, which exhausted its budget last week, is seeking an additional $13,210 to pay fees for witnesses, jurors and public defenders. Commissioners turned down an $18,000 emergency request from the court and the juvenile service department. "We look for (officials) in 1988 to make prudent expenditures in all categories," the commissioner said. "We recognize that sometimes (costs) are beyond control ... but we have to address expenditures at all levels."

Lumaco said the county's 1 percent share of the state sales tax for September and October was one of the largest collections he could recall in 19 years as a commissioner.

Jubilant Gardner celebrates ruling

OLYMPIA (AP) — Washington Gov. Booth Gardner, ecstatic over a state Supreme Court ruling that lifts the threat of "catastrophic" state tax refunds, cried Thursday, "I'm declaring a state holiday!"

The jubilant governor, who had called the potential $700 million tax liability "a dark cloud hanging over Olympia," celebrated at a news conference held minutes after the court unanimously let the state off the hook.

Waving a copy of the 20-page court opinion, Gardner said he sees "no financial impact at all on the supplemental budget" now being debated in the Legislature.

OLYMPIA — A Washington State Supreme Court decision Thursday let the state off the hook for possibly hundreds of millions of dollars in tax refunds to state businesses, state officials said.

In a unanimous decision, the state high court said Washington is not required to pay refunds as a result of a U.S. Supreme Court decision declaring portions of the state's business tax unconstitutional.

The state court said that refunds are not required by law or by the state's constitution and that remedies contained in a 1967 law enacted by the state Legislature were sufficient.

The decision removed the possibility the state might have to pay refunds of up to $700 million, an action that could have wrecked the state's economic position and required sharp tax increases, Gov. Booth Gardner had warned.

Prosecutors said Thursday they will seek aggravated first-degree murder charges against two Lower Valley youths arrested in connection with the Jan. 7 stabbing deaths of Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff.

Herbert A. "Chief" Rice and Russell Duane McNeil, both 17, appeared in Yakima County Juvenile Court Thursday morning and were informed they were being held for questioning in the Nickoloff deaths, and that the state will ask they be treated as adults.

Bail for each youth was set at $100,000, despite arguments from Deputy Prosecutor Bob Northcott, who said authorities believe they represent a threat to the community and should be held without bail.

Rice and McNeil were arrested early Wednesday following what Yakima County Sheriff Doug

Blair called a citizen's tip.

The two youths appeared before Judge Stephen Brown dressed in T-shirts, pants and slip-on shoes, the standard clothing issued to those being held at the county's juvenile detention center in Yakima.

Northcott told the judge that the boys have made statements about the Nickoloff killings and that authorities have seized a variety of evidence, including two television sets taken from the Parker couple's home and two knives.

Based on Northcott's report, Brown ruled there was probable cause to continue holding the youths pending further investigation.

Northcott said the prosecutor's office intends to have Rice and McNeil treated as adults.

That requires the court conduct what is known as a declination hearing to decide whether the youths should be treated as adults or as juveniles.

Until that hearing is conducted and a determination is made, no arraignment will take place.

However, since early January, he had missed four days. But, according about 6 or 7 p.m. But he was absent the day before and day after the kill-

He was in school Monday, less than

PARKER — Public outrage over the Jan. 7 murders of Parker pioneers Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff began to be expressed Thursday through contributions to a reward for information that could identify the guilty person or persons and bring them to justice.

Friends of the retired fruit-growing couple established the "Nickoloff Reward Fund" at Rainier Bank in Wapato and SeaFirst Bank in Union Gap. The fund started with a guaranteed $1,000 minimum.

Fund spokesmen placed no ceiling on the amount, explaining that the higher the reward, the better chance of solving the murders.

Information, no matter how seemingly trivial, should be given the Yakima County Sheriff's Department's detective division by calling 575-4080, 575-4122, or 1-800-572-0490. Information will be kept confidential.

Announcement of the reward followed the funeral Wednesday for Mike Nickoloff, 82, and Dorothy Nickoloff, 74.

The funeral was attended by more than 500 mourners, including many members of other Bulgarian immigrant families of Yakima Valley. Many who came to America in the 1920s, the same time when the Nickoloffs arrived, observed a traditional Bulgarian plum wine-sipping ritual at graveside in the bitter cold in Tahoma Cemetery.

The bodies of the husband and wife were discovered in their home on Kays Road at 7 p.m. Jan. 7 by a son and a daughter-in-law. Both had multiple stab wounds in their upper torsos. Authorities said Mike Nickoloff, who had recently returned home from a nursing home, was found in his wheelchair in the living room with hand wounds that he might have received in trying to fight off an attacker. Dorothy Nickoloff's body was in the kitchen.

The modest home is still cordoned off and in sheriff's custody as investigators comb the interior for clues. Sheriff's Lt. Jerry Hafso said two televisions are believed to be missing.

The Nickoloff reward fund is one of three established by citizens of Wapato and Parker in recent months in the wake of violent crimes that included three homicides and the brutal beating of another man.

Two of the funds were started after Wapato High School teacher Col-eman Burke was attacked and seriously injured at night in the school parking lot.

A fund headed by Bob Orozco and Jerry Wilson has reached $2,140, and $1,000 fund was raised by school faculty members.

Orozco said Thursday the Burke attackers have not been apprehended and the $2,140 fund also has been made applicable leading to the apprehension of the slayer, Wapato resident, 40.

Reward offered in Lower Valley assault

By CHARLES LAMB
Herald-Republic correspondent

ZILLAH — A robbery and brutal assault Sunday on pioneer grocers Paul and Freda Lions in their Liberty Store east of here has prompted a minimum $1,000 reward offer for information leading to arrest and conviction of the two assailants.

A committee of Lower Yakima Valley friends of the victims Friday opened a "Paul and Freda Lions reward account" in Zillah Branch, Rainier National Bank, P.O. Box 657, Zillah 98953. A spokesman said contributions are being accepted at other Rainier banks, forwardable to the Zillah bank.

Yakima County sheriff's detectives said a crime occurred at 1:30 p.m. as the couple prepared to lock up their Liberty Market on Van Belle Road east of Zillah so Lions, 72, could watch the Super Bowl.

Two men described as Hispanics in their 20s and wearing blue jeans entered the store, and asked Lions the location of two small grocery items. Then, without warning, one of the men began beating Lions on the head with a third item — a can of juice.

Officers said Mrs. Lions, 69, remembers throwing something at her husband's attacker after he had knocked Lions to the floor and begun kicking him. The other intruder is reported to have struck Mrs. Lions behind the head several times with his fist, knocking her down.

Relatives said Mrs. Lions pointed to the cash register and told the men to take the money. The relatives said the intruders stopped assaulting the couple, took an undisclosed amount of cash, knocked Mrs. Lions down again and left.

The victims were treated in Sunnyside Valley Hospital, both for bruises and Lions for a lacerated hand. However, Mrs. Lions was taken to Yakima Valley Memorial Hospital Tuesday following a seizure and was still hospitalized Friday.

The Lionses — who have operated their store for 49 years — were robbed Dec. 29, 1982, and Lions received a skull fracture and jaw injuries when he was hit with a jug of anti-freeze. Relatives said his hand may have been cut Sunday trying to ward off the assailant's blows from his earlier injuries.

The injured couple heard a vehicle drive away at high speed after the Sunday robbery. A sheriff's detective Friday described a suspect vehicle as "a 1968 or '69 Chevy El Camino pickup, metallic blue with brown primer spots on the front and Cragger mag wheels on the rear."

The Lions Reward Fund — the latest of several established in the Yakima Valley in recent months involving violent crimes — specifies that if information leading to convictions comes from more than one source, money will be divided equally among informants. The offer will expire in a year, unless the case is still investigated.

Two suspects in the Jan. 7 murders of Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff of Parker were arrested Jan. 27 after some $1,800 was raised in a reward fund similar to that now started in the Lions assault and robbery case.

Two other reward amounts totaling almost $3,500 were raised after Wapato High School teacher Coleman Burke was brutally beaten last summer. Faculty members raised $1,000 and some $2,400 was raised in a fund started by Bob Orozco and Jerry Wilson of Wapato.

Orozco said the latter fund is flexible, in that it can be given for information leading to an arrest and conviction in the Dec. 1 murder of Joe Gonzalez, 40, of Wapato. The body of the Department of Social & Health Services worker was found in a northeast Yakima vacant lot Dec. 2.

Trial set for pair accused of slaying elderly couple

Two 17-year-olds accused of killing an elderly Parker couple were arraigned Wednesday in Yakima County Superior Court on aggravated first-degree murder charges.

Herbert A. "Chief" Rice and Russell Duane McNeil each are charged with one count of aggravated first-degree murder and one count of accomplice to aggravated first-degree murder for the brutal stabbing deaths of Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff Jan. 7. Their trial has been scheduled for May 2.

There are only two possible sentences for a person convicted of aggravated first-degree murder: life in prison without possibility of parole, or death. The prosecution has 30 days in which to ask for the death penalty in the case.

The defendants have 10 days to decide whether to file pleas of innocent by reason of insanity. A hearing has been scheduled today to hear defense requests to extend that 10-day period.

Rice is being held in the county jail on $300,000 bail, and McNeil on $250,000.

The court has appointed four public defenders in the case. Chris Tait and Tom Bothwell will defend Rice, and Susan Hahn and Mike Schwab will represent McNeil.

Eight escape house fire

Eight people escaped without injury from an early morning fire that destroyed a home on West Birchfield Road Wednesday.

Terrace Heights Fire Chief Stan Hankins said smoke awakened Junior and Joyce Wilkey, their three sons, Mrs. Wilkey's sister and two other guests about 4 a.m. Although the three-bedroom home had only one door, all eight people were able to get out safely, Hankins said.

All eight suffered mild smoke inhalation, and one was treated at the scene with oxygen, Hankins said.

Firefighters responded at 4:08 a.m. to find the house at 4008 W. Birchfield Road fully ablaze. The 17 firefighters were able to suppress the fire within 20 minutes, but were unable to save the dwelling, which was a total loss.

Damage to the structure and the contents was estimated at $28,000, Hankins said. Both were insured.

The residents, who escaped wearing only nightclothes, were given temporary shelter at a local motel by the American Red Cross, Hankins said.

A fire investigator was summoned to the scene.

Group to offer rewards for crime information

TOPPENISH — A group of concerned Toppenish citizens outraged over a crime epidemic in their city are organizing a bounty system.

An non-profit organization, Toppenish Against Crime, is being formed to raise money to be posted as rewards for information leading to arrest and conviction of lawbreakers.

"It's the only way private citizens can fight back," said Bob Bell, businessman and a TAC organizer.

Bell said TAC is against citizens taking the law into their own hands, noting that many frustrated crime victims around town have armed themselves.

Bell and Toppenish Chamber of Commerce President Dave Foster see TAC's reward system as a way citizens can help Toppenish police get a better grip on local crime. They said Police Chief Jim Andrews was approached on the idea and responded favorably.

"We'll sit down with the chief and work out a list of offenses, with a proposed range of reward money involving each."

Both organizers feel the system should offer an incentive for people to come forward with information needed to solve a crime and might also discourage potential lawbreakers.

"I would like it to be a permanent ongoing thing," said Bell, manager of PureGro Growers fertilizer firm. "TAC isn't something to belong to, but a contributory program."

Foster said the group plans to arrange for the Toppenish Livestock and Rodeo Association, which sponsors the Toppenish Pow Wow celebration, to receive contributions. "It has a non-profit status so contributions could be tax-deductible.

"We'll get everything in place, set up a bank account and ask people to contribute. They'll get a receipt for tax purposes.

"Also, tips or information on crimes will be confidential and, when rewards are given, recipients will be anonymous."

An instance of vandalism at the Toppenish Public Library on March 7 was the catalyst for forming TAC. A lawn hose was stuck in the book return slot and turned on shortly after 6 p.m. closing.

The running water caused $2,500 damage to flooring. No books were damaged. A similar water hose prank occurred earlier at a Hispanic Ministries chapel.

In recent weeks, three learning computers and several video cassette recorders valued at $5,400 were stolen from special education rooms at Kirkwood Elementary School.

One firm was hit so often the owner lost his insurance and it cost him $10,000 to insure with another firm.

Bell's PureGro headquarters on Washington Street has been burglarized and vandalized countless time in 11 years. "One visit, vandals broke nine windows. We found 36 big rocks inside that had been thrown so hard they caved in wall paneling across the room," Bell said.

"After our office windows were fitted with heavy steel security mesh, vandals returned one night and smashed dashboard instruments on our trucks.

"Who's doing it, and why, we don't know," Bell said. "But juveniles or adults, we want them. We'll take any sized contribution."

Crime and punishment: Death for teens?

By GARY E. NELSON
Of the Herald-Republic

When Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff, age 82 and 74 respectively, were found stabbed to death in January 1988, two television sets were missing from their rural farmhouse.

Peter Jacobson, a Thurston County farmer, was 84 when he was hacked to death with an ax in his rural home near Olympia. His assailant's got away with $3 and a watch. The year was 1931.

In both cases, teen-agers were arrested and charged with murder. Russell Duane McNeil and Herbert

"Chief" Rice are still awaiting trial for the Nickoloff killings. If they are convicted, prosecutors will ask for the death penalty.

Both were 17 when the murders took place.

Walter Dubuc was 16 when he helped a 30-year-old accomplice murder Peter Jacobson in July 1931.

He was hanged for the crime the following April at the state penitentiary in Walla Walla.

Dubuc, one of only two juveniles executed in Washington since statehood, was from Yakima.

William "Kid" White was hanged

In 1906, although his exact age is unclear. He may have been 18 when he killed a Seattle bartender during a holdup.

The governor in 1932 turned a deaf ear to the pleas of 6,000 people who signed a petition asking that Dubuc's sentence be commuted to life in prison.

On Monday, the U.S. Supreme Court will hear arguments in two cases that involve men on death row who were juveniles when they committed their crimes. The ruling in those cases, expected by June, will clear the way for Rice and McNeil to stand trial, and could remove the specter of death from that proceeding.

The high court last year ruled it unconstitutional to execute an Oklahoma youth who was 15 when he committed murder. The divided ruling left open the question of executing 16- and 17-year-olds, but the justices agreed to decide that question this year.

When news of the Nickoloff slayings broke last year, reaction from the community was swift and emotional, but when two 17-year-old boys were arrested and charged with the murders, disbelief set in. To many, the age of the suspects reflected a society undergoing disturbing changes as the 21st century approaches. A society where neglected and abused children grow up to prey on their fellow citizens, where younger and younger offenders commit ever more cold-blooded crimes.

That perception is wrapped up in the arguments for and against executing juveniles. A key concept in the debate is something called "the (See DEATH PENALTY, Page 7A)

Missouri this January executed its first inmate since 1965.

Stanford's attorneys, in addition to the broader arguments, contend that because Kentucky lacked the intensive treatment program needed to rehabilitate him, the death penalty should be precluded for him in particular.

"I get the impression that he would have been a career criminal anyway," said prosecutor Ernest Jasmin. "The earlier the age the individual begins to participate in criminal activity, the greater likelihood there is that he will remain basically a career criminal. Stanford basically fits the profile. . . . The likelihood of turning him around is going to be slim and none."

Stanford came from Louisville's low-income West End, his surroundings modest but hardly desperate.
 He apparently never knew his father; his mother, a hospital therapist, worked long hours. Until he was 6, he lived mostly with his near-invalid grandmother. By age 12, he was a drug addict. He was in and out of juvenile court, juvenile-home placements and programs for young offenders.

Stanford and his mother "tolerated one another while Kevin was at home," said one report by the state Cabinet for Human Resources. He quit school after ninth grade and fathered a child out of wedlock at 17.

"The fact that an individual might have come from a poor background or a one-parent household does not forgive him for committing a crime," Jasmin said. "It's not an excuse, as far as I'm concerned."

On Jan. 7, 1981, Baerbel Poore, 20, was alone at a Cheker Oil station next to Stanford's apartment, working nights to support an infant daughter. Stanford and two other teens decided to rob the station.

Stanford and David Buchanan, 18, sexually abused and terrorized
 Poore in the bathroom while 15-year-old Troy Johnson waited out in a car.
 Stanford then forced Poore into her car and drove with her to a wooded area, followed by the other two. Stanford gave her a last cigarette, then shot her twice in the head.

The take from the robbery was 300 cartons of cigarettes, $143.07, two gallons of gasoline and a gas can.
 The trio were arrested within the week as police investigated cigarette-peddling around the neighborhood.

Johnson's case remained in juvenile court and he testified against Stanford and Buchanan, who were tried together in August 1982.
 Buchanan did not face the death penalty because he wasn't the triggerman; he was sentenced to life.

Prison guards testified at the trial that Stanford boasted to cellmates of raping and killing Poore. His lawyers contended that was the false bravado of an adolescent, further proof of immaturity that made a death sentence wrong.

Throughout the trial, Stanford had "a smirk on his face" and would whisper taunts at him, Jasmin said.
 Robert Poore, the victim's father, said Stanford "stood there and laughed at me and Ingrid in the courroom."

Poore, a truck driver, said he would be at the Supreme Court on Monday along with his daughter Mona Mills and Baerbel's 9-year-old daughter. His wife Ingrid died of cancer in October 1987.

Court to hear arguments on death penalty for juveniles

EDITOR'S NOTE — The U.S. Supreme Court on Monday will hear arguments on two cases it will use to consider whether execution for murder committed by someone under age 18 is cruel and unusual punishment proscribed by the Constitution. This story takes a look at those two cases.

By KAREN BALL
and CHARLES WOLFE
Associated Press

As a child, Heath Wilkins liked to set fires and break into houses looking for knives and money. He plotted to poison his mother when he was 10, and at 16 he stabbed a convenience store clerk to death as she begged for her life.

Kevin Stanford plunged into crime at age 9. He was a drug addict at 12; and was arrested for robbery, burglary, assault, attempted rape and other crimes by 17. That's when he raped, robbed and murdered a gas station attendant.

Stanford and Wilkins are two of two dozen U.S. death row inmates sentenced for crimes committed before they were 18. After a splintered ruling last year, the Supreme Court picked their cases to determine if executing such youthful offenders is cruel and unusual in violation of the Constitution.

The court, which split 5-3 in throwing out a death penalty for an Oklahoma killer who committed his crime at age 15, will hear arguments Monday.

Wilkins is on Missouri's death row. State Attorney General William Webster will contend that society's "evolving standards of decency" permit execution of 16- and 17-year-olds. Most of the 37 states that allow capital punishment permit execution of those who commit murder at age 16.

Kentucky, where Stanford has spent nearly seven years awaiting execution, will argue that age, while a mitigating circumstance, should not automatically preclude a death sentence if it fits the crime. A brief by Assistant Attorney General David Smith urges the court to stick to its position that all capital cases should be considered individually, without blanket exemptions.

Death penalty opponents and attorneys for Stanford and Wilkins argue that society has always presumed juveniles to be immature and irresponsible, and has restricted their rights and responsibilities in such areas as drinking, voting and military service. They also say execution is no deterrent to crime.

To teen-agers, death is "kind of glamorous, it's 'Rambo,' it's kind of sexy. It attracts them like the flame attracts the moth," Victor Strelb told Missouri lawmakers recently when he testified in support of a measure to make 18 the minimum age for executions. He was co-counsel for William Wayne Thompson of Oklahoma, whose case the Supreme Court split on last year.

Four justices said the death penal-evolving standards of decency" in American society.

Supporters say the death penalty should apply to juveniles when it fits the crime. They point to changes in sentencing laws they say reflect the growing number of juveniles being convicted of violent crimes.

State and federal laws have been changed in recent years to make it easier to try juveniles in adult courts. In some states, like Oklahoma, 16- and 17-year-olds are automatically considered adults when they are charged with a crime such as murder, rape or kidnapping for ransom.

In Washington, the juvenile court must waive jurisdiction before any defendant under 18 can face trial in adult court.

The recognition that juvenile criminals are increasingly violent and remorseless, committing very adult crimes, is an example of evolving standards, supporters argue. Three Supreme Court justices made that argument when they dissented from last spring's decision.

Opponents of executing juveniles say the law already treats minors as less responsible members of society for a number of purposes. Juveniles cannot legally vote, drink, serve in the military, own property, sign contracts or buy a handgun, they note.

Adolescents, they argue, are much less likely to consider the consequences before they act. Teen-agers also have a tendency to see themselves as immortal, nullifying any deterrent effect the death penalty might have on an adult.

Chris Tait, one of McNeil's attorneys, says he knows of no state that has ever debated the question of executing juveniles. That issue was prominent in the Supreme Court's ruling last spring that overturned the death penalty for the Oklahoma defendant, he pointed out.

Four justices said that society's evolving standards of decency precluded executing criminals who were under 16 when they committed their crimes. A fifth justice, Sandra Day O'Connor, said she could not agree that no 15-year-old should be executed, but voted to overturn the death penalty in the Oklahoma case because that state's Legislature had never set a minimum age.

Oklahoma law provides for juvenile courts to waive jurisdiction when a defendant is under 16, but O'Connor said there was no evidence that lawmakers realized they were making 15-year-olds eligible for death when they created that law.

Tait and his co-counsel, Tom Bothwell, say the same thing is true in Washington.

"If you're going to do it to juveniles, then your death penalty statute should specifically say it's OK to do it to juveniles," Bothwell said.

Tait said he believes recent public opinion polls showing overwhelming support for the death penalty in Washington were influenced by the recent execution of serial killer Ted Bundy.

Bundy was "an absolutely unique situation," Tait said. "And I think he evoked a very emotional response from Americans."

To equate Bundy, who may have killed more than 100 people, with two teen-agers accused of killing two people, is dangerous, Tait argued.

"I think it would be a terrible mistake to equate Ted Bundy with these two kids up in the jail," he said. "They're just not the same."

"I doubt that we'll see another case like Ted Bundy in 50 years."

Public support for the death penalty also reflects a fear of the rising crime rate and frustration with a criminal justice system seen as ineffective, Tait said.

The danger, he said, is the assumption that killing criminals will solve the problem.

"For us to say that we support the death penalty because it will solve our problems is ridiculous," Tait said.

"You could kill these two kids, and that's not going to make the syringes disappear from Naches Avenue. That's not going to affect the murder rate."

Murder case extension granted

Decisions on insanity pleas, death penalty due in late May

By GARY E. NELSON
of the Herald-Examiner

Prosecutors and defense attorneys will have until late May to decide key elements of the case against two Toppensish youths accused of the brutal slaying of an elderly Parker couple, and the case may not go to trial until next fall.

At the request of both sides in the case, Yakima County Superior Court Judge F. James Gavin Tuesday extended until May 24 the deadline for defense attorneys to decide whether to file insanity pleas, and until May 27 for Yakima County Prosecutor Jeff Sullivan to decide whether to seek the death penalty.

Herbert "Chief" Rice Jr. and Russell Duane McNeil, both 17, are charged with one count each of aggravated first-degree murder and accomplice to aggravated first-degree murder for the slayings of Mike and Dorothy Nickloff. The elderly couple was repeatedly stabbed in their rural Parker home during a burglary in January. Rice and McNeil will be tried as adults in the case. Aggravated first-degree murder carries either the death penalty or life in prison without possibility of parole.

In court Tuesday, defense attorneys told Gavin they needed more time to complete psychiatric evaluations of the two defendants. Results of those evaluations will be provided to Sullivan who use them to decide whether to seek the death penalty in the case.

Under law, the prosecutor has 30 days from the date charges are filed to make that decision. The initial 30-day period expires Friday.

Also Tuesday, Gavin set a new trial date for July 11, and scheduled hearings on pre-trial motions for June 20 and 21. Defense attorneys in the case had suggested to Gavin, however, that it may be September before they are ready to proceed with a trial.

The delays require the defendants to waive their rights to a speedy trial, which in Washington is defined as 60 days from the date they are charged. In court, Gavin questioned Rice and McNeil directly to make sure each understood the waiver he signed.

Death sought in Nickoloff case

By GARY E. NELSON
Of the Herald-Republic

Prosecutors will seek the death penalty for Herbert "Chief" Rice and Russell Duane McNeil, charged with aggravated murder in the brutal stabbing deaths of Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff on Jan. 28.

Yakima County Prosecutor Jeff Sullivan announced the decision Friday, the deadline set by Superior Court Judge F. James Gavin. The decision marks the first time the death penalty has been sought in Yakima County since the Legislature passed the aggravated first-degree murder law in 1981. Aggravated murder carries only two possible penalties: death, or life in prison without possibility of parole.

Sullivan would not discuss the decision Friday. A written statement issued by his office said he felt his comments could jeopardize the defendants' right to a fair trial. Defense attorneys also declined to comment Friday.

Before making his decision, Sullivan was provided the results of psychiatric evaluations of Rice and McNeil submitted by their defense attorneys. Defense attorneys had until last Friday to file pleas of innocent by reason of insanity, but chose not to do so.

Rice and McNeil, both 17, were ordered tried in adult court after a March court hearing. Both will turn 18 in August.

Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff, elderly and in ill health, were found dead in their rural Parker home the night of Jan. 28. Both had been brutally stabbed, Mrs. Nickoloff more than 75 times. Two television sets were missing from the home.

The brutality of the crime stunned the rural farming community. As Stauffer said in ruling that the pair be tried as adults, "The fury and the frenzy that is demonstrated (See DEATH PENALTY, Page 2A) through the autopsy reports indicate that it has to be the product of either a psychopathic or sociopathic individual."

Sheriff's detectives arrested Rice and McNeil a few days after the killings, acting on what they said was a citizen's tip.

The next court action in the case is scheduled for June 20 and 21, when Gavin will hear pre-trial motions.

Trial is set to begin July 11, but defense attorneys have said they do not believe they will be ready to proceed to trial until the fall.

Before a defendant can be sentenced to death, the jury must first vote to convict, then take a separate vote on the sentence.

Legal disputes to delay trial in Nickoloff case

By GARY E. NELSON
Of the Herald-Republic

Herbert A. "Chief" Rice Jr. and Russell Duane McNeil may be tried separately for the murders of Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff, and the trials now are not set to begin until October.

Yakima County Superior Court Judge F. James Gavin heard motions in the case Friday, including a prosecution request to remove one of the defense attorneys because his former law partner is related to the Nickoloff family by marriage.

During the court proceedings Friday, defense attorney Chris Tait pointed out that the defendants were charged separately in the case, and, unless prosecutors move to consolidate the charges, must be tried separately. Tait said Yakima County Prosecutor Jeff Sullivan told him he does not intend to ask for consolidation.

Sullivan said that decision is not final, and he still could ask that the defendants be tried together. That will depend, he said, on whether of Hoffman's former law partner Bob Rowley, Sullivan said. Also, Rowley and Nickoloff are business partners, he added.

"At the time of Mr. Hoffman's appointment, he (Rowley) was also Mr. Hoffman's partner," Sullivan said.

He stressed that Hoffman is a qualified attorney and would certainly do a good job of representing Rice. The concern, Sullivan said, is that in death penalty cases, even the appearance of a conflict has been used as grounds to appeal a verdict or delay a trial.

Sullivan cited a case now before the state Supreme Court in which defense attorneys in a capital murder case moved to disqualify the entire Clark County Prosecuting Attorney's Office because the prosecuting attorney had represented the defendant in the case 10 years before while working as a public defender. The prosecuting attorney was not trying the case.

The trial judge denied the motion, Sullivan said, but defense attorneys asked the Supreme Court to rule on the matter and the court agreed to

Defense lawyers question use of death penalty for juveniles

By GARY E. NELSON
Of the Herald-Examiner

Defense attorneys for two young men accused of brutally killing an elderly Parker couple have challenged the constitutionality of applying the death penalty to juveniles, a question that the U.S. Supreme Court also has agreed to decide.

The young men, Herbert A. "Chief" Rice Jr. and Russell Duane McNeil, each are charged with one count of aggravated first-degree murder and accomplice to first-degree murder for the slayings of Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff. The victims, who were stabbed repeatedly, were found in their rural farmhouse Jan. 7.

Yakima County Prosecuting Attorney Jeff Sullivan has formally announced he will seek the death penalty if the two are convicted. Rice and McNeil were 17 when the crime occurred.

Since the murders, the U.S. Supreme Court overturned a death sentence against an Oklahoma youth who was 15 at the time of the crime. The court, in a 5-3 decision, found the death penalty constituted "cruel and unusual punishment" under the Eighth Amendment to the Constitution when applied to persons under 16.

While the high court did not address the question of juveniles 16-18 years old, it has agreed to hear two more death-penalty cases, one involving a 16-year-old and one challenging the death penalty for anyone under 18.

Attorneys for Rice and McNeil have asked Yakima County Superior Court Judge F. James Gavin to dismiss the death penalty in the Nickoloff case using the same arguments presented to the Supreme Court.

In documents filed with the court, attorneys for McNeil argue that, if it is unconstitutional to execute a 15-year-old, the same reasoning applies to any minor defendant.

Attorneys Susan Hahn and Rick Hoffman argue that Washington law clearly treats juveniles differently than adults, citing age limits for drinking alcohol, buying tobacco, gambling, marrying and filing a lawsuit.

In the time since the documents were filed, Hahn has withdrawn from the case because she was appointed Superior Court commissioner. On Thursday, Gavin appointed Seattle defense attorney Michael Frost to replace Hahn on Rice's defense team.

Of the 50 states, 18 set a minimum age for the death penalty, Hahn and Hoffman note. Of those, 12 require a defendant to be 18 before the death penalty may be imposed; the rest say 16.

In Washington, only two people under 18 are known to have been executed.

One was 18 when he was hanged in 1906, but is believed to have been 17 at the time of the crime. The other was hanged in 1932 at age 17.

If no juveniles have been executed in the last half-century, the attorneys argue, it is either because juveniles do not commit aggravated first-degree murder — the only capital crime in Washington — or prosecutors and juries have refused to execute juvenile offenders.

If juveniles do not commit capital crimes, the argument continues, then the death penalty cannot deter other juveniles from committing similar crimes.

If prosecutors and juries refuse to impose the penalty, Hahn and Hoffman argue, "We may surmise that the people of the state of Washington find execution of a juvenile offender to be cruel and abhorrent, uncivilized and barbaric."

Chris Tait and Tom Bothwell, attorneys for McNeil, present similar arguments, also based on the Supreme Court decision in Thompson vs. Oklahoma. They specifically cite a concurring opinion filed by Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, in which she discusses the separate procedure under Oklahoma law for treating a juvenile as an adult. Washington also has such a procedure, under which the court considers a list of criteria to decide if the defendant was acting as an adult and should be tried in adult court.

Sullivan and Deputy Prosecutor Howard Hansen, in documents rebutting the defense claims, argue that procedure is an adequate safeguard against cruel and unusual punishment. If the case involved a defendant under 16, an argument could be made, the prosecutors note, because the procedure for trying a juvenile as an adult applies specifically to 16- and 17-year-olds.

O'Connor's concurring opinion, however, notes that the Oklahoma Legislature adopted a death penalty without setting a minimum age, and separately established the procedure for trying a juvenile as an adult. In Oklahoma, that procedure can apply to a 25-year-old.

that overturned a death sentence imposed on a 15-year-old Oklahoma boy.

In that ruling, the high court said the death penalty constituted "cruel and unusual punishment" when applied to 15-year-olds.

The Supreme Court has not specifically addressed the death penalty and its use against 16- and 17-year-olds, but it has agreed to hear two cases involving youngsters of those ages.

"It is cruel and unusual punishment to seek the death penalty for juveniles," Frost said in Gavin's courtroom Thursday.

In addition, defense attorneys argued that state law treats juveniles differently than adults, citing age limits for buying alcohol, gambling, getting married and filing lawsuits.

But Yakima County Prosecutor Jeff Sullivan contended that the Oklahoma ruling applies only to 16-year-olds, not to older juveniles.

Furthermore, Sullivan and deputy prosecutor Howard Hanson argued that it was determined in earlier court proceedings that Rice and McNeil will be tried as adults, and therefore are subject to the death penalty.

"We're talking about 17-and-a-half-year-olds who are already functioning as adults," Hanson said.

In issuing his ruling, Gavin said neither the U.S. Constitution nor the state constitution prohibit seeking the death penalty for 17-year-olds.

"I can draw no other conclusion than that it is constitutional," Gavin said.

In addition, Gavin cited a 1961 state law bringing the death penalty back.

"The death penalty was reinstated after a public outcry. That to me speaks loudly," Gavin said.

Only two people under 18 are known to have been executed in Washington state. One was executed in 1906; the other was hanged in 1932. Both were believed to have been 17 when they committed their crimes.

Country's death toll at all-time high of 25

By CRAIG TROIANELLO
Of the Herald-Republic

The new year was just seven days old when the bodies of retired orchardists Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff were found in their rural Parker home.

One veteran Yakima County sheriff's deputy called it the most brutal murder scene he had ever encountered. Both the husband — an 82-year-old invalid unable to move about without the aid of a walker — and his 75-year-old wife had been stabbed dozens of times. Taken from the couple's home — a pair of television sets.

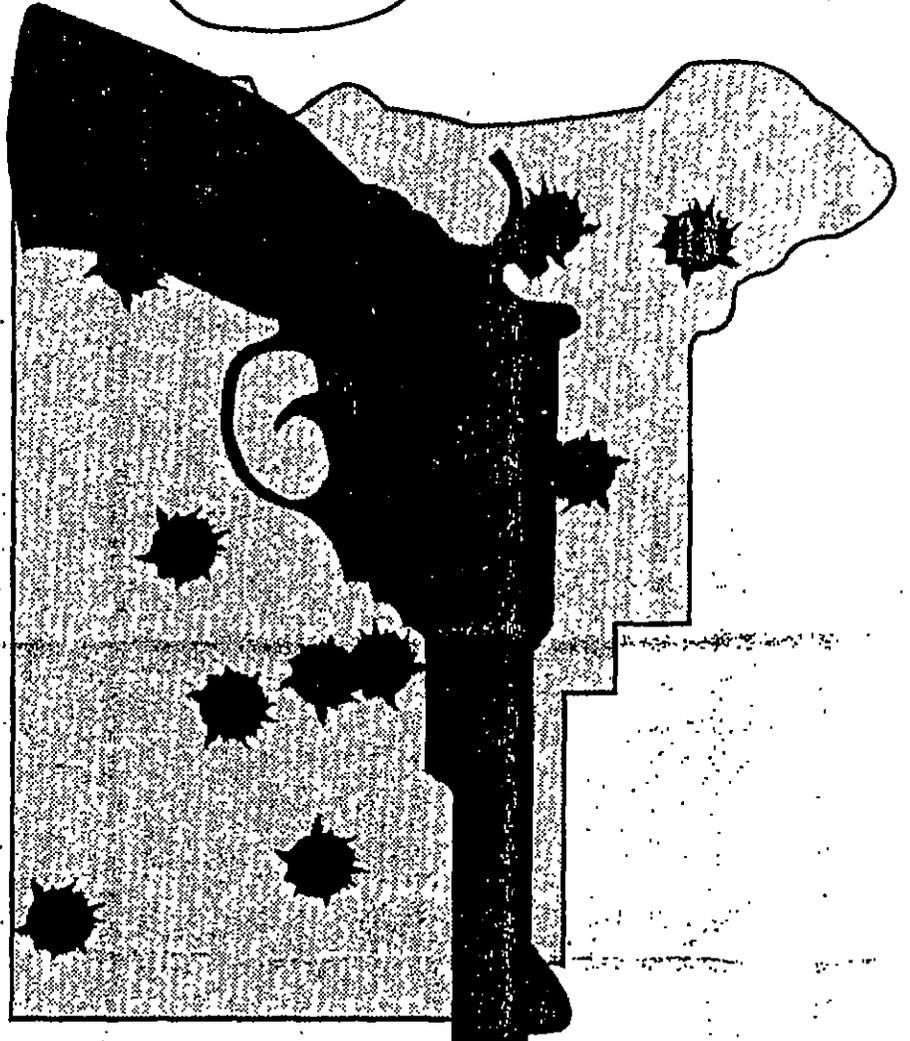

The Nickoloff slayings did more than fortify a close-knit farming community. In a particularly gruesome manner it marked the start of the worst killing season on record in Yakima County. To date this year, 25 men and women and one child have died of gunshots, knifings or physical assaults.

The killings have strained law enforcement budgets and sown new fears in an area already worried about the prevalent trafficking of cocaine and heroin.

Police say there's no single reason for the increase. Illegal drugs have obviously played a role, but probably no more than in past years, according to police.

Instead, the majority of slayings have resulted from friends killing friends, spouses killing spouses, relatives killing relatives. Few, if any, of the killings are believed to have occurred at random.

"When you talk about (reasons for) these homicides there is no easy answer. You're talking about people's emotions and motivations and things of that type. To try to prevent homicides of that nature is pretty difficult," said Capt. Don Blesio of the Yakima police department.

Yakima police have faced 11 homicides this year. Nine of those cases are considered solved. Police consider a case solved if a person is arrested or a warrant is issued.

Outside Yakima city limits, most homicides are investigated by the Yakima County Sheriff's Department. This year, sheriff's detectives have been confronted with 10 killings. Five are considered solved.

"The vast majority of these victims knew the suspect," said Lt. Jerry Haisos.

Here is what's known about the victims:
• The biggest single group of victims were men in their 20s. Twenty of the 25 victims were adult men and 13 were between the ages of 20 and 29. Five homicide victims were women. One was a 2-year-old who died after an assault in August.

• Guns were responsible for most of the deaths. Fourteen victims died of bullet wounds. Six were stabbed to death. Five died in the course of a physical assault. Deputies don't know what caused the death of an unidentified woman whose skeletal remains were found in February near the Yakima River in the Parker area.

• Eleven of the victims were Hispanic. Ten were white. Four were American Indian. No such identification is available for the remains of the woman found near Parker.

If there is a common link between most homicides it's probably alcohol, Haisos said.

Larry Kuhns: An intense and complex man

By PETER R. MENZIES
Of the Herald-Republic

Larry Kuhns — war hero, real estate agent, car salesman, golfer, racquetball player — was a talker. Capital T.

And he did a lot of his talking in the Triangle room of the Yakima YMCA.

"Most guys go to the Y for a pickup game. He came for a pickup conversation," said one Y member. "He'd be there when you came in and he'd be there when you left."

"He was always emphatic in what he said, always right. On the Monday before the election, he told us if we didn't vote Republican, the world would go to hell. ... Larry didn't need to know your name to talk to you."

Said another Y member: "Everybody down there knew him because he was so talkative."

Kuhns uttered his last words 10 days ago.

His body — along with those of his wife of 11 years, Ingrid, and 24-year-old David Byrd — was found splattered with blood less than a block from the YMCA about 11 p.m. on that Thursday night. All had been shot in the head.

The three of them, who were regulars at the Y and occasionally played a game of cutthroat racquetball together, had all been at the health club earlier that day.

Larry Kuhns had reserved a racquetball court for 6:30 that night.

LARRY KUHN'S
... forceful, talkative

And if that night at the Y was like most nights at the Y, Byrd would have been somewhere on the second floor looking for a racquetball game, and Mrs. Kuhns would have been dipping Nautlius weights or playing racquetball with somebody.

But what events preceded the shooting that day have not been disclosed by Yakima police.

The police have yet to complete their investigation and have not

HOW YOU VOTED

The ranking of the top 10 local stories of 1988 selected by Herald-Republic readers were tabulated in a weighted poll.

Readers picked the stories they deemed the top 10 for 1988 from a list of 25 compiled by newspaper editors. A total of 119 responses were received. Each reader's No. 1 pick received 10 points, with the second choice getting nine points, and so on down to the 10th pick, which received 1 point. Responses that were not ordered numerically by the respondent received one point for each vote.

6. In what was regarded as the biggest drug bust of the year, federal agents concluded a one-year investigation into drug trafficking by employees of Mr. Car-Mr. Truck, and arrested four people for their involvement in a lucrative cocaine distribution organization. Drug transactions apparently took place when drug customers would take a "demonstration ride" in one of the vehicles at either the Yakima or Union Gap car lots.

After Holly emerged from the nine-hour procedure, surgeons pronounced the potentially life-saving operation a success.

But over the next four months, Holly's condition would swing from good to grave, and back again, as her body struggled to reject her new liver.

At one point, Holly and her mother returned to Yakima for several weeks, hoping the family would be able to resume a more normal life, at least for awhile.

Eventually it became clear that Holly was not improving and would need to undergo a second transplant operation.

In mid-August, Holly and her mother returned to the Chicago hospital to wait for a second liver to become available. A week later, 9-month old Holly died.

But Holly's story, which was closely followed by the local television stations as well as the newspaper, also raised questions about the propriety of focusing so much attention on the fate of one infant.

One respondent to the poll, for example, called the extensive coverage "ill-advised," suggesting the community's energy and resources might have been better spent on other needs.

2. Readers' second pick for top story of 1988 was the Nickoloff murders, perhaps the most shocking homicides in a year that saw more homicides — 27 — than ever in Yakima County's history.

On Jan. 7, Mike Nicholoff, an 83-year-old retired orchardist, and his 75-year-old wife, Dorothy, were stabbed in the Parker home they had lived in for more than 40 years.

Both victims had been stabbed more than a dozen times, and the brutality and senselessness of the murders left the community shocked and led to a surge in gun sales countywide.

Nearly three weeks after the grisly crime occurred, two teen-agers — Herbert "Chief" Rice and Russell McNeil — were arrested and charged with aggravated first-degree murder.

Now, the two 17-year-olds await trial.

When that begins will depend on the state Supreme Court, which has been asked by the suspects' attorneys to determine whether the state can seek the death penalty for the juveniles.

Jeff Sullivan, Yakima County prosecutor, says the state's highest court will decide whether to tackle that issue on Jan. 10. If the court denies the request, the trial is scheduled to begin within 90 days in Yakima County Superior Court.

BARBARA BLODGETT
... gives birth in coma

3. Third on readers' lists were events surrounding the June 30 accident that killed 19-year-old Nicole Valenzuela and plunged her cousin, Barbara Blodgett, into a coma.

Complicating the tragedy was the uncertain fate not only of the 24-year-old woman, but that of the infant she carried in her womb.

In the meanwhile, Byron Stackhouse, the driver of the vehicle that hit the Blodgetts' jeep, was accused of vehicular assault and vehicular homicide.

During the October trial, a deeply shaken Stackhouse testified that he had imbibed six double Black Velvets and Pepsis before getting in his Jeep Cherokee on the evening of the accident.

A blood-alcohol test revealed an intoxication level of 0.22, well beyond the legal limit.

But in a verdict that perplexed deputy prosecutor Mike McCarthy and angered relatives of the dead teen-ager, the jury acquitted Stackhouse of the homicide charge, finding him guilty of the assault charge.

The Blodgett story took another turn on Dec. 9 when a still comatose Barbara Blodgett, with the aid of physicians, gave birth to a healthy 8-pound boy, later named Simon Alan.

And more recently, the Blodgett family has said Barbara, although

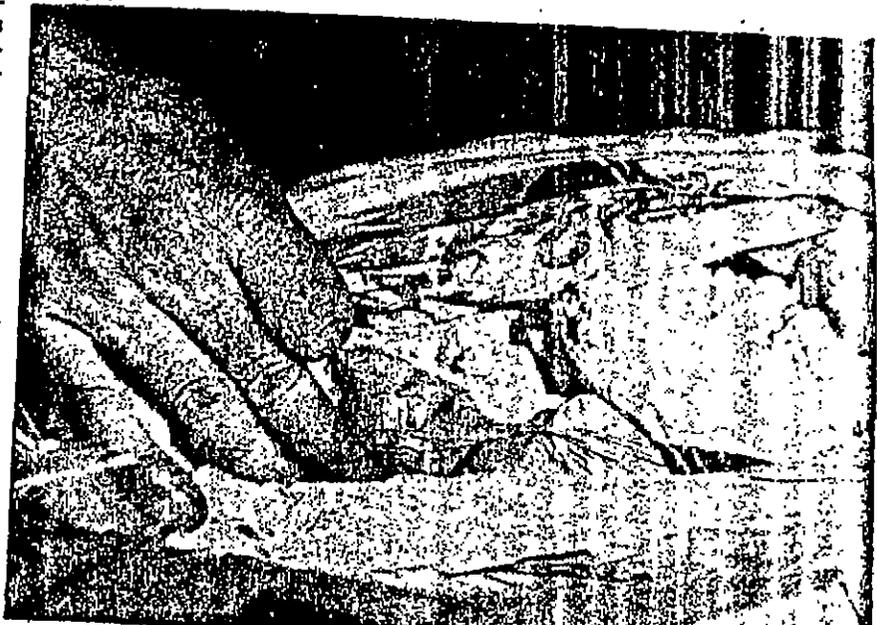

... drugs, along with the countywide surge in criminal activity caused by rampant drug use, prompted the local governments to appoint a drug czar.

State: No ruling on juvenile executions

By GARY E. NELSON
Of the Herald-Republic

The state Supreme Court has refused to rule on the constitutionality of executing juveniles, clearing the way for Herbert Rice and Russell McNeil to face trial for the killings of an elderly Parker couple.

The U.S. Supreme Court still could ban sentencing juveniles to death when it rules on two related cases this year, but those decisions are not expected before Rice and McNeil's trial in Yakima County.

During its motions calendar Tuesday morning, the state Supreme Court refused to change a Supreme Court commissioner's Nov. 4 ruling denying discretionary review of the case.

Herbert "Chief" Rice and Russell Duane McNeil are charged with aggravated first-degree murder for the stabbing deaths of Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff Jan. 7, 1988. Both Rice and McNeil, now 18, were 17 when the slayings occurred.

The victims, both elderly and in ill health, were found dead in their Parker farmhouse. Both had been repeatedly stabbed, Mrs. Nickoloff as many as 75 times. Two television sets were missing from the home.

Rice and McNeil are being tried as adults in the case, and Yakima County Prosecutor Jeff Sullivan is seeking the death penalty. Aggravated first-degree murder carries only two possible penalties in Washington: death, or life in prison without possibility of parole. It is the state's only capital crime.

Defense attorneys asked Yakima County Superior Court Judge F. James Gavin in August to dismiss the death penalty from the case, arguing that executing juveniles amounts to cruel and unusual punishment, which is forbidden by the U.S. Constitution.

Gavin refused, saying neither the state constitution nor the U.S. Constitution forbids executing juveniles.

Defense attorneys appealed his ruling to the state Supreme Court, effectively halting proceedings in the case until the matter was resolved. The court is not required to hear such matters.

On Nov. 4, the court's commissioner denied discretionary review, and the defense appealed that ruling, asking the full court to overrule its commissioner. Tuesday's action denied that request as well.

As soon as the court's written order arrives in the Yakima County Clerk's Office, trial must begin within 90 days. If the order arrives next Monday, the case would go to trial no later than April 17, according to Chris Tait, attorney for McNeil.

Tait said he was not surprised by the court's decision. But, he said, the U.S. Supreme Court could make the trial of Rice and McNeil an exercise in futility.

Since the Nickoloff murders, the high court has overturned the death sentence of an Oklahoma youth who was 15 at the time of his crime. In a 5-3 decision, the court found applying the death penalty to juveniles under 18 amounts to "cruel and unusual punishment," which is forbidden by the Eighth Amendment to the Constitution.

That ruling did not address the question of juveniles 16 to 18 years old, but the high court almost immediately agreed to hear two more death-penalty cases, one involving a 16-year-old defendant and one challenging the death penalty for anyone under 18.

If the court extends its reasoning to defendants under 18, that could nullify the death penalty for Rice and McNeil, but probably not before they go to trial.

"That's the sad piece of our (state) Supreme Court making this decision," Tait said. "That we could go to trial and face the death penalty, and two to three months later, learn that we shouldn't have done that."

There is little chance that the high court's ruling will come down before the trial begins, and even less chance the trial will be delayed past April, Tait said.

"The last word that we had from Judge Gavin was that nothing and nobody would delay this trial," he said.

Several key issues remain before the trial can begin, however. Those include expected defense motions for change of venue and the question of whether Rice and McNeil will be tried together or separately, and if so, who should face trial first.

The case is the first capital case in Yakima County since the state brought back the death penalty in 1981.

The state has executed only two people who were known to be under 18 when they committed their crimes. One was executed in 1906; the other was hanged in 1932. Both were 17 when the crimes were committed.

Overwhelmed prosecutor to get new deputy

By KATE MYRA
Of the Herald-Republic

The Yakima County commissioners once again narrowly diverted disaster in the law and justice system by agreeing Friday to hire another deputy prosecuting attorney.

The commissioners agreed to the new position after Prosecuting Attorney Jeff Sullivan threatened to start dismissing cases and not file any new criminal cases.

"I wish it wouldn't come to this," he told the commissioners.

Sullivan said his staff simply cannot handle the growing felony case load. He said his deputies are being forced to plea bargain cases that should go to trial just to keep their heads above water.

In a letter outlining the burden on his staff, Sullivan said his office filed 2,100 felony cases last year.

"That works out to 300 per deputy, not counting appeals and violations of sentencing conditions. If we do not get help immediately, I will have no choice but to stop filing criminal cases. The deputies simply can no longer handle any new cases," he wrote.

Sullivan said his office has already filed 162 new felony charges this year.

Sullivan's request is for a total of three new deputy prosecutors — two for criminal cases and one for civil matters — and another secretary. The estimated cost of the additional staff is $150,000 a year.

The commissioners agreed to consider the other positions next month when they have the final year-end budget figures for 1988.

Sullivan said one of the new prosecutors will be hired to take over Howard Hansen's criminal caseload. Hansen is the prosecuting attorney in the first-degree murder trials of Herbert A. "Chief" Rice and Russell Duane McNeil, who are charged with brutally killing an elderly Parker couple.

The county will seek the death penalty for Rice and McNeil and Sullivan said Hansen needs to spend all of his time preparing for the April 12 trial.

Sullivan also informed the commissioners he plans to move the Support Enforcement Division out of the courthouse to relieve the overcrowding in his office. He said he will have to rent space for the 10-member division outside the courthouse.

He will then move his civil deputies into the Support Enforcement Division's offices on the second floor of the courthouse.

The Support Enforcement Division is responsible for determining paternity and enforcing court-ordered support payments. Sullivan said the state will pay the office rent for the division.

Sullivan said he currently has four attorneys sharing two offices and a receptionist sitting at a small, card-board table in the waiting room.

Motion's denial lets trial schedule stand in Nickoloff killings

By PETER R. MENZIES
Of the Herald-Republic

Herbert "Chief" Rice has had a change of mind.

After the teen-ager accused of murdering Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff agreed Friday morning to waive his rights to a speedy trial and delay his day in court until after the U.S. Supreme Court rules on whether 17-year-olds can be put to death, Rice apparently changed his mind later that day.

"After talking to Mr. Rice last Friday, it was clear he wasn't ready to waive his right to a speedy trial," Rice's attorney, Mike Frost, said Monday morning. "He just simply changed his mind."

In proceedings in Yakima County Superior Court Monday, Rice attempted to convince Gavin that he unknowingly agreed to waive his speedy trial rights last week, and therefore, was entitled to go on trial April 10, as previously scheduled.

If Gavin accepted the Rice motion, the youth would have gone on trial before Russell McNeil, who on Friday had agreed to delay his trial until after the Supreme Court ruling, expected in June.

But after hearing arguments for about an hour, Gavin denied Rice's request, effectively leaving the Nickoloff murder case exactly where it was four days ago.

"I'm going to keep the (trial) schedule the way it is," Gavin said.

As it now stands, McNeil and Rice are being tried separately, with McNeil's trial scheduled to begin within 60 days after the Supreme Court has ruled on the legality of capital punishment for 17-year-olds. Rice's trial will begin within about 120 days after the same ruling.

That means McNeil's trial should begin in August or September with Rice's getting under way in October or November.

The two teen-agers, accused of the aggravated murder of the Nickoloffs in their Parker home on Jan. 7, 1988, were arrested later that month and have been in Yakima County jail since.

The two defendants, who were 17 at the time the crime was committed, will be tried as adults, and Yakima County Prosecutor Jeff Sullivan is seeking the death penalty against them.

That has led to delays in the scheduling of the trial, as defense attorneys asked the state Supreme Court to take up the question of the constitutionality of the death penalty for 17-year-olds.

The state's highest court declined to review the issue, clearing the way for a trial to begin in April.

But on Friday, all parties agreed to delay the trial until after the Supreme Court has ruled on two cases that hinge on whether 17-year-olds can be executed.

During that hearing, Sullivan agreed to the delay, saying that it makes financial sense to await the Supreme Court ruling.

"Potentially, we could waste two weeks of trial time (by going to trial before the ruling)," Sullivan said Monday.

That's because in a case where the death penalty is sought, a week of trial time is spent on jury selection and another week is given to determining, once a defendant is convicted of aggravated murder, whether the suspect is executed or given life in prison without parole. The only penalties for aggravated first-degree murder in Washington are death or life in prison without parole.

Herbert "Chief" Rice and Russell

Yakima Coun-

Friday and decided McNeil

will go on trial first, probably in August.

The issue of a change of venue because of pre-trial publicity about the case will be taken up when McNeil goes on trial.

The U.S. Supreme Court has agreed to decide the issue of the constitutionality of the death penalty for juveniles between 16 and 18 years of age. A decision is expected in June.

Rice and McNeil are accused of the January 1987 stabbing deaths of Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff. The elderly couple were killed in their Parker home. Each was stabbed numerous times, Mrs. Nickoloff suffering 75 wounds. Two television sets were missing from the house.

Rice and McNeil, 17 years old at the time, are being tried as adults.
Yakima County Prosecutor Jeff
Sullivan is seeking the death penalty.
The only penalties for aggravated first-degree murder in Washington state are death or life in prison without the possibility of parole.

Constitutionality of the death penalty for juveniles has caused delays in the case. The Washington Supreme Court refused to rule on the constitutionality of executing juveniles last month.

Scheduling trials for Rice and McNeil was further complicated when the U.S. Supreme Court agreed to hear two cases also involving teenagers.

If the pair were to be sentenced to death and the nation's high court later banned such sentences for juveniles, the trials would have to be repeated.

Attorney Chris Tait, representing McNeil, said his client would prefer to be tried first for a number of reasons, some of which Tait said he would not disclose.

"We would prefer to go first. It is Rusty's desire to get this going and get it done and find out what will happen to him," Tait said.

In any event, Tait said he will seek to move the trial to another location.

Gavin ruled McNeil's trial will start 60 days after the U.S. Supreme Court opinion is filed. The time period will include 30 days to take care of motions and the trial to begin after another 30 days have passed.

He said motions in Rice's trial will be handled at the same time as those of McNeil and his trial will begin 120 days after the high court opinion is filed.

The schedule would place Rice's trial in October.

NO. 88-1-00428-1
AFFIDAVIT OF
HOWARD W. HANSEN

STATE OF WASHINGTON)
 : ss.
 County of Yakima)

HOWARD W. HANSEN, being first duly sworn on oath, deposes and says:

Your affiant is a duly appointed Deputy Prosecuting Attorney for Yakima County, Washington, and is familiar with the facts and circumstances of this case.

The defense in this case has made a motion for closure of the pre-trial hearings in this case on the grounds that the ensuing pre-trial publicity may jeopardize the defendant's right to a fair trial in Yakima County, Washington.

The evidence to be presented at the CrR 3.5 hearing in this case will include the tape recorded statement of the defendant given to the Yakima County Sheriff's Department Detectives, a transcript of that statement, and the testimony of these detectives

3 describing the circumstances surrounding the taking of the 4 statement.

5 The defendant in this case is charged with two counts of 6 Capital Murder involving the stabbing deaths of Mike and Dorothy 7 Nickoloff on January 7, 1988. These murders were extraordinarily 8 brutal homicides of an elderly couple which occurred at their rural 9 home. These homicides have been reported in the news media, but 10 the details and surrounding circumstances of the actual homicides 11 have not been substantially released to the general public.

12 The defendant's statement concerning these crimes is not a 13 short admission or denial of his involvement. Instead, it is a 14 lengthy statement detailing his activities before, during, and 15 after the homicides for which he is charged.

16 Since the information released to the public concerning these 17 homicides has been limited, the nature and substance of what the 18 defendant has stated to the police will be of great interest to the 19 general public. The defendant's statement is detailed and graphic 20 to the point that it is almost certain that, if released to the 21 public, it will not be treated by either the news media or the 22 general public in a normal or uneventful fashion.

23 Additionally, the trial in this case is set for September 5, 24 1989, and other pre-trial hearings in this case will begin to occur
25 on a more frequent and regular basis as we approach this trial
26 date. The State believes that the combination of this heightened 27 interest in the case and the particularly explicit details of the 28 defendant's statement will present a substantial probability of

Defendant.)

COMES NOW the above-named Defendant, RUSSELL McNEIL, through counsel, with this memorandum relative to Plaintiff's motion for an additional handwriting exemplar.

Defendant acknowledges the relatively established authority of the court to order a defendant to provide a handwriting exemplar. See, e.g., Schmerber v. California, 384 U.S. 757 (1966); Gilbert v. California, 388 U.S. 263 (1967). However, neither of those United States Supreme Court cases nor most other authorities consider the mechanics of a particular handwriting exemplar, and particularly some of the proposals being made by the Plaintiff in the instant case.

We understand Co-Defendant Rice is citing to this Court the case of United States v. Campbell, 732 F.2d 1017 (1st Cir. 1984). Defendant McNeil joins in citing Campbell to this Court. The Campbell decision, we respectfully submit, is most well reasoned relative to considering the "testimonial" features involved when a defendant is called upon to, for example, write or print down words which have only been orally spoken to him by the State's representative.

Defendant McNeil renews his request to this Court to deny Plaintiff's motion on the basis that the State has already been afforded an adequate opportunity to obtain an exemplar. However, if this Court is inclined to allow another opportunity to the State, Defendant McNeil asks this Court to restrict the exemplar as provided for in United States v. Campbell.

selection guidelines, but they might perfectly well have been made in exactly the same way and with exactly the same results in the absence of the ten-year rule, especially in light of the "seniority" factor in the guidelines.⁵ Our review of the record discloses only two references to possible applications of the ten-year rule. George Austermann stated that the rule "played a part in protecting some people from being declared surplus." He did not indicate whether this would have affected the layoff chances of any black employees. John Burgarella named one particular employee with more than ten years of exempt seniority whom he would have laid off but for the ten-year rule; he refused, however, to state that the employee would likely have been laid off in place of any member of the plaintiff class. On the other hand, at least seven managers (including John Rutter and John Gignac, testifying with respect to three of the four named plaintiffs) stated that the ten-year rule had no impact at all on their layoff decisions. On this evidence, we think the district court was correct in finding that the plaintiffs failed to make a sufficient showing to support a presumption of causation with respect to the named plaintiffs and the class generally. Thus, because plaintiffs made out no prima facie case, neither the burden of showing a manifest business necessity for the ten-year rule, nor that of disproving causation with respect to individual class members, ever shifted to defendant.

The judgment for defendant on the individual and class action claims is affirmed.

5. The underlying seniority system, as distinguished from Personnel Policy 250A, was not challenged as discriminatory. Although the district court did not specifically find that the UNITED STATES of America,

Plaintiff, Appellee.

v.

Alvin R. CAMPBELL, Defendant, Appellant.

No. 83-1222.

United States Court of Appeals,
First Circuit.

Argued March 8, 1984.

Decided April 26, 1984.

Opinion on Rehearing June 7, 1984.

Defendant was convicted before the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts, A. David Mazzone, J., on a six-count indictment, five involving firearms and one cocaine, and he appealed. The Court of Appeals, Bailey Aldrich, Senior Circuit Judge, held that: (1) probable cause existed for issuance of warrant for search of defendant's apartment for "cocaine" but not for firearms, although firearms might be admissible if discovered during course of legitimate search for cocaine, and (2) order requiring defendant to comply with Government's proposed dictation procedure, which went beyond handwriting exemplars and which would have shown defendant's choice of spelling, invaded defendant's Fifth Amendment rights.

Vacated and remanded.

1. Drugs and Narcotics ←188

Where confidential informant identified photograph of defendant and had been seen on occasions to enter defendant's premises, and where informant's name and address were known to police and he had no known motive to lie, received no inducement and came forth on his own, sufficient independent "substantial basis" existed for crediting informant's account that he had seen cocaine and cocaine paraphernalia in defendant's apartment, and thus probable system was protected under 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(h), it apparently assumed this was the case when it found the layoff selection guidelines to be nondiscriminatory.

cause existed for issuance of warrant for search of defendant's apartment for cocaine.

2. Drugs and Narcotics \S 188

In view of past history indicating a continuing business, information provided by confidential informant, who told drug officer that he had been in defendant's apartment in July, August and September and had seen cocaine and various cocaine paraphernalia, and stated that defendant had offered to front cocaine to him for sale and later payment, was not too stale when it came to assessing probable cause for possession of cocaine in November.

3. Searches and Seizures \S 3.3(3)

Where hitherto unknown informant had said that some other individual, known only to him, had given him a casing at undisclosed date allegedly coming from rifle in defendant's possession and where named informant stated that defendant carried a 25 automatic in 1980 and confidential informant asserted that he still had it at some undisclosed date, no probable cause existed to search defendant's apartment for firearms.

4. Criminal Law \S 394.4(10)

Although probable cause did not exist to search defendant's apartment for firearms, firearms and silencers found during course of legitimate search for cocaine might be admissible.

5. Drugs and Narcotics \S 123

In view of amount of equipment discovered in defendant's apartment, still with cocaine residue present, jury could reasonably conclude that defendant was conducting ongoing business and that more substantial amounts of cocaine had been present within reasonable time of discovery, and thus jury could convict defendant of intent to sell cocaine other than found residue if it concluded that he had further cocaine for sale within reasonable time of date stated in indictment.

6. Indictment and Information \S 87(7)

Where time of offense is not important, it may be alleged generally and "on or about" permits reasonable variance in dates.

7. Criminal Law \S 393(1), 721(4)

Where Government did not limit its demand to handwriting exemplars as such but sought compliance with its court-approved proposed dictation procedure, and where only difference between dictation and being shown words to write was to discover defendant's choice of spelling, allowing Government to show that defendant violated court order to furnish handwriting exemplars and permitting Government to argue jury's right to draw unfavorable inferences violated defendant's Fifth Amendment right to avoid compelled testimonial of self-incrimination; disagreeing with U.S. v. Pheaster, 544 F.2d 353. U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 5.

8. Criminal Law \S 1171.5

Any self-asserted reason defendant might give would not offset court's order and inferences court charged could be drawn from defendant's noncompliance with demand for handwriting exemplars and Government's proposed dictation procedure, which would have permitted discovery of defendant's choice of spelling, since order invaded his Fifth Amendment rights, and thus no protest by him or cross-examination bringing out essentially why he refused to comply could cure consequence of permitting adverse comment on his exercise of his rights. U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 5.

Richard M. Egbert, Boston, Mass., by appointment of the Court, for appellant.

William C. Bryson, Atty., Dept. of Justice, Washington, D.C., with whom William F. Weld, U.S. Atty., Boston, Mass., and Patrick M. Walsh, Sp. Atty., U.S. Dept. of Justice, Boston, Mass., were on brief, for appellee.

Before COFFIN, ALDRICH and BOWNES, Circuit Judges.

BAILEY ALDRICH, Senior Circuit Judge.

Defendant Campbell, not a stranger to this court,¹ or to a number of others, was convicted on a six count indictment, five involving firearms, and one cocaine. On this appeal he raises three principal complaints; one, to the denials of his motion to suppress; two, alleging inadequacy of the evidence as to cocaine, and three, challenging the court's admission of evidence of his refusal to execute handwriting exemplars. Other claims we have noted, but do not find to require comment.

Most of the evidence was obtained in a search of Campbell's apartment pursuant to a warrant issued for "cocaine" and "a 30 calibre carbine assault rifle and a 25 calibre auto pistol." The search discovered various cocaine paraphernalia, including scales, cutting and other equipment, and approximately 1,000 glassine envelopes, but no cocaine except measurable residue attached to the equipment. Also discovered, concealed in various receptacles, were four firearm silencers, unregistered, in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 5861(d), and three rifles and two handguns, some or all of which were also concealed.

We deal first with the motion to suppress with respect to cocaine. The basis of the warrant had been an affidavit by drug officer Manzi. This, in turn, was based upon statements to him by a Chester Smolenski, and a confidential informant, hereafter CI. Smolenski had had no previous connection with the police as an informant except, apparently, to have reported to the state police in June 1980, that defendant, with whom he had allegedly been previously associated, had assaulted and robbed him. Smolenski informed Manzi in August, 1982 that he had dealt in cocaine with defendant until their falling out in 1980, and that since then he feared for his life. Other than this, Smolenski figured only in the firearms aspect of Manzi's affidavit.

[1, 2] CI spoke with Manzi on several occasions in the fall of 1982, telling him he had been in defendant's apartment in July, August, and September, and had seen cocaine and various cocaine paraphernalia, and that defendant had offered to front cocaine to CI for sale and later payment. In support of his reliability, the affidavit noted that CI had identified a photograph of the defendant, and had been seen on occasions to enter defendant's premises. His name and address were known to the police; he had no known motive to lie, received no inducement, and came forth on his own. Judging the total circumstances, Illinois v. Gates, 1983, 462 U.S. 213, 103 S.Ct. 2317, 2328, 76 L.Ed.2d 527, and the deference due the magistrate's findings, United States v. Ventresca, 1965, 380 U.S. 102, 107-09, 85 S.Ct. 741, 745-46, 13 L.Ed.2d 684, although the question may be close, we find these factors, cumulatively, to furnish a sufficient independent "substantial basis" for crediting CI's account. Illinois v. Gates, ante, 103 S.Ct. at 2327-31 United States v. Harris, 1971, 403 U.S. 573, 581, 91 S.Ct. 2075, 2080, 29 L.Ed.2d 723. In substitution for a track record of reliability is the fact that he was not a professional informant, but a private citizen with no known criminal record or other criminal contacts, who came forward on his own. Under such circumstances the informant's story may be more easily accepted, and we believe the magistrate justified in doing so here. See Gates, ante, 103 S.Ct. at 2329; United States v. Burke, 2 Cir., 1975, 517 F.2d 377, 379-81; United States v. Mark Polus, 1 Cir., 1975, 516 F.2d 1290, cert. denied, 423 U.S. 895, 96 S.Ct. 195, 46 L.Ed.2d 127. Nor was the information too stale when it came to assessing probable cause for possession of cocaine in November, in view of the past history indicating a continuing business. See United States v. Hershenow, 1 Cir., 1982, 680 F.2d 847, 853; United States v. DiMuro, 1 Cir., 1976, 540 F.2d 503, 515-56.

1. Campbell v. United States, 1 Cir., 1962, 303 F.2d 747, rev'd, 373 U.S. 487, 83 S.Ct. 1356, 10

[3] The situation with regard to firearms is much more troubling. According to Smolenski, defendant robbed and assaulted him in June 1980, using a 357 magnum revolver and a 25 calibre automatic pistol. At that time defendant "always carried a gun." At some undisclosed date a certain CII, a confidential informant to Smolenski, gave Smolenski "two empty shell casings, one from a 30 calibre carbine, the other, a 30 calibre auto." We assume, from reading the affidavit as a whole, as well as from the fact that the court is unaware of automatics between 25 and 32 calibre, that the second "30" was a typo for 25. CII told Smolenski, again without date, that these weapons were in defendant's possession, and that defendant was planning to kill Smolenski with one of them. The affidavit concluded,

"Due to the afore-mentioned facts, information and circumstances previously mentioned in the affidavit and due to the nature of criminal activity and the continuing pattern of Campbell's criminal activity, there is probable cause to believe that the items previously mentioned in this affidavit will be likely to remain in Campbell's possession or in his bedroom in connection with his unlawful criminal activity and personal criminal history."

The "personal criminal history" consisted of numerous criminal convictions, the last in 1970 on a gun charge, and the assertion he had robbed Smolenski in 1980, and was engaged in the cocaine business.

Nothing was known to the police about CII, and there would seem, even in the totality of the circumstances, no substantial basis for accepting his hearsay on hearsay. Shell casings could come from anywhere. One could not find probable cause that defendant was presently in possession of a 30 calibre rifle on the basis that a hitherto unknown informant had said that some other individual, known only to him, had given him a casing, at some undisclosed date, allegedly coming from such a rifle in defendant's possession. While we would accept Smolenski's statement that defendant carried a 25 automatic in 1980, we could not regard this, and CII's assertion that he still had it at some undisclosed date, sufficient cause to believe it would be found in defendant's apartment in November 1982. If such minor matters can constitute probable cause for a firearms search warrant, any individual with a criminal record involving firearms, and acceptable probable cause with respect to cocaine, can be searched for arms at any time. The government cites no authority for such a broad proposition, and we must hold that the court erred in concluding that there was probable cause to search for firearms. Cf. United States v. Harris, ante, 403 U.S. at 582, 91 S.Ct. at 2081 (criminal reputation, standing alone, insufficient to establish probable cause.).

[4] This does not mean that the firearms must necessarily be suppressed. If the district court should conclude on remand that the police discovered the, or some of the, firearms and silencers during the course of a legitimate search for cocaine, then these items might be admissible. See, e.g., United States v. Winston, E.D.Mich., 1974, 373 F.Supp. 1005; aff'd, 6 Cir., 1975, 516 F.2d 902; 2 W. LaFave, Search and Seizure § 4.11 (1978). We express no final opinion on this question, however, because it was not addressed, either factually or legally, by the district court or the parties.

[5, 6] Defendant next challenges the sufficiency of the evidence with respect to his conviction for cocaine. The indictment charged possession with intent to distribute "on or about" November 23. During its deliberation the jury requested instructions, and was told that it could convict defendant of intent to sell cocaine other than the found residue if it concluded that he had had further cocaine for sale within a reasonable time of the date stated in the indictment. As to this we find no error. Where the time of an offense is not important, it may be alleged generally, and "on or about" permits a reasonable variance in dates. See United States v. Nunez, 1 Cir., 1981, 668 F.2d 10, 11-12; United States v. Antonelli, 1 Cir., 1971, 439 F.2d 1068, 1070. In view of the amount of equipment discovered, still with residue present, it would be reasonable for the jury to conclude that defendant was conducting an ongoing business, and that more substantial amounts of cocaine had been present within a reasonable time of the discovery.

There was, however, prejudicial error with regard to the cocaine conviction. The court allowed the government to show that defendant violated the court's order to furnish handwriting exemplars. From this the government was permitted to argue the jury's right to draw unfavorable inferences. Defendant challenges this as violating his Fifth Amendment right to avoid compelled testimonial self-incrimination, magnified by permitting comment thereon. At first blush there might appear to be no possible merit in this complaint, it being well settled that handwriting is a matter of physical characteristics which may be demanded without infringing constitutional rights. See United States v. Euge, 1980, 444 U.S. 707, 713, 100 S.Ct. 874, 879, 63 L.Ed.2d 141. Indeed, it is the stock in trade of handwriting experts that some characteristics are so personally entrenched that disguise is almost impossible. See Harrison, Suspect Documents, (1958) 292, 349-51. In Gilbert v. California, 1967, 388 U.S. 263, at 266-67, 87 S.Ct. 1951, at 1953-54, 18 L.Ed.2d 1173, the Court said, in holding that handwriting exemplars constitute "real or physical evidence" not within the Fifth Amendment privilege protecting communications,

"One's voice and handwriting are, of course, means of communication. It by no means follows, however, that every compulsion of an accused to use his voice or write compels a communication within the cover of the privilege. A mere handwriting exemplar, in contrast to the content of what is written, like the voice or body itself, is an identifying physical characteristic outside its protection. United States v. Wade, supra, [388 U.S. 218] at 222-223 [87 S.Ct. 1926 at 1929-1930, 18 L.Ed.2d 1149]. No claim is made that the content of the exemplar was testimonial or communicative matter." (Emphasis suppl.)

[7] The government here, however, did not limit its demand to handwriting exemplars as such. When the agent stated the words he wished written down, defendant replied that he wanted to see what he was to write, rather than take dictation. When the agent refused, defendant's counsel asked whether the agent would permit counsel to write out what defendant was to write, but this, too, was rejected on the ground—which was the fact—that the court had approved the government's proposed dictation procedure. Defendant refused to comply, even though the court held him in contempt.

The only difference we see between dictation and being shown the words to write would be to discover defendant's choice of spelling. Asked by us why this was not testimonial content as distinguished from a "mere exemplar," the government's only response was to cite United States v. Pheaster, 9 Cir., 1976, 544 F.2d 353, cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1099, 97 S.Ct. 1118, 51 L.Ed.2d 546. where, at 372, the court said, in reply to the defendant's claim that taking dictation might disclose that he misspelled words,

"Like spelling, penmanship is acquired by learning. The manner of spelling a word is no less an 'identifying characteristic' than the manner of crossing a 't' or looping an 'o'. All may tend to identify a defendant as the author of a writing without involving the content or message of what is written." (Emphasis suppl.)

The Pheaster court got off on the wrong foot. Basic penmanship, of course, is learned, but to say that the ultimate handwriting is an intellectual process of learning, as distinguished from physical form, is simply not so. The distinction is what caused the Court, ante, to exempt compelled handwriting from the Fifth Amendment. We agree that spelling may be an identifying characteristic no less than handwriting idiosyncrasies. The trouble is, from the standpoint of the Fifth Amendment, that it may be something more. When he writes a dictated word, the writer is saying, "This is how I spell it,"—a testimonial message in addition to a physical display. If a defendant misspelled a common word, and the document sought to be attributed to him misspelled it the same way, could it be thought that the government would not, quite properly, United States v. Russell, 3 Cir., 1983, 704 F.2d 86, 91, argue that there was a message? Indeed, the Pheaster court said exactly that, "The manner of spelling a word is ... an 'identifying characteristic.'" and then drew the wrong conclusion. Not surprisingly, the court cited no authority for its position.

This might be tested another way; could the defendant be put on the stand and given a spelling test? Obviously, compelled answers would be testimonial, or communicative. Yet that is precisely what the government proposed. At the same time, it did not deny that it had a probation file containing defendant's handwriting, both recent and old. We are not surprised that he suspected the government of wanting something other than handwriting.

[8] Alternatively, the government claims that defendant, through cross-examination of the agent, was permitted to bring out essentially why he refused to comply. We do not think so, but much less could we think a jury of laymen would find any self-asserted reason defendant might give would offset the court's order and the inference the court charged could be drawn from non-compliance. The order invaded defendant's Fifth Amendment rights, and no protest by him could cure the consequence of permitting adverse comment upon his exercising them.

The government, properly, does not contend that, if error, it was harmless. Defendant was not the only occupant of the apartment, and in this case the inferences drawn from his refusal could have helped establish possession of the cocaine. Quite apart from this, portraying defendant as one who deliberately disobeys a court order because he fears the consequences of obedience, could not help but be prejudicial.

The convictions on all counts, the order denying the motion to suppress the firearms, and the order for contempt, are vacated, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

On Rehearing

ALDRICH, Senior Circuit Judge. On petition for rehearing the government has been prompted to cite an FBI regulation, and advance reasons why, from the standpoint of obtaining accurate handwriting exemplars, there may be proper advantages in dictation over a written request; e.g., speed and surprise, to reduce conscious manipulation. We accept this, but add that it should have been said before. We remain of opinion, however, that spelling is an intellectual process as distinguished from the pure physical habit or characteristics that make handwriting demandable, and are surprised at the government's persistence in arguing otherwise. Requiring an intellectual process, however subtly, over objection, is a clear violation of the Fifth Amendment.

Nor will we accept the government's undertaking not to rely upon misspelling comparisons. Even if no mention were made of it, a jury could well notice a duplication of mistakes. On the new trial we will permit the use of dictated exemplars, but only on the basis that, if any misspelling occurs, the jury be instructed—whether in fact true or not—that the government dictated the spelling, and that no inference is to be drawn therefrom. If defendant refuses to comply even on this basis, comment on the refusal shall be permitted.

The petition for rehearing is otherwise denied.

My name is Russell McNeil. I am currently being held in the Yakima County Jail. I am charged with one count of aggravated first degree murder, and one count of being an accomplice to aggravated first degree murder. The prosecutor has requested the death penalty for both crimes. My attorneys are Chris Tait and Tom Bothwell.

I was 17 years old on January 7, 1988, which is the date on which these crimes were allegedly committed. I turned 18 on August 15, 1988.

By order entered March 15, 1988, the Juvenile Court in Yakima County declined jurisdiction in my case, and I was remanded to adult court.

I was arrested on January 27, 1988, and have been in custody ever since that date.

My attorneys filed and argued a motion to dismiss the death penalty notice because juveniles are not eligible to receive the death penalty in Washington. That motion was denied. We filed a Petition for Discretionary Review, asking the Supreme Court of Washington to rule on that issue before trial, but that Petition was

That opinion was reviewed by my lawyers for the first time on June 26, 1989. A scheduling order was entered, with my consent, which provided that my case would go to trial 60 days after the U.S. Supreme Court opinion was issued. That 60 day period ends on August 25, 1989.

I am now asking that my trial begin on September 5, 1989. I consent to that trial date, even though it is a few days beyond August 25, 1989. I sign this waiver freely and voluntarily. I have reviewed it with my attorney. No threats or pressure or coercion of any kind has been used to obtain my signature on this document. COMES NOW the above-named Defendant, RUSSELL DUANE McNEIL, by and through his attorneys, and responds as follows to the motions of the Plaintiff, State of Washington, for (1) Discovery of evidence in possession of the defense; and (2) Additional handwriting exemplar.

I. DISCOVERY OF EVIDENCE IN POSSESSION OF THE DEFENSE

The Defendant asserts two bases, as reasons why the State's motion should be denied: (1) Attorney-client privilege; and (2) Attorney work product.

The parameters of the attorney-client privilege are summarized by Professor Tegland in 5A Washington Practice, §170-175 (1989). The statutory basis for the attorney-client privilege is RCW 5.60.060(2).

The privilege extends to both oral and written communications. Victor v. Fanning Starkey Co., 4 Wn.App 920 (1971). The privilege should be distinguished from the "work product" rule restricting pre-trial access to papers and other tangible evidence in the possession of an attorney.

RCW 5.60.060(2) says nothing about confidentiality, but our appellate courts have interpreted the privilege as barring evidence of communications only when the communications were intended as confidential.

It is generally held that the privilege belongs to the client, and that the privilege may be asserted by either the client or the client's attorney on behalf of the client.

As Professor Tegland notes:

Although the statute defining the attorney-client privilege contains no exceptions, the courts have for years held that the privilege does not protect communications in furtherance of a crime or fraud.

5A Washington Practice, §173. For example, in State v. Olwell, 64 Wn.2d 828 (1964), our Supreme Court described a procedure whereby an attorney could be compelled to provide to the prosecution an alleged murder weapon. Although the State in the case at bar cites Olwell, it should be distinguished. Professor Tegland also notes the general rule that: "The exception does not apply to communications after the crime or fraud is executed. These communications remain privileged." Supra, §173, citing Hartness v. Brown, 21 Wash. 655 (1899).

The attorney-client relationship binding defense counsel and Mr. McNeil in the instant case constrains counsel from fully responding to the factual allegations, on the record. This Court may desire to proceed in camera for further consideration of this matter. However, defense counsel asserts in good faith that the asserted evidence should be held to be within the attorney-client privilege and free from or not subject to the motion for discovery.

II. WORK PRODUCT

CrR 4.5 authorizes a limited scope to the right of the State to compel examination or discovery of work product. The alleged evidence should be held as not within the scope of CrR 4.5. As noted above, the work product basis for resisting this motion for discovery is distinct from the attorney-client privilege, as described by Professor Tegland:

Pretrial discovery is, of course, subject to the attorney-client privilege, but the discovery rules go on to add other refinements and restrictions peculiar to this discovery process. The rules restricting pretrial access to a lawyer's work have generated case law wholly separate from the cases interpreting the attorney-client privilege.

5A Washington Practice, §175.

Defense counsel asserts that the requested documents are within the scope of protected attorney-client work product.

III. MOTION FOR ADDITIONAL HANDWRITING EXEMPLAR

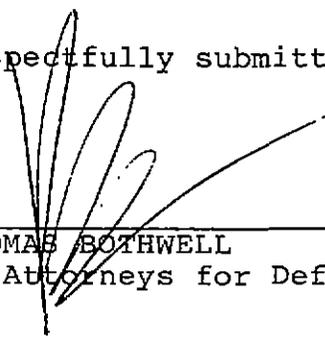

Defendant McNeil objects to any further handwriting exemplars. He has already provided, in good faith, the handwriting exemplar as previously required. There is no

20 the Prosecutor's MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO MOTION FOR BILL OF 21 PARTICULARS.

22 With all due respect, the Defendant must suggest that the 23 Prosecutor seems to have missed the point of the defense effort by 24 way of defense motions. The defense is basically moving this 25 Court alternatively: First, the Defendant is asking the Court to 26 compel the Prosecutor to explain and identify if his office has 27 any standards or criteria by which his office determines whether 28 to file a special notice, requesting the death penalty. Secondly, 29 we are asking that the Prosecutor indicate what those standards or 30 criteria are, if any he has. Thirdly, we are asking for 31 information relative to those criteria, as applied in this 32 particular case. Lastly, or in the alternative, we are asking 33 that the special notice and request for death penalty be dismissed 34 in the event the Prosecutor's response to these previously, just-35 stated motions is deemed inadequate or insufficient.

The MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO MOTION FOR BILL OF PARTICULARS cites various authorities, none of which are dispositive. There are absolutely no Washington state cases holding that the defense does not have a right to the information it is requesting by way of the instant motions. In fact, on information and belief, it is alleged by the defense that there have been numerous Superior Court proceedings involving requested death penalties in which the Prosecutor has been required to provide the very type of information requested now by Defendant McNeil.

The Prosecutor's Memorandum includes the following statement:

"The defense also cites several Washington cases as authority that the trial court may review the pre-trial actions of the Prosecuting Attorney and, therefore, invites the trial court in this case to do so in some unspecified manner.

The defense has specified a manner by which this information can be provided. There are numerous ways in which the information can be provided. The prosecutor is improperly resisting all manner of disclosure.

The Prosecutor's Memorandum includes the following additional statement:

In the present case, there are no agreed upon facts or circumstances concerning any aspect of this trial that the State is aware of. The State invites the defense to reveal what facts they believe are agreed upon or undisputed in this case which could form the basis of a pre-trial court ruling to strike the death penalty aspects of this case.

With all due respect, Defendant McNeil through the undersigned must indicate he has absolutely no understanding of the point of this paragraph of the Prosecutor's Memorandum. The defense respectfully resists any assertion that there must be some quantum of agreed upon facts or stipulation before the Prosecutor should be compelled to provide the information requested by way of the defense motions. The Defendant is at a loss to understand what facts the Prosecutor thinks must be present in order for him to be required to reveal the information requested by the defense.

In further support of this motion, the defense offers the recent case from the United States District Court, Central District of Illinois, United States of America ex rel. Charles Silagy v. Howard Peters, III, et al., copy attached, wherein the court finds the Illinois statute unconstitutional in part because of the lack of more specific guidelines relative to prosecutorial discretion. We respectfully submit that the Washington statute has this same vice, particularly if the Court will not grant the defense motions herein.

FINAL ORDER

This is a habeas corpus proceeding under 28 U.S.C. § 2254. For the reasons stated in this order, the writ will issue directing that the petitioner be resentenced within 120 days.

BACKGROUND

In the late hours of February 13 and the early hours of February 14, 1980, in Vermilion County, Illinois, two women were brutally beaten and murdered. The petitioner, Charles Silagy, was prosecuted for the murders and convicted. There is no doubt that Silagy killed the two women.

In his voluntary confession to the police, Silagy described what he did to the first victim:

[S]he ...got a little rowdy with me, and I slapped her glasses off of her face, and...she said somethin' else, and I reached up with my left hand and grabbed her by the throat and started choking her. My truck done a spin-around, and killed itself, and I...shut it off and started chokin' her...some more, and kept chokin' her and...a car come up from the south, and so I acted like we was makin' out, and the car was...all clear, and I commenced chokin' her with my left hand, and...then I decided I didn't have enough room, or somethin'...in the truck...so I...fought with the door for a little bit, and I got it open from the outside, and...because it will not open from the inside. Had to crank the window down...and all this time I still got ahold of her throat. And chokin' her. In the sentencing stage of the case,¹ Silagy elected to proceed ¹Ill. Rev. Stat. ch 38, ¶ 9-1(d) says in pertinent part:

Where requested by the State, the court shall conduct a separate sentencing proceeding to determine the existence of factors set forth in subsection (b) and to consider any aggravating or mitigating factors as indicated in subsection (c). The proceeding shall be conducted:

1. before the jury that determined the defendant's guilt; or

The consideration of the factors under subsection (b) is the first phase in which the question whether the case is one in which the death penalty may be imposed is decided. The consideration of the factors under subsection (c) is the second phase in which the question shall the death penalty be imposed is decided.

pro se. Silagy told the jury during the first phase, where it was determined that his offense was one to which the death penalty could apply:

As you have been instructed, there is two different verdicts. I instruct the jury to apply themselves and think back to your verdict that was rendered yesterday. Take all those items into your mind studying them very closely. Upon examing [sic] those items, do not hinder, do not look at me for sympathy because I don't want it. I ask you to look at it from my standpoint. There is two victims in this crime; they can not ask for sympathy because they are dead. Thank you.

Record at 906.

In the second phase, to determine whether the death penalty should be imposed, Silagy addressed the jury and said:

I would like to make a statement at this time. Ladies and Gentlemen of the jury, I'm sitting here today. I have voluntarily come up here and sat on this stand to tell you that I did, without any hesitation, stab and kill and stomp Cheryl Block; stomp and stab Anne Budde-Waters. I do not want sympathy from any one of you. Any decision that you would bring back would not be held against you in any form or fashion by anyone in this Courtroom or any of my relations, nor by myself. Also, as has been submitted by the Defense, I mean, excuse me, the prosecution, three documents that have been processed through the legal process. All of those three items I've served some time for. Probation on one. On number two I took a plea bargain; got one to three years in the Illinois State Department of Corrections. I was placed in a maximum security penitentiary; released four months and twenty-eight days later. I was convicted on the second case which I received six to ten years. Went to the Appellate Court; got time cut, which they gave me three years, four months, and ten days. So I am well aware of the fact what lays in front of me. I have no desire to sit in no man's penitentiary. That's not a cop-out, and that's not a plea. What I am asking the jury is do not feel sympathy, feel empathy. If you can wear these ll's right now, do so.

My next statement, I will say this: I do want the death penalty; and I will go to any lengths to have it served upon me. I took two lives through my own foolishness, not nobody else's fault. Mine. I paid twice before. I am willing to pay the price now, and no hesitation. I will further state that under provisions within the law which will be instructed by the Judge, he will tell you some of the things that can be and would be given upon me. I assume, Your Honor, that would be correct?

Record at 979-81.

The jury granted Silagy's request and returned verdicts finding unanimously that an aggravating factor existed warranting imposition of the death penalty and that no mitigating factor existed to preclude imposition of that penalty. The trial judge entered judgment on the verdicts and sentenced the petitioner to be executed.

The petitioner sought to overturn the judgment in the Supreme Court of Illinois but his conviction was affirmed. People v. Silagy, 101 Ill.2d 137 (1984). The petitioner also sought post-conviction relief in the trial court without success, and the post-conviction judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court of Illinois. People v. Silagy, 116 Ill.2d 357 (1987).

On November 7, 1988, the petitioner sought habeas corpus in this court to overturn his conviction. Silagy makes five main contentions in support of his petition that center on the following occurrences during the trial proceedings:

1. The psychiatrists who were appointed by the court to examine Silagy and to assist him with his defense of insanity were not professionally competent. Silagy argues that the physicians, in making their diagnoses, relied on false information given to them by Silagy and reached professionally unacceptable opinions about the petitioner's psychiatric state. As a result, Silagy's rights to due process, to equal protection, and to effective assistance of counsel were abridged.

2. The clerk of the state court jury commission arbitrarily excluded from the jury venire all persons seventy years of age and older. That practice, Silagy argues, deprived him of a jury venire made up of a fair cross section of the community, taking away his Sixth Amendment rights and his Fourteenth Amendment due process rights.

3. Juror misconduct deprived him of his due process rights and his Sixth Amendment right to a jury trial.

4. The trial court committed constitutional error by permitting Silagy to represent himself in the sentencing phase of the trial. The trial judge made no determination, the petitioner asserts, of his mental competency to refuse the assistance of counsel and to elect not to offer any evidence in mitigation in the sentencing proceeding. This resulted in a loss of the petitioner's Fourteenth Amendment due process rights and his Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment.

5. The prosecution did not give notice that the psychiatrists' testimony would be relied upon by the State to support a finding of an aggravating circumstance to warrant the death penalty. The petitioner's statements to the psychiatrists were introduced in evidence against the him. The petitioner says that these occurrences violated his Fourteenth Amendment rights to due process and his right against self-incrimination under the Fifth Amendment.

The petitioner raises two further claims. The first concerns Illinois' abandonment of electrocution as a means of execution and the second deals with erroneous testimony that the two victims were siblings.

Finally, the petitioner attacks the constitutionality of the Illinois death penalty statute. He argues that it vests unrestricted discretion in the prosecutor to seek the death penalty and lacks basic notice requirements that result in Eighth and Fourteenth Amendment violations.

RIGHT TO COMPETENT PSYCHIATRIST

Prior to trial, in anticipation of raising an insanity defense, the petitioner moved for the appointment of psychiatrists. The trial court ordered Drs. Daniel Pugh and Arthur Traugott of the Carle Clinic in Urbana to examine Silagy to determine whether he "lacked a substantial capacity either to appreciate the criminality of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of law as a result of mental disorder or mental defect at the time of the offenses charged in this case." (Record at C-53.) The parties agree that the doctors relied, in formulating their diagnoses, to some extent on statements made by Silagy that were later found to be false. The petitioner now argues that because the court-appointed psychiatrists accepted Silagy's uncorroborated and false accounts of his experiences in Viet Nam, they were incompetent. As a result of that incompetency, the petitioner says, there is a great risk that the issue of his sanity was inaccurately resolved.

The petitioner relies upon the Supreme Court's decision in Ake v. Oklahoma, 470 U.S. 68 (1985). In Ake, the Court held that:

[W]hen a defendant demonstrates to the trial judge that his sanity at the time of the offense is to be a significant factor at trial, the State must, at a minimum, assure the defendant access to a competent psychiatrist who will conduct an appropriate examination and assist in evaluation, preparation, and presentation of the defense. This is not to say, of course, that the indigent defendant has a constitutional right to chose a psychiatrist of his personal liking or to receive funds to hire his own. Our concern is that the indigent defendant have access to a competent psychiatrist for the purpose we have discussed, and as in the case of the provision of counsel we leave to the State the decision on how to implement this right.

Id. at 83 (emphasis added).

The petitioner argues that "because the diagnoses of Drs. Pugh and Traugott are now known to have rested on false facts, and because their methodologies were seriously flawed, especially because they failed to corroborate the statements of exposure to extreme violence that were made by an arguably insane defendant, the assistance they rendered here cannot be said to have been competent within the contemplation of Ake." (Petitioner's Memorandum, p. 31.) The petitioner argues that the standard for determining whether the psychiatrist is competent is the same standard adopted by the Supreme Court in Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668 (1984), reh'g denied, 467 U.S. 1267, for determining whether a petitioner was denied effective assistance of counsel. The court rejects this argument.

Ake requires only that "the indigent defendant have access to a competent psychiatrist" Ake at 83. Ake does not require that the psychiatrist's evaluation be flawless. The trial judge appointed three board-certified, experienced, practicing psychiatrists to assist the petitioner in preparing his defense. Accordingly, the court finds that the requirements of Ake have been met. The court holds that Ake merely requires that to be "competent," the psychiatrist appointed by the court must be experienced and board certified. To interpret Ake as the petitioner suggests would involve resolving what amounts to a medical malpractice claim in this collateral attack on the state court judgment.

This ground for habeas corpus relief is without merit.

FAIR CROSS SECTION

The parties agree that contrary to Ill. Rev. Stat., ch. 78, ¶ 4 (1979), the civil servant responsible for assembling jury venires in Vermilion County excluded from jury service all persons who were seventy years of age or older. (See Scharlau Affidavit, Exhibit VB.) The petitioner argues that because of this systematic exclusion he was denied his constitutional rights under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to have a jury selected from a fair cross section of the community. Taylor v. Louisiana, 419 U.S. 522 (1975); Duren v. Missouri, 439 U.S. 357 (1979).

In Taylor, the Supreme Court held that the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments require that the jury venire be drawn from a fair cross section of the community. Id. at 530, 538. In Duren v. Missouri, the Supreme Court set forth what a defendant must show to establish a prima facie violation of the fair cross section requirement. The Court held that:

[T]he defendant must show (1) that the group alleged to be excluded is a "distinctive" group in the community; (2) that the representation of this group in venires from which juries are selected is not fair and reasonable in relation to the number of such persons in the community; and (3) that this underrepresentation is due to the systematic exclusion of the group in the jury-selection process.

439 U.S. at 364.

The petitioner argues that he has established a prima facie cross section violation under Duren. The only point of contention is whether the group excluded by the jury clerk is a "distinctive" group within the meaning of the Duren test. In support of that position, the petitioner introduced the testimony of a social scientist during the evidentiary hearing before this court. The court did not find that testimony persuasive.

The court accepts that the petitioner has satisfied parts two and three of the Duren test. The court, however, does not agree that the excluded group is a "distinctive" group for Duren purposes. People age seventy and above do not, based on age alone, constitute an "identifiable" segment that plays a major role in the community. Taylor, 419 U.S. at 530. While the elderly have much to offer in terms of life experience and exposure that make their contribution to all aspects of life, including jury service, invaluable, they cannot be classified as an identifiable segment on age alone. They are not a distinct group for Duren purposes. What is it that distinguishes people who are seventy years old and older from people who are sixty-nine or sixty or fifty-five for that matter? No evidence was offered to suggest that there is some common thread of shared experience or political, social or religious viewpoint that binds this group together to make it distinct from any other age group. The systematic exclusion of citizens seventy years old and older was in violation of Illinois law but it did not violate the fair cross section requirements of the Constitution. Accordingly, the court holds that the group excluded was not distinctive for Duren purposes and as a result the petitioner has failed to raise a proper cross section violation.

Moreover, even if the court found that the group excluded in this case was distinctive for Duren purposes, the Supreme Court's recent decision in Teague v. Lane, No. 87-5259 slip op. (U.S. Feb. 22, 1989), bars this court from applying that finding to overturn the petitioner's conviction.

In Teague, the plurality decision written by Justice O'Connor held that "habeas corpus cannot be used as a vehicle to create new constitutional rules of criminal procedure unless those rules would be applied retroactively to all defendants on collateral review through one of the two exceptions we have articulated." Id. at 25-26. In Teague, the plurality adopted Justice Harlan's exceptions to the general rule of non-retroactivity for cases on collateral review.

First, a new rule should be applied retroactively if it places "certain kinds of primary, private individual conduct beyond the power of the criminal law--making authority to prescribe." Mackey, 401 U.S., at 692. Second, a new rule should be applied retroactively if it requires the observance of "those procedures that . . . are 'implicit in the concept of order of liberty.'" (Citation omitted.)

Id. at 16. Under Teague the court must first look at the proposed constitutional rule to determine if it falls within one of Justice Harlan's two exceptions. If it does, then the new constitutional rule of criminal procedure may be recognized on collateral review. Otherwise, the court must refuse to create new constitutional rules of criminal procedure on collateral review.

The petitioner argues that Teague does not apply since he is not asking the court to create a new constitutional rule. The petitioner maintains that the rule to be applied in this case is the rule adopted in Taylor and Duren, and that all he is asking the court to do is apply an old rule and hold that the group of citizens seventy years and older constitute a "distinctive group." The court does not agree. Taylor and Duren establish that distinctive groups cannot be excluded from jury venires. The Court has not defined what constitutes a distinctive group. In fact, the Court left it to the states to determine what constitutes a distinctive group. See Duren at 370; Taylor at 538. Accordingly, for this court to decide that the group comprised of persons seventy years and older is a distinctive group for Duren purposes, would be to announce a new constitutional rule. Furthermore, the rule would not fall within the two exceptions described by Justice Harlan and adopted by the Supreme Court in Teague. This ground for habeas corpus relief, therefore, fails.

JUROR MISCONDUCT

Silagy claims that his constitutional rights were violated when (1) the trial court failed to replace a sleeping juror, (2) the jury considered off-the-record evidence in the form of media coverage and one juror's personal input, and (3) the jury, in reaching its sentencing verdict, considered off-the-record, inaccurate information regarding possible punishments Silagy might receive.

(1)

Silagy argues that his rights to due process and to a fair trial were violated when the trial court failed to replace a juror who dozed off "a couple of times" during the presentation of testimony.

The Illinois Supreme Court addressed this claim.

After all of the testimony had been received, the defendant's counsel requested that one of the jurors be removed by the court and replaced by one of the three alternate jurors. Defense counsel stated that she and "other individuals in the Courtroom" had observed the juror periodically dozing during the trial. She claimed that the juror "was about falling or leaning against the juror seated next to him." The trial court stated that it had seen "no evidence as stated by Defense Counsel." When asked why she had not previously called the juror's alleged inattentiveness to the court's and the prosecutor's attention, defense counsel acknowledged that she should have objected earlier.

Despite its expressed belief that the tardiness of the claim raised a question as to the sincerity of the request, the court examined the juror. The juror stated that he may have nodded once or twice for a period of seconds, but could not say that he fell asleep at any time during the course of the trial. He further stated that he did not think he had missed any of the testimony. The defendant's attorney did not question the juror and offered no evidence that the juror had fallen asleep. The court denied the motion to dismiss the juror.

The defendant now argues that he was denied the right to be tried by a jury of 12 competent persons who consider all of the evidence presented. He cites United States v. Cameron (3d Cir. 1972), 464 F.2d 333, and United States v. Smith (5th Cir. 1977), 550 F.2d 277, in arguing that the juror should have been replaced. In both of those cases it was said that a juror who cannot remain awake during much of a trial is unable to perform his duty. Here, not only was it not shown that the challenged juror slept regularly during the trial, but the trial court found that the evidence was insufficient to prove that he was asleep at any time. On this issue there was only the defense counsel's allegation and the juror's own testimony that he had not missed any of the testimony. Despite her claim that others had seen the juror sleeping, the defense counsel did not present any testimony to support her claim. It cannot be said that the trial court abused discretion in denying the motion. Too, if the defendant or his attorney did see the juror sleeping, there was a duty to call it to the attention of the court at that time. (United States v. Carter (10th Cir. 1970), 433 F.2d 874, 876.) The failure to do so resulted in a waiver of the point. People v. Nachowicz, (1930), 340 Ill. 480; People v. Shockey (1966), 66 Ill. App.2d 245.

People v. Silagy, 101 Ill.2d 147, 170-71 (1984).

The Illinois Supreme Court subsequently refused to readdress the issue on post-conviction review, finding that such review was barred by res judicata because the issue had been raised and disposed of on direct appeal. People v. Silagy, 116 Ill.2d 357, 367 (1987).

This court is bound by the factual determinations of the Illinois Supreme Court unless the record shows that there is no basis for such determinations. Sumner v. Mata, 449 U.S. 539, 547 (1981); United States ex rel. Cosey v. Wolff, 682 F.2d 691, 693 (7th Cir. 1982). The record shows ample basis for the Illinois Supreme Court's conclusion that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying Silagy's motion to dismiss the juror.

The petitioner also alleges that the jury considered off-the-record evidence in the form of media coverage and one juror's personal input. In disposing of his petition for post-conviction relief, the Illinois Supreme Court addressed this claim. That court stated:

Because the actual effect of the complained-of conduct on the minds of the jurors cannot be proved, this court has held that "the standard to be applied is whether the 'conduct involved "such a probability that prejudice will result that it is [to be] deemed inherently lacking in due process."' (People v. Holmes (1978), 69 Ill.2d 507, 514, quoting Estes v. Texas (1965), 381 U.S. 532, 542-43, 14 L.Ed.2d 543, 550, 85 S. Ct. 1628, 1633; People v. Tobe (1971), 49 Ill.2d 538, 544.) We consider that the juror's affidavit concerning jurors' alleged discussion of news reports did not demonstrate that the jury deliberations were so affected as to deprive the defendant of due process. Assertions of exposure to media coverage do not of themselves demonstrate prejudice to a defendant. (People v. Lieberman (1986), 149 Ill. App.3d 1052, 1057.) Considering the record before us, we cannot say the judge's denial of an evidentiary hearing on this claim was manifestly erroneous. (People v. Griffin (1985), 109 Ill.2d 293, 303 ; People v. Bracey (1972), 51 Ill.2d 514.) If a juror did comment to other jurors that the defendant was a bad person, it must, however, be presumed, absent a showing to the contrary, that the jury followed the court's instructions in reaching a verdict. Too, the defendant confessed before the jury that he had killed the two women; his mother had testified that she and the defendant's sister had been raped by the defendant. We can be certain that the juror's remark, if made, did not affect the jury's appraisal of the defendant's character.

People v. Silagy, 116 Ill.2d 357, 366-67 (1987).

Again, because there is ample basis in the record, the court finds itself bound to accept the factual findings of the Illinois Supreme Court.

Finally, Silagy argues that the jury's sentencing verdict was affected by consideration of off-the-record, inaccurate information regarding the punishment he would receive if the jury did or did not impose the death penalty. Silagy claims that the jury discussed that if sentenced to life imprisonment he would serve only five to seven years in prison. If the jury imposed the death penalty, on the other hand, he would never be executed but would remain incarcerated for longer than seven years.

In the post-conviction case, the Illinois Supreme Court found that this claim was also properly dismissed on the ground that "affidavits or testimony to show 'the motive, method, or process by which the jury reached its verdict' is not admissible." People v. Silagy, 116 Ill.2d at 367 (citations omitted).

Federal Rule of Evidence 606(b) also supports that position.

Upon an inquiry into the validity of a verdict or indictment, a juror may not testify as to any matter or statement occurring during the course of the jury's deliberations or to the effect of anything upon that or any other juror's mind or emotions as influencing the juror to assent to or dissent from the verdict or indictment or concerning the juror's mental processes in connection therewith, except that a juror may testify on the question whether extraneous prejudicial information was improperly brought to the jury's attention or whether any outside influence was improperly brought to bear upon any juror. Nor may a juror's affidavit or evidence of any statement by the juror concerning a matter about which the juror would be precluded from testifying be received for these purposes.

The discussions about the number of years Silagy would actually serve if he were sentenced to life imprisonment rather than being sentenced to death were not based on extraneous matter but were rather based on a juror's erroneous ideas. The jurors were talking about whether or not the death penalty would be justified in this case. The fact that they discussed what they thought the actual result would be were Silagy sentenced to life imprisonment rather than execution, does not invalidate the proceeding.

Accordingly, this ground for habeas relief is denied.

WAIVER OF COUNSEL AND MITIGATING EVIDENCE AT CAPITAL SENTENCING PROCEEDING

1. Silagy alleges that he was not mentally competent either to waive his constitutional right to counsel or to represent himself at the sentencing proceeding or to decide not to offer mitigating evidence at the sentencing proceeding.

With respect to his waiver of counsel at the sentencing proceeding, the Illinois Supreme Court determined that Silagy was competent. Responding to Silagy's suggestion that the extreme stress resulting from the trial might have triggered anxiety neurosis so that he was not competent to make an intelligent waiver of counsel, the Illinois Supreme Court stated:

Immediately after the defendant had been found guilty of the offenses charged, he asked that he be allowed to proceed without counsel. The court allowed the defendant to reconsider his request overnight. The following day he again made the request and the court questioned the defendant. This examination included:

"THE COURT: Do you think you understand the severity of this, and do you understand what you are doing? Do you think you understand what the actual circumstances are?

THE DEFENDANT: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: You've thought about this for some time, have you?

THE DEFENDANT: Yes.

THE COURT: Have you discussed this with your attorney, that this is what you want to do?

THE DEFENDANT: Yes, I have very thoroughly.

THE COURT: And you feel this is the way you want to proceed?

THE DEFENDANT: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Does Counsel have anything else that they think that this defendant should be apprised of?

COUNSEL: No, your Honor."

It was explained to the defendant that his attorneys would continue to sit at the counsel table and advise him as to how to proceed, but that all decisions would be made by him and that his attorneys would not address the court without the defendant's consent. The defendant's request to proceed without counsel was "due to the fact that their ethics of law, I would not ask them to go against their work. It was my decision to carry out what will happen." The defendant then stated that his decision was made freely and voluntarily without threats, promises, or coercion. The court made this finding:

"[t]hat the Defendant is a responsible person who is under no mental disability and who is knowingly, intelligently, and understandingly, electing to proceed in his defense as he suggested. The court further finds that the Defendant understands the nature of the charges for which he's been convicted, the seriousness of the possible penalties in the case, and has freely and voluntarily undertaken to act as his own attorney with assistance from his Counsel who are present at all times whenever he requested that Counsel for any assistance from them.

Do you have any objections to that statement, Mr. Silagy?

THE DEFENDANT: No, Your Honor.

THE COURT: That is a true statement?

THE DEFENDANT: It is a true statement.

THE COURT: At this time the Court will rule that the Defendant has a right to proceed as he has requested representing himself with his attorneys advising him in any respect he wishes. And the attorneys can participate and perform all the usual functions as Defense Counsel as requested by the defendant or not participate as directed by the Defendant from time to time."

People v. Silagy, 101 Ill.2d 157, 176-78 (1984). In disposing of a related claim, the Illinois Supreme Court stated further:

It is clear that the sixth amendment to the Constitution of the United States (U.S. Const., amend. VI) provides for the right of self-representation in criminal proceedings. (Faretta v. California (1975), 422 U.S. 806, 45 L.Ed.2d 562, 95 S. Ct. 2525; see also, Ill. Const. 1970, art. I, sec. 8.) The "'right of a defendant to represent himself, when his choice is intelligently made, is as basic and fundamental as his right to be represented by counsel.'" (People v. Nelson (1971), 47 Ill.2d 570, 574; People v. Bush (1965), 32 Ill.2d 484, 487.). . . . Although a court may consider his decision unwise, if it is freely, knowingly and intelligently made, that decision must be accepted out of "that respect for the individual which is the lifeblood of the law." Illinois v. Allen (1970), 397 U.S. 337, 350-51, 25 L.Ed.2d 353, 363, 90 S. Ct. 1057, 1064 (Brennan, J., concurring).

The record shows that the trial court fully informed the defendant of the relevant substantive and procedural law involved. The defendant was informed of the possible sentencing alternatives. His decision was made after consultation with his attorneys. He was obviously aware of the possibility of being sentenced to death, since that was the punishment he requested. The record is clear that Silagy's decision to discharge his counsel was knowingly and intelligently made.

There is no suggestion that the defendant was suffering any impairment of reasoning ability at the time of his waiver of counsel. He showed understanding of the law, asked intelligent questions, and did not demonstrate any of the symptoms which he said had accompanied the disturbed episodes that he described. Dr. Ziporyn, who testified for the defendant, reported that he understood the nature of the charge and could cooperate with his attorney. The jury had found he was not insane at the time of the murders. The defendant's attorneys did not advise the trial court of any indication of an inability of the defendant to make a rational decision concerning the discharge of counsel, as the attorneys would have had a duty to do. The reasons the defendant expressed for discharging his attorneys and desiring a sentence of death were not irrational (he feared their ethical duty prevented them from carrying out his wishes to be given a death sentence, and he wished to be sentenced to death because of feelings of guilt and remorse, a desire to spare his parents from further agony because of his conduct, his dread of confinement in the penitentiary, and a desire to die with grace and dignity). There simply is no showing that Silagy was suffering under a reactive psychosis at trial or was otherwise mentally incapable of making an intelligent waiver of counsel. We note, too, that even Dr. Ziporyn testified that the defendant did not suffer a loss of intellectual function during his periods of disturbance.

Id. at 179-81.

This court is bound by the factual determinations of the Illinois Supreme Court unless the record shows that there is no basis for such determinations. Sumner v. Mata, 449 U.S. 539, 547 (1981); United States ex rel. Cosey v. Wolff, 682 F.2d 691, 693 (7th Cir. 1982). The record shows ample basis for the Illinois Supreme Court's conclusion that Silagy's competence to waive counsel at the sentencing proceeding was made knowingly and intelligently.

Because it has been determined that Silagy's waiver of counsel was knowingly and intelligently made, it follows that his waiver of mitigating evidence at the sentencing proceeding was also knowingly and intelligently made.

The petitioner now argues that there were various alternatives by which all available mitigating evidence could have been presented to his sentencing jury. He suggests that: stand-by counsel could have argued mitigating evidence; the court could have called its own witnesses; the court could have appointed a special counsel to present mitigating evidence; or the court could have admitted a presentence investigation report into evidence. Adopting one of these alternatives, Silagy says, would have allowed the sentencing jury to perform its constitutionally mandated function of assuring that the penalty of death is appropriate and individualized.

Silagy argues that any of these alternatives would have coalesced perfectly with the law in this jurisdiction and cites United States v. Taylor, 569 F.2d 448, 452 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 435 U.S. 952 (1978), for the proposition that:

[F]laretta holds that an accused has a constitutional right to dispense with the assistance of counsel and to conduct his defense personally. It does not inevitably follow, however, that this right of self-representation comprehends any correlative right to preclude the trial court from appointing counsel and authorizing him to participate in the trial over the accused's objection in order to protect the public interest in the fairness and integrity of the proceedings. (Footnote omitted.)

to assist a pro se defendant at trial who had previously indicated that he felt unqualified to put on his own defense. Id. at 451. It was only after the defendant stated, and it became clear, that he would take no part in the proceedings, that the trial court lifted its initial ban on appointed counsel's participation. It was following the recitation of these facts that the Taylor court made the above quoted statement. In the present case, however, Silagy never indicated that he believed himself to be unqualified, and rather than refusing to participate in the sentencing proceeding, he dismissed counsel so as to be able to participate.

More importantly, the court finds that the petitioner's argument that the court should have employed alternative means to present mitigating evidence collides squarely with the reasoning of Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806 (1974). In Faretta, the Supreme Court observed initially that there existed a "nearly universal conviction, on the part of our people as well as our courts, that forcing a lawyer upon an unwilling defendant is contrary to his basic right to defend himself if he truly wants to do so." Id. at 817. Faretta also noted that the structure of the Sixth Amendment supports the right of self-representation: This amendment "does not provide merely that a defense shall be made for the accused; it grants to the accused personally the right to make his defense." Id. at 819.

The Supreme Court was aware that in most criminal cases defendants could present a better defense with the help of counsel than without it. The Court, however, explicitly refused to allow this fact to undercut a defendant's right to proceed pro se.

The right to defend is personal. The defendant, not his lawyer or the State, will bear the personal consequences of a conviction. It is the defendant, therefore, who must be free personally to decide whether in his particular case counsel is to his advantage. And although he may conduct his own defense ultimately to his own detriment, his choice must be honored out of "that respect for the individual which is the lifeblood of the law." (Citation omitted.) (Brennan, J., concurring.)

Id. at 834.

Under Faretta and its progeny, exercise of the Sixth Amendment right to self-representation is unqualified before the trial begins. Faretta at 818-21; United States v. Brown, 744 F.2d 905, 908 (2nd Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1089 (1984). Once the trial is in progress, the judge may curtail the right upon finding that the legitimate interests of the defendant are outweighed by potential disruption of the proceedings already in progress. United States v. Brown, 744 F.2d at 908; United States v. Wesley, 798 F.2d 1155, 1155 (8th Cir. 1986). There are no allegations and the record contains no evidence that Silagy's presentation to the sentencing jury was in any way disruptive of the proceedings.

Additionally, the Seventh Circuit has rejected the notion that the court should intervene if it becomes apparent that the pro se litigant is unable to defend himself. In United States v. Moya-Gomez, 860 F.2d 706, 741 (1988), the court adopted the reasoning of the Sixth Circuit in McDowell, 814 F.2d at 251:

The only thing that was "unfair" about McDowell's trial was that he did not represent himself very well However, as the Supreme Court stated in Faretta, "whatever else may or may not be open to him on appeal, a defendant who elects to represent himself cannot thereafter complain that the quality of his own defense amounted to a denial of 'effective assistance of counsel.'" (Citation omitted.) We think this logic applies equally to preclude the instant "fair trial" claim. The district court accorded McDowell his full constitutional rights at trial. (Citation omitted.)

Based on the foregoing, this claim also fails.

CONSIDERATION OF PSYCHIATRIC TESTIMONY IN PHASE TWO OF CAPITAL SENTENCING PROCEEDING

The petitioner alleges that neither he nor his attorneys were informed that the psychiatric testimony used at trial to rebut the defense of insanity would be used by the State in phase two of the capital sentencing proceeding as aggravating factors to be weighed in determining whether the death penalty should be imposed. This denied, Silagy says, his Fifth Amendment right not to incriminate himself and his Sixth Amendment right to the effective assistance of counsel. In support of his position, the petitioner relies on the Supreme Court's decision in Estelle v. Smith, 451 U.S. 454 (1981). In Estelle v. Smith, the Court considered whether:

[T]he admission of [a psychiatrist's] testimony at the penalty phase violated respondent's Fifth Amendment privilege against compelled self-incrimination because respondent was not advised before the pretrial psychiatric examination that he had a right to remain silent and any statement he made could be used against him at a sentencing proceeding.

Id. at 461. The Court held that the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination applied to the unwarned statements that the respondent made to the court-appointed psychiatrist. Id. at 463.

The petitioner acknowledges that the holding in Estelle v. Smith "was limited to the situation where the criminal defendant neither initiated a psychiatric evaluation nor introduced any psychiatric evidence at trial. Estelle v. Smith, 451 U.S. at 468."

(Page 131, Petitioner's Memorandum in Support of Petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus.) Nonetheless, he argues that subsequent cases have held that "the fact that the defense requested the examination does not obviate the necessity for giving the Miranda warnings where the defense did not request . . . an examination on the question of future dangerousness." Battie v. Estelle, 655 F.2d 692, 702 (5th Cir. 1981); Accord Booker v. Wainwright, 703 F.2d 1251, 1256 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 922 (1983). See Petitioner's Memorandum, p. 131.²

Both Estelle v. Smith and Battie v. Estelle arose under the Texas death penalty statute that requires the jury to assess the defendant's future dangerousness. Estelle v. Smith, 415 U.S. at 457-58. In Texas, because the state must prove future dangerousness beyond a reasonable doubt in a death penalty proceeding, the involuntary, unwarned statements to the court-appointed psychiatrist violate the Fifth Amendment. But in Illinois, future dangerousness is not an element of the state's case for the availability of death as a penalty. Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, ¶ 9-1(b). In Silagy's case the jury did not consider the psychiatrists' testimony in deciding whether death was an applicable punishment.

²Booker is completely distinguishable since in that case the prosecutor used the psychiatric evidence as impeachment of Booker's statements during the penalty phase of the trial. The Booker court held that "even assuming Booker's statements would not have been admissible in the state's case, there is no constitutional prohibition against using the information for impeachment purposes." Booker, 703 F.2d at 1258.

Finally, and what is determinative on this issue, the court notes that "volunteered statements . . . are not barred by the Fifth Amendment" Estelle v. Smith, 451 U.S. at 469. Silagy voluntarily allowed the psychiatrists' testimony to be considered at the death penalty hearing. Record at 919. Accordingly, the court concludes, based on the above discussion, that the petitioner's Fifth Amendment rights were not violated by the use of the psychiatrists' testimony at the death penalty hearing.

With regard to the petitioner's Sixth Amendment claim, the court notes that it was never presented to the Illinois courts. The petitioner has not shown cause and prejudice for that procedural default. See Wainwright v. Sykes, 433 U.S. 72 (1977).

Accordingly, this ground also fails.

ADDITIONAL CLAIMS

The petitioner also advances two additional grounds for habeas relief which have no merit but should be mentioned. First, at the time Silagy asked to be given the death penalty, the method of execution in Illinois was by electrocution. Subsequent to Silagy's sentencing, the method of execution was changed to lethal injection. The petitioner claims that lethal injection is a cruel and unusual punishment. There is nothing in the record that supports that contention. The Eighth Amendment does not guarantee a convicted defendant the right to select the method by which punishment will be inflicted.

Second, the petitioner says that erroneous information was put before the jury that the victims were sisters. The source of that erroneous fact seems to be Silagy's confession in which he referred to the victims as sisters. This claim of error was never presented to the state court and there is no support in the record that there was cause for that default or that the petitioner was prejudiced by reference to the victims as sisters. See Wainwright v. Sykes, 433 U.S. 72 (1977).

Both these claims fail.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF ILLINOIS STATUTE

The Illinois death penalty statute provides that the sentence of death may be considered only "where requested by the State." Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, § 9-1(d) (1979). This means that only where the local state's attorney asks the court to consider imposition of the death penalty will the court hold a sentencing proceeding in which that penalty may be imposed. Four Justices of the Illinois Supreme Court have joined in writing that the statute violates the provisions of the Eighth Amendment to the federal Constitution. People ex rel. Carey v. Cousins, 77 Ill.2d 531 (1979) (Ryan, J., Goldenhirsh, C.J., and Clark, J. dissenting), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 953 (1980); People v. Lewis, 88 Ill.2d 129 (1981) (Simon, J. dissenting), cert. denied, 109 S. Ct. 83 (1988). Those dissents constitute an articulate and persuasive statement of the basis for holding the Illinois statute unconstitutional under the Eighth Amendment. The dissents contain an exhaustive discussion of the controlling United States Supreme Court precedents. This court cannot improve upon those statements and discussions and therefore embraces and adopts them as its own. Justice Ryan points up specifically how the Illinois statute allows arbitrary and capricious imposition of the death penalty.

The risk of arbitrary and capricious action under section 9-1(d) is most vividly demonstrated by the case of People v. Greer, Docket No. 51214, which was only recently argued before this court. In that case the prosecutor requested the penalty hearing, and the death penalty was imposed upon the defendant. At oral argument before this court, the Attorney General confessed error and stated that this is not a case in which the death penalty should be imposed. Furthermore, this court was informed in oral argument that the State's Attorney who had prosecuted the case is no longer in office and that his successor agrees with the Attorney General. Greer's case clearly shows that because of the lack of adequate guidelines the decision to request or not to request a penalty hearing will, to a great degree, depend upon the whim of the individual prosecutor. Without legislatively enacted guidelines, the differences in prosecutors, though they be sincere in their beliefs, will inevitably lead to arbitrary and capricious action. Fortunately, this court is in a position to correct an unauthorized imposition of the death penalty. However, the statute may well be rendered arbitrary and capricious in its application by the fact that many prosecutors, in the exercise of unguided discretion, will not request a penalty hearing, whereas other prosecutors, faced with the same set of facts, will request such a hearing, and the death penalty may be imposed.

In Gregg v. Georgia, Mr. Justice Stewart stated: "Because of the uniqueness of the death penalty, Furman held that it could not be imposed under sentencing procedures that created a substantial risk that it would be inflicted in an arbitrary and capricious manner.

Furman mandates that where discretion is afforded a sentencing body on a matter so grave as the determination of whether a human life should be taken or spared, that discretion must be suitably directed and limited so as to minimize the risk of wholly arbitrary and capricious action. (Emphasis added.) (Gregg v. Georgia (1976), 428 U.S. 153, 188-89, 49 L.Ed.2d 859, 883, 96 S. Ct. 2909, 2932.)

Our statute contains no directions or guidelines to minimize the risk of wholly arbitrary and capricious action by the prosecutor in either requesting a sentencing hearing or in not requesting a sentencing hearing. The vague belief of the majority that the State's Attorney will not request such a hearing unless he believes that there will be evidence which will persuade a jury that the requisite elements for a death sentence exist is meaningless. Such belief, although the prosecutor may be sincere, will not "minimize the risk of wholly arbitrary and capricious action" unless the exercise of discretion by the prosecutor is aided, directed and limited by guidelines prescribed by the legislature.

People v. Cousins, 77 Ill.2d 531, 558-69 (1979) (Ryan, J., dissenting), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 953 (1980).

The lack of an adequate notice provision in the statute as to when the death penalty will be sought is also a constitutional defect. It affects the defendant's right to effective counsel as well as his right to basic due process. The prosecutor may withhold the decision to seek the death penalty until after a finding of guilt has been returned. Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, ¶ 9-1(d) (1979). A lawyer and a defendant need to know as soon as possible whether the death penalty will be sought. That knowledge affects their decisions on what type of defense will be made, what plea bargaining can be done, and whether a jury trial should be waived. See People ex rel. Carey v. Cousins, 77 Ill.2d 531, 560-61 (1979) (Ryan, J. dissenting).

In summary, none of the claims raised as grounds for habeas relief has merit, with the exception of the one challenging the constitutionality of the Illinois death penalty statute. For the reasons stated in this order, that claim has merit and the statute violates the precepts of the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution.

IT IS ORDERED that a writ of habeas corpus issue in this case vacating the petitioner's sentence of death. The State has 120 days to resentence the petitioner, or he shall be released.³

On the court's own motion, the execution of this order is stayed pending appeal by the parties.

ENTER this 29th day of April, 1989.

COMES NOW the State of Washington, plaintiff in the above-entitled action, by and through its undersigned Deputy Prosecuting Attorney in and for Yakima County, and moves the court for an Order of Discovery pursuant to Washington State Superior Court Criminal Rule 4.7(b)(2)(vii). The State specifically requests that the above-named defendant provide a second handwriting exemplar using the same standard forms previously used in this case which are provided by the Washington State Patrol for general use by law enforcement. The only special request concerning this exemplar is that it be completed entirely in printed form without any cursive handwriting since all the notes to be analyzed were printed.

5 The undersigned, being first duly sworn on oath,
6 deposes and states:

7 I am a duly appointed, qualified, and acting Deputy
8 Prosecuting Attorney for Yakima County, Washington, and am
9 familiar with the above-entitled case.

10 The State of Washington has previously requested by its 11 Omnibus Application dated March 29, 1989, that the defendant 12 in this case provide a handwriting exemplar.

13 That request was based upon information provided by 14 defense attorney Chris Tait, that there may be written 15 correspondence between Russell Duane McNeil and Herbert Rice
16 Jr. hidden in the Yakima County Juvenile Detention Facility
17 that were written and passed between the two co-defendants 18 while they were being held at that location.

19 Yakima County Sheriff's detectives went to the Yakima
20 County Juvenile Detention Facility and found several hand 21 printed notes hidden behind a drinking fountain at that 22 facility that both defendant's would have had access to.
23 The contents of those notes also indicated that they were 24 written by the co-defendants in this case. Mr. Tait and a 25 representative from his office were present at the time
26 these notes were discovered and seized. The subject notes
27 are now in evidence with the Yakima Sheriff's Department.

28 At the time the State's Omnibus application was heard, 29 the trial court ordered that the exemplars be completed by 30

3 both defendants using the standard handwriting exemplar form
4 used by local law enforcement. Both defendant's
5 substantially cooperated in that procedure, but provided
6 mostly cursive handwriting samples since the form normally 7 requests long handwriting.

8 The handwriting exemplars produced by both defendants 9 Russell Duane McNeil and Herbert Rice Jr. were sent to the 10 Washington State Crime Laboratory for analysis. Both 11 exemplars were recently returned by the crime lab with the 12 request that additional printed exemplars be provided for 13 further analysis. The letter received from the Washington 14 State Patrol crime lab is attached hereto and made a part of my affidavit.

15 Your affiant personally talked to Mr. Billy Dunagan, 16 Supervisor of the handwriting analysis unit at the crime lab
17 on the telephone concerning the type of printed exemplar
18 the crime lab believes would be needed in order to conduct a 19 thorough analysis. Mr. Dunagan stated that if the standard 20 exemplar previously used was again used but everything was 21 printed instead of written in cursive handwriting (long 22 hand) that that should be sufficient if the forms were fully 23 completed.

IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR DISCOVERY

The landmark Washington case on the issue of pre-trial discovery is State v. Boehme, 71 Wn.2d 621, 632, 430 P.2d 527 (1967):

[1] At this point, we momentarily pause to observe that the rules of discovery are designed to enhance the search for truth in both civil and criminal litigation. And, except where the exchange of information is not otherwise clearly impeded by constitutional limitations or statutory inhibitions, the route of discovery should ordinarily be considered somewhat in the nature of a 2-way street, with the trial court regulating traffic over the rough areas in a manner which will insure a fair trial to all concerned, neither according to one party an unfair advantage nor placing the other at a disadvantage. State v. Robinson, 61 Wn.2d 107, 377 P.2d 248 (1962); State v. Gilman, 63 Wn.2d 7, 385 P.2d 369 (1963); State v. Peele, 67 Wn.2d 893, 410 P.2d 599 (1966).

Our Washington appellate courts have considered cases in which the defense has attempted to withhold discovery of evidence in their possession which could be incriminating against their clients.

In State v. Grove, 65 Wn.2d 525, 528, 398 P.2d 170 (1965), the defense attempted to withhold discovery of a letter written by the defendant to his wife. The

3 Prosecuting Attorney obtained the letter from the defense by 4 court order, but the defense on appeal, argued the court's
5 order violated the spousal confidential communications
6 privilege and the attorney-client privilege. The appellate 7 court quickly disposed of the two "privilege" arguments and 8 then went on to say:

9 "What is involved is an effort to withhold 10 evidence that was incriminating to the 11 defendant.

12 The appellant makes an argument that the 13 order for production of the letter was 14 prohibited discovery. This state has 15 long recognized the inherent power of 16 the trial court to grant discovery.
17 State v. Gilman, 63 Wn.2d 7, 385 P.2d 369
18 (1963). This inherent power, based on 19 trial administration, is not limited
20 to that which benefits the defendant.
21 This point has been recognized by 22 Justice Traynor, speaking for the 23 California Supreme Court:

24 '. . . Absent some governmental 25 requirement that information be 26 kept confidential for the pur-
27 poses of effective law enforce-
28 ment, the state has no interest
29 in denying the accused access to 30 all evidence that can throw light on issues in the case, and in particular it has no interest in convicting on the testimony of witnesses who have not been as rigorously cross-examined and as thoroughly impeached as the evidence permits. To deny flatly any right of production on the ground that an imbalance would be created between the advantages of prosecution and defense would be to lose sight of the true purpose of a criminal trial, the ascertainment of the facts.
. . . [Quoting from People v.
Riser, 47 Cal.2d 566, 586, 305
P.2d 1,13.] Similarly, absent the privilege against self-

3 incrimination or other privi-
4 leges provided by law, the 5 defendant in a criminal case
6 has no valid interest in deny-
7 ing the prosecution access to 8 evidence that can throw light
9 on issues in the case. . . .'
10 Jones v. Superior Court of 11 Nevada Cy., 22 Cal. Rptr. 879,
12 372 P.2d 919 (1962).

13 Since there was no violation of the 14 privilege against self-incrimination
15 and no violation of the attorney-client
16 privilege, the trial court was well
17 within its power in ordering counsel,
18 an officer of the court, to produce 19 the letter."

20 The State notes that there are no privilege arguments
21 under the facts of our present case. The letter was sent to 22 a girlfriend, not a wife, and the letter was handed to an 23 agent of Russell McNeil's attorney by the defendant's 24 mother, a third party, not a defendant in this case and not 25 represented by the Tait Law Office

26 The Washington courts have also held that even if the 27 evidence was obtained through the attorney-client
28 relationship (which is not true in this case as stated 29 above), the evidence is still discoverable by the State.
30 State ex rel. Sowers v. Olwell, 64 Wn.2d 828, 833, 394 P.2d 681 (1964) is a case where the defendant physically gave his defense attorney a murder weapon involved in the actual case the defense attorney represented the defendant. Even though the court found the evidence was obtained through the attorney-client relationship, the court still ordered that the defense had to turn over the evidence:

3 "[3] We do not, however, by so holding,
4 mean to imply that evidence can be
5 permanently withheld by the attorney
6 under the claim of the attorney-client
7 privilege. Here, we must consider the 8 balancing process between the attorney-
9 client privilege and the public interest
10 in criminal investigation. We are in 11 agreement that the attorney-client
12 privilege is applicable to the knife
13 held by appellant, but do not agree 14 that the privilege warrants the 15 attorney, as an officer of the court,
16 from withholding it after being 17 properly requested to produce the 18 same. The attorney should not be a 19 depository for criminal evidence (such 20 as a knife, other weapons, stolen
21 property, etc.), which in itself
22 has little, if any, material value for 23 the purposes of aiding counsel in the 24 preparation of the defense of his 25 client's case. Such evidence given
26 the attorney during legal consultation
27 for information purposes and used 28 by the attorney in preparing the 29 defense of his client's case,
30 whether or not the case ever goes to trial, could clearly be withheld for a reasonable period of time.
It follows that the attorney, after a reasonable period, should, as an officer of the court, on his own motion turn the same over to the prosecution."

Based upon the above-cited authorities, the State -submits that there is no valid basis for the defense in this case to refuse to immediately turn over the subject letter.

Respectfully submitted this 31st day of May, 1989.

MOTION AND AFFIDAVIT FOR DISCOVERY OF EVIDENCE IN THE POSSESSION OF THE DEFENSE

COMES NOW the State of Washington, by and through the Yakima County Prosecuting Attorney, JEFFREY C. SULLIVAN, and HOWARD W. HANSEN, Deputy Prosecuting Attorney for Yakima County, and moves the court for an Order Directing the defense attorneys for Russell Duane McNeil to turn over evidence in their possession concerning this case to the Yakima County Sheriff's Department, to-wit: A letter which discussed the Nickoloff homicides written by the defendant McNeil and mailed to Melonie Sequeido, which was thereafter passed from Melonie Sequeido to Veronica Martinez, aunt of the defendant; and then from Veronica Martinez to JoAnne McNeil, mother of the defendant; and then from JoAnne McNeil to Diana Parker, assistant to Chris Tait, defense attorney for Russell Duane McNeil. The delivery of this letter to the Tait Law Firm is believed to have occurred during the summer of 1988.

This motion is based upon files and records herein, as well as the attached affidavit.

STATE OF WASHINGTON)
 : ss.
County of Yakima)

The undersigned, being first duly sworn on oath, deposes and states:

I am a duly appointed, qualified, and acting Deputy Prosecuting Attorney for Yakima County, Washington, and am familiar with the above-entitled case.

The Prosecuting Attorney's Office received information in mid-March 1989, from a Wapato High School counselor that the defendant Russell Duane McNeil had been contacting a former girlfriend, Melonie Sequeido by phone and letter. It was related that Ms. Sequeido was disturbed by these contacts and discussed the situation with her high school counselor. Ms. Sequeido told the counselor some of the letters and conversations she had with the defendant McNeil involved specific information about the Nickoloff homicides.

Det. Rod Shaw of the Yakima Sheriff's Department contacted the former girlfriend and interviewed her concerning these contacts. He took a statement from Melonie Sequeido and her girlfriend who also saw some of the correspondence from the defendant McNeil. Detective Shaw additionally filed a supplemental report concerning this follow-up investigation. Copies of both the statements and the supplemental report have been provided to the defense.

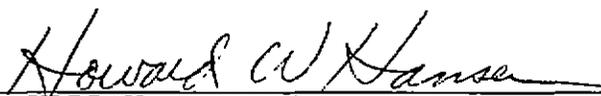

Melonie Sequeido stated to Det. Shaw that she had given one of the letters received from Russell McNeil to the defendant's aunt, Veronica Martinez, who wanted to read it and show it to the defendant's mother, JoAnne McNeil.

3 Det. Shaw has thereafter submitted to this office a written 4 report of May 5, 1989, in which he states he has made contact with 5 Veronica Martinez and JoAnne McNeil who both verify that they did
6 receive the subject letter as described by Melonie Sequeido.

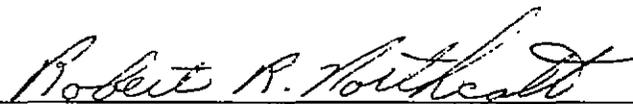

7 JoAnne McNeil also informed Det. Shaw that she gave the letter to 8 Diana Parker of the Chris Tait Law Firm during the summer of 1988.

9 Prosecuting Attorney Jeffrey C. Sullivan, upon receiving this 10 information, made a verbal request of the defense attorney Chris 11 Tait, to turn over the letter to the authorities and/or reveal the 12 contents of the letter to the Prosecuting Attorney's Office. Mr.
13 Tait's Law Office has not honored the Prosecuting Attorney's 14 request to this date.

15 The Prosecuting Attorney's Office has therefore filed the 16 above motion with the court requesting that an order be entered 17 directing the defense to turn over said letter in its entirety to 18 the Yakima Sheriff's Department as it is clearly relevant evidence 19 in this case.

'89 MAY 26 PM 1 27
NO. 88-1-00428-1
EX OFFICIO CLERK
MEMORANDUM CONCERNING CLOSURE
OF 3.5 HEARING
YAKIMA COUNTY CLERK

10 The State has requested that a 3.5 hearing be conducted in 11 this case pursuant to court rule. The defense has objected to the 12 3.5 hearing being held in open court arguing the publicity from 13 such a hearing would jeopardize the defendant's ability to receive 14 a fair trial.

15 The case of State v. Coe, 101 Wn.2d 364, 375, 679 P.2d 353
16 (1984) makes it clear that the trial court cannot control the 17 dissemination of information legitimately revealed in open court as 18 a way to avoid the release of potentially prejudicial information to the public prior to trial:

19 "The language of the Washington Constitution 20 absolutely forbids prior restraints against 21 the publication or broadcast of constitu-
22 tionally protected speech under the facts
23 of this case, since the information sought to be restrained was lawfully obtained, true, and a matter of public record by virtue of having been previously admitted into evidence and presented in open court."

24 There are two Washington State Supreme Court cases which deal
25 specifically with the issue of closure of a pre-trial suppression 26 hearing similar to our present case. In each of those cases our 27 Supreme Court specifically followed the federal precedent
28 established in Gannett Company v. DePasquale, 443 U.S. 368, 61

3 L.Ed.2d 608, 99 S. Ct. 2998 (1978). In that case, the U.S. Supreme 4 Court allowed closure of a 3.5-type hearing when the trial judge
5 properly balanced the rights of the press and public to an open
6 hearing against the defendant's right to a fair trial and found 7 that an open hearing possessed a reasonable probability of 8 prejudice to the defendant. Since the denial of access to the 9 public was only temporary and the public would later be able to 10 review what had occurred in the closed proceeding, the defendant's 11 interests prevailed in the balancing test.

12 The case of Federated Publications v. Kurtz, 94 Wn.2d 51, 55, 13 615 P.2d 440 (1980) quoted from the DePasquale case at Page 55:

14 "This Court has long recognized that adverse 15 publicity can endanger the ability of a 16 defendant to receive a fair trial. E.g.,
17 Sheppard v. Maxwell, 384 U.S. 333 [16 L.Ed.2d
18 600, 86 S. Ct. 1507 (1966)]; Irwin v. Dowd,
19 366 U.S. 717 [6 L.Ed.2d 751, 81 S. Ct. 1639
20 (1961)]; Marshall v. United States, 360 U.S.
21 310 [3 L.Ed.2d 1250, 79 S. Ct. 1171 (1959)].
22 Cf. Estes v. Texas, 381 U.S. 532 [14 L.Ed.2d
23 543, 85 S. Ct. 1628 (1965)]. To safeguard
24 the due process rights of the accused, a 25 trial judge has an affirmative constitu-26 tional duty to minimize the effects of 27 prejudicial pretrial publicity. Sheppard 28 v. Maxwell, supra. And because of the 29 Constitution's pervasive concern for these 30 due process rights, a trial judge may surely take protective measures even when they are not strictly and inescapably necessary.
DePasquale, at 378.

Among the kinds of pretrial publicity posing a threat to a fair trial, the court stated, is publicity concerning pretrial suppression hearings:

Publicity concerning pretrial suppression hearings such as the one involved in the present case poses special risks of unfairness. The whole purpose of such hearings is to screen out unreliable or illegally obtained evidence and insure that this

3 evidence does not become known to the 4 jury. Cf. Jackson v. Denno, 378 U.S.
5 368 [12 L.Ed.2d 908, 84 S. Ct. 1774,
6 1 A.L.R.3d 1205 (1964)]. Publicity con-
7 cerning the proceedings at a pretrial
8 hearing, however, could influence public
9 opinion against a defendant and inform
10 potential jurors of inculpatory informa-11 tion wholly inadmissible at the actual 12 trial.

13 The danger of publicity concerning pre-14 trial suppression hearings is particularly 15 acute, because it may be difficult to 16 measure with any degree of certainty the 17 effects of such publicity on the fairness
18 of the trial. After the commencement of 19 the trial itself, inadmissible prejudicial
20 information about a defendant can be kept 21 from a jury by a variety of means. When 22 such information is publicized during a 23 pretrial proceeding, however, it may 24 never be altogether kept from potential
25 jurors. Closure of pretrial proceedings
26 is often one of the most effective
27 methods that a trial judge can employ
28 to attempt to insure that the fairness
29 of a trial will not be jeopardized by 30 the dissemination of such information throughout the community before the trial itself has even begun. Cf.
Rideau v. Louisiana, 373 U.S. 723
[10 L.Ed.2d 663, 83 S. Ct. 1417 (1963)].
DePasquale, at 378-79.

While the court recognized, at the least, a "strong societal interest" in open judicial proceedings, DePasquale, at 383, it concluded that society's interest in the case was outweighed by the reasonable probability of prejudice to the defendants.
DePasquale at 393."

Our Supreme Court then went on to point out in the Kurtz case that even though our Federal and State Constitutions are analogous on the defendants' rights to a fair trial at issue here, the Washington State Constitution, Article I, Section 10, which states:

"Section 10 - ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.
Justice in all cases shall be administered openly, and without unnecessary delay"

3 provides a specific public right to access to court proceedings
4 which is unlike the Sixth Amendment to the Federal Constitution
5 which confers only an individual right to the accused for a public
6 trial:

7 " . . . , this section provides a textual
8 basis for recognizing a right of public 9 access to court proceedings. We have 10 given explicit recognition to the provi-
11 sion: 'This separate, clear and specific 12 provision entitles the public, and as 13 noted above the press is part of that 14 public, to openly administered justice'.
15 Cohen v. Everett City Council, 85 Wn.2d 16 385, 388, 535 P.2d 801 (1975). Moreover,
17 by its terms it is not limited to trials
18 but includes all judicial proceedings."
19 At Page 59.

20 Our Supreme Court then detailed how these competing 21 constitutional rights will be balanced at page 62:

22 "Some of the principles suggested by 23 Mr. Justice Powell, concurring in 24 DePasquale, seem to us to provide
25 workable guidelines under the state
26 constitution for balancing the compet-
27 ing interests in suppression hearing
28 closure questions. These guidelines
29 include:

30 1. The accused must make some showing of likelihood of jeopardy to his constitutional rights from an open proceeding. In the present case, the defense motion, joined in by the prosecution, clearly raised the issue.

2. Anyone present when the closure motion is made must be given an opportunity to object to the closure. The number of objections, however, and the time necessary to present them must be subject to the trial court's inherent power to control the proceedings.
Moreover, the court should not be obliged to delay proceedings, since one of the purposes of pretrial proceedings is to expedite the entire matter and to give counsel adequate

3 time to prepare for trial in light
4 of the outcome of the suppression hearing.

5 . . .

6 3. The objector must demonstrate that 7 there are available practical alternatives to closure which would protect defendant's rights.

8 . . .

9 4. The court must weigh the competing
10 interests of the defendant and the public.

11 . . .

12 5. The order must be no broader in its 13 application or duration than necessary to 14 serve its purpose, which in this case was to protect the accused's right to a fair trial while preserving the public's right to open proceedings.

15 . . .

16 In conclusion, we think the above standards
17 afford trial courts a realistic opportunity to strike a balance between these two interests which are protected by our state constitution."

18 The case of Seattle Times Co. v. Ishikawa, 97 Wn.2d 30, 37, 19 640 P.2d 716 (1982) clarified the Kurtz decision by defining the 20 burden of persuasion for the different types of competing interests
21 on the closure issue. The Court found that the defendant's "right 22 to a fair trial" received the greatest latitude in obtaining 23 closure of a pre-trial hearing while other advocates with lesser 24 interests would have a more difficult time obtaining closure:

25 "Because we believe that closure to 26 protect the defendant's right to a fair
27 trial should be treated somewhat differ-28 ently from closure based entirely on the 29 protection of other interests, we will 30 expand upon the framework adopted in Kurtz to cover such motions.

4 IV.

5 [3] Each time restrictions on access to 6 criminal hearings or the records from 7 hearings are sought, courts must follow
8 these steps:

9 1. The proponent of closure and/or 10 sealing must make some showing of the 11 need therefor. Kurtz, at 62. In demon-12 strating that need, the movant should 13 state the interests or rights which 14 give rise to that need as specifically 15 as possible without endangering those 16 interests.

17 The quantum of need which would justify 18 restrictions on access differs depend-
19 ing on whether a defendant's Sixth 20 Amendment right to a fair trial would 21 be threatened. When closure and/or 22 sealing is sought to protect that inter-
23 est, only a 'likelihood of jeopardy'
24 must be shown. Kurtz, at 62. See
25 Gannett Co. v. DePasquale, 443 U.S.
26 368, 400, 61 L.Ed.2d 608, 99 S. Ct.
27 2898 (1979) (Powell, J., concurring).
28 However, since important constitutional 29 interests would be threatened by restrict-30 ing public access (Cohen; Richmond, at 988-90), a higher threshold will be required before court proceedings will be closed to protect other interests.
If closure and/or sealing is sought to further any right or interest besides the defendant's right to a fair trial, a 'serious and imminent threat to some other important interest' must be shown.

The burden of persuading the court that access must be restricted to prevent a serious and imminent threat to an important interest shall be on the proponent unless closure is sought to protect the accused's fair trial right.
Because courts are presumptively open, the burden of justification should rest on the parties seeking to infringe the public's right. See Nebraska Press
Ass'n v. Stuart, 427 U.S. 539, 558-59,
569-70, 49 L.Ed.2d 683, 96 S. Ct. 2791
(1976). From a practical standpoint, the proponents will often be in the

3 best position to inform the court of 4 the facts which give rise to the 5 alleged need for closure or sealing.

6 . . .

7 2. 'Anyone present when the closure
8 [and/or sealing] motion is made must 9 be given an opportunity to object to 10 the [suggested restriction].' Kurtz,
11 at 62.

12 For this opportunity to have meaning,
13 the proponent must have stated the 14 grounds for the motion with reasonable
15 specificity, consistent with the pro-
16 tection of the right sought to be 17 protected. At a minimum, potential
18 objectors should have sufficient
19 information to be able to appreciate 20 the damages which would result from 21 free access to the proceeding and/or 22 records. This knowledge would enable 23 the potential objector to better
24 evaluate whether or not to object and 25 on what grounds to base its opposition.

26 3. The court, the proponents and the 27 objectors should carefully analyze
28 whether the requested method for cur-
29 tailing access would be both the least 30 restrictive means available and effective in protecting the interests threatened. See Kurtz, at 63-64. If limitations on access are requested to protect the defendant's right to a fair trial,
the objectors carry the burden of suggesting effective alternatives. If the endangered interests do not include the defendant's Sixth Amendment rights, that burden rests with the proponents.

4. 'The court must weigh the competing interests of the defendant and the public', Kurtz, at 64, and consider the alternative methods suggested. Its consideration of these issues should be articulated in its findings and conclusions, which should be as specific as possible rather than conclusory. See People v. Jones, 47 N.Y.2d 409, 415, 391 N.E.2d 1335, 418 N.Y.S.2d 359 (1979).

3 5. 'The order must be no broader in its
4 application or duration than necessary
5 to serve its purpose . . . ' Kurtz,
6 at 64. If the order involves sealing
7 of records, it shall apply for a specific
8 time period with a burden on the pro-
9 ponent to come before the court at a 10 time specified to justify continued
11 sealing."

12 This appears to be the current state of the law on closure for 13 pre-trial hearings in the State of Washington. More recent federal 14 cases appear to strengthen the public's right to access at least as 15 to some types of pre-trial hearings even when the defendant 16 requests closure to protect his right to a fair trial.

17 In the Riverside County, California case of Press-Enterprise
18 Co. v. Superior Court, 478 U.S. 1, 92 L.Ed.2d 1, 106 S. Ct. 2735
19 (1986), our U.S. Supreme Court found that the public's First 20 Amendment right of access to criminal proceedings applied to a 21 preliminary hearing under California law. Justice Burger then 22 proceeded to redefine the burden of persuasion for closure in that 23 type of case even if the defendant is asserting that an open 24 hearing would impact his right to obtain a fair trial:

25 "Since a qualified First Amendment right of 26 access attaches to preliminary hearings in 27 California under Cal Penal Code Ann #858,
28 et seq. (West 1985), the proceedings can-29 not be closed unless specific, on the 30 record findings are made demonstrating that 'closure is essential to preserve higher values and is narrowly tailored to serve that interest'. Press-Enterprise
1, supra, at 510, 78 L.Ed.2d 629, 104
S. Ct. 819. See also Globe Newspaper,
supra, at 606-607, 73 L.Ed.2d 248, 102
S. Ct. 2613. If the interest asserted is the right of the accused to a fair trial, the preliminary hearing shall be closed only if specific findings are made demonstrating that, first, there is a substantial probability that the

3 defendant's right to a fair trial will
4 be prejudiced by publicity that closure
5 would prevent and, second, reasonable
6 alternatives to closure cannot adequately
7 protect the defendant's fair trial rights.
8 See Press-Enterprise I, supra; Richmond
9 Newspapers, supra, at 581, 65 L.Ed.2d
10 973, 100 S. Ct. 2814.

11 Justice Stevens' dissenting opinion in that case aptly
12 describes the state of the law which our trial court must now 13 attempt to apply in the present case:

14 "The presence of a legitimate reason for 15 closure in this case requires an affirmance.
16 The constitutionally grounded fair trial
17 interests of the accused if he is bound over 18 for trial, and the reputational interests
19 of the accused if he is not, provide a 20 substantial reason for delaying access to 21 the transcript for at least the short time
22 before trial. By taking its own verbal
23 formulation seriously, the Court reverses-- 24 without comment or explanation or any 25 attempt at reconciliation--the holding in 26 Gannett that a 'reasonable probability of 27 prejudice' is enough to overcome the First 28 Amendment right of access to a preliminary 29 proceeding. It is unfortunate that the 30 Court neglects this opportunity to fit the result in this case into the body of precedent dealing with access rights generally. I fear that today's decision will simply further unsettle the law in this area."

The burden of persuasion for the proponents of closure of a pre-trial hearing appears to have been increased from a "likelihood of prejudice" to a "substantial probability of prejudice" even when they argue that the defendants' "right to a fair trial" is at stake. This is at least true in the trial-like context of a California preliminary hearing as described in the Press-Enterprise
II case.

2
3 Arguably, the DePasquale standard which has been adopted by 4 our Washington appellate courts for 3.5-type hearings would still 5 have the lesser standard of "likelihood of prejudice" since the 6 ruling is preliminary in nature, effective for only a short period
7 of time, and potentially has serious consequences if inadmissible
8 evidence is revealed to the public prior to trial.

9 Respectfully submitted this 26th day of May, 1989.

25 5/26/89
26 DATE SIGNED

2
3 several times by the Washington State Supreme Court. State v.
4 Dictado, 102 Wn.2d 277, 297, 687 P.2d 172 (1984) states:

5 "Defendant also argues that the statute violates
6 equal protection by giving the prosecutor un-
7 fettered discretion to charge either of two 8 crimes (capital or noncapital aggravated murder),
9 although either charge would necessarily be 10 based on the same evidence. He further asserts 11 this gives the prosecutor unconstitutional
12 power to decide a defendant's sentence.

13 [14] It has long been the rule in Washington
14 that equal protection is violated when two 15 statutes declare the same acts to be crimes,
16 but penalize more severely under one statute
17 than the other. State v. Sherman, 98 Wn.2d 53,
18 653 P.2d 612 (1982); State v. Zornes, 78 Wn.2d 19 9, 475 P.2d 109 (1970). There is no equal 20 protection issue, however, when the require-
21 ments of proof and the State's ability to meet 22 them are the considerations guiding the 23 prosecutor's discretion. State v. Canady,
24 69 Wn.2d 886, 421 P.2d 347 (1966).

25 Under RCW 10.95.040(1) the prosecutor must file 26 a notice of a special sentencing proceeding to 27 determine whether the death penalty is to be 28 imposed 'when there is reason to believe that 29 there are not sufficient mitigating circum-
30 stances to merit leniency'. The prosecutor's discretion to seek or not seek the death penalty depends on an evaluation of the evidence of mitigating circumstances. This evaluation must determine if sufficient evidence exists to convince a jury beyond a reasonable doubt that there are not sufficient mitigating circumstances. See
RCW 10.95.060(4).

Although the exercise of prosecutorial discretion under the sentencing structure of RCW 10.95 is not strictly analogous to the exercise of discretion involved in the charging function, the principle is similar. The prosecutor does not determine the sentence; the prosecutor merely determines whether sufficient evidence exists to take the issue of mitigation to the jury. This type of discretion does not violate equal protection. See State v. Sherman, supra."

3 State v. Campbell, 103 Wn.2d 1, 25, 691 P.2d 929 (1984)

4 reaches the same conclusion:

5 "In State v. Rupe, 101 Wn.2d 664, 699,
6 683 P.2d 571 (1984) and State v. Dictado,
7 102 Wn.2d 277, 687 P.2d 172 (1984), we 8 held the discretion given a prosecutor to 9 seek the death penalty was constitutional.
10 We reaffirm this position, finding no merit
11 in defendant's arguments.

12 We dispose of defendant's three arguments
13 under the following analysis: First, equal 14 protection of the laws is denied when a 15 prosecutor is permitted to seek varying 16 degrees of punishment when proving identi-
17 cal criminal elements. State v. Zornes,
18 78 Wn.2d 9, 21, 475 P.2d 109 (1970).
19 However, 'no constitutional defect exists 20 when the crimes which the prosecutor has 21 discretion to charge have different ele-
22 ments'. State v. Wanrow, 91 Wn.2d 301, 23 312, 588 P.2d 1320 (1978). Before the 24 prosecutor may seek the death penalty, he 25 must have 'reason to believe that there
26 are not sufficient mitigating circumstances
27 to merit leniency'. RCW 10.95.040(1).
28 Similarly, the jury must be 'convinced 29 beyond a reasonable doubt that there are 30 not sufficient mitigating circumstances to merit leniency'. RCW 10.95.060(4).
Absent a unanimous finding, life imprisonment is imposed. RCW 10.95.080(2).
There is no equal protection violation here, because a sentence of death requires consideration of an additional factor beyond that for a sentence for life imprisonment--namely, an absence of mitigating circumstances.

31
32 Second, '[t]he separation of powers
33 principle requires that the delegation
34 of legislative power to the executive
35 be accomplished along with standards
36 which guide and restrain the exercise
37 of the delegated authority'. State
38 ex rel. Schillberg v. Cascade Dist.
39 Court, 94 Wn.2d 772, 781, 621 P.2d 40 115 (1980). 'The decision to prosecute
41 must be based on the prosecutor's 42 ability to meet the proof required by 43 the statute.' State v. Lee, 87 Wn.2d 44 932, 934, 558 P.2d 236 (1976). RCW

2
3 10.95.040 properly sets out a legisla-
4 tive standard to guide prosecutors.
5 '[T]he grant of discretion to prose-
6 cutors does not result in a standard-
7 less death penalty statute'.
8 State v. Rupe, at 700.

9 Moreover, the prosecutor's discretion
10 to seek the death penalty does not usurp
11 the judicial function to sentence. See,
12 e.g., RCW 10.95.160-.170; Honore v.
13 State Bd. of Prison Terms & Paroles,
14 77 Wn.2d 697, 700, 466 P.2d 505 (1970).
15 In a sense the prosecutor participates
16 in the sentencing process by choosing
17 to request a special sentencing pro-
18 ceeding. But the prosecutor can neither
19 impose the sentence nor require that it
20 be imposed. People ex rel. Carey v.
21 Cousins, 77 Ill.2d 531, 397 N.E.2d 809
22 (1979). In Dictado, we observed that 23 the prosecutor's discretion in this 24 regard is similar to his discretion in 25 charging a crime: 'The prosecutor does
26 not determine the sentence; the prose-
27 cutor merely determines whether suffi-
28 cient evidence exists to take the issue
29 of mitigation to the jury'. Dictado, 30 at 298. The sentencing jury or the judge determines whether the statutory conditions to impose the death penalty are met. RCW 10.95.050(2), .060(4), .080.
Moreover, automatic review by the Supreme Court again insures that sentencing remains a judicial function.
RCW 10.95.100, .130."

21 The defense also cites several Washington cases as authority 22 that the trial court may review the pre-trial actions of the 23 Prosecuting Attorney and, therefore, invites the trial court in 24 this case to do so in some unspecified manner.

25 The case of State v. Knapstad, 107 Wn.2d 346, 394, 729 P.2d 48
26 (1986) cited by the defense clearly has no application to our 27 current case. That decision involved the court dismissing a case 28 pre-trial when all the facts of the case were undisputed and 29 stipulated to and the court found as a matter of law a prima facie 30

3 case could not be made. That decision also clearly stated that
4 this procedure is inappropriate if there are any contested facts:

5 "Further, it is obvious that, in a case like
6 the instant cases where dismissal is requested
7 because of the claimed insufficiency of the 8 evidence of guilt, it cannot be ordered unless 9 the Commonwealth agrees to join in the affidavit
10 procedure or in a stipulation of the facts.
11 A pre-trial order or judgment of dismissal for 12 the claimed insufficiency of the Commonwealth's 13 evidence cannot be sustained in any case where 14 the Commonwealth failed or refused to stipulate 15 that the appellate record contains a statement
16 of all the Commonwealth's contemplated evidence."

17 In the present case, there are no agreed upon facts or 18 circumstances concerning any aspect of this trial that the State is 19 aware of. The State invites the defense to reveal what facts they 20 believe are agreed upon or undisputed in this case which could form 21 the basis of a pre-trial court ruling to strike the death penalty 22 aspects of this case.

23 The remaining authorities listed by the defense are simply 24 cited to the trial court but not applied to the facts of our case.
25 State v. Dictado, supra, (which also cites State v. Zornes, 78 26 Wn.2d 9, 475 P.2d 109 (1970)), is a case that upholds the 27 Prosecuting Attorney's discretion to seek the death penalty under 28 our current statutory scheme.

29 State v. Pettitt, 93 Wn.2d 288, 609 P.2d 1364 (1980) is a case 30 concerning Washington State's former habitual criminal statute which holds that the Prosecuting Attorney cannot have a blanket policy of filing habitual criminal proceedings in every technically eligible case, but must exercise prosecutorial discretion in reaching the decision to file. That holding clearly has no application to the present case.

2
3 State v. Judge, 100 Wn.2d 706, 713, 675 P.2d 219 (1984) is a
4 case that would now be considered a vehicular homicide case
5 involving an intoxicated driver-defendant in which the defendant
6 argued on appeal that the Prosecuting Attorney's decision to file
7 charges against her, but not against another occupant of her car
8 who had purchased the alcohol the group had consumed, was a denial
9 of her equal protection rights. The Court states:

10 "Prosecutors are vested with wide discretion in 11 determining whether to charge suspects with 12 criminal offenses. Bordenkircher v. Hayes,
13 434 U.S. 357, 365, 54 L.Ed.2d 604, 98 S. Ct.
14 663, reh'g denied, 435 U.S. 918, 55 L.Ed.2d
15 511, 98 S. Ct. 1477 (1978); State v. Pettitt,
16 93 Wn.2d 288, 294, 609 P.2d 1364 (1980).
17 Exercise of this discretion involves con-
18 sideration of factors such as the public 19 interest as well as the strength of the 20 case which could be proven. United States v.
21 Lovasco, 431 U.S. 783, 794, 52 L.Ed.2d 752, 22 97 S. Ct. 2044 (1977); Pettitt, at 295.
23 The exercise of a prosecutor's discretion
24 by charging some but not others guilty of 25 the same crime does not violate the equal
26 protection clause of U.S. Const. amend. 14
27 or Const. art. 1 Sec. 12 so long as the 28 selection was not 'deliberately based upon 29 an unjustifiable standard such as race,
30 religion, or other arbitrary classification'.
Oyler v. Boles, 368 U.S. 448, 456, 7 L.Ed.2d 446, 82 S. Ct. 501 (1962), quoted in Bordenkircher. Accord, State v. Jacobsen,
78 Wn.2d 491, 498-99, 477 P.2d 1 (1970)."

1 In re Harris, 111 Wn.2d 691, 692, 763 P.2d 823 (1988) was also
2 cited by the defense in its memorandum. It is a Personal Restraint
3 Petition case in which our Supreme Court considered whether the 4 Pierce County Prosecuting Attorney's office policy in aggravated 5 murder cases is an abuse of discretion. Their policy is to always 6 seek the death penalty unless the defense supplies evidence of 7 mitigating circumstances to the State.

3 The defense attempted to analogize their capital case to 4 previous Washington appellate court decisions concerning habitual 5 criminal proceedings:

6 "Petitioner would liken this policy to the 7 one we found invalid in State v. Pettitt,
8 93 Wn.2d 288, 295, 609 P.2d 1364 (1980);
9 see also State v. Rowe, 93 Wn.2d 277, 609
10 P.2d 1348 (1980); State v. Gilcrist, 91
11 Wn.2d 932, 558 P.2d 236 (1976).

12 [1] The prosecutor in Pettitt had an 13 automatic policy of filing habitual criminal 14 charges against all defendants with 15 three or more prior felonies. He testi-16 fied he "could imagine no situation which 17 would provide for an exception to the 18 mandatory policy." State v. Pettitt,
19 supra at 296. The Pierce County Prose-20 cuting Attorney, by contrast, will 21 consider any mitigating factors the 22 defendant brings to his attention. The 23 availability of this "escape valve" makes 24 the Pierce County policy more akin to the 25 habitual criminal charging policy we up-
26 held in Rowe than to the inflexible
27 absolute policy challenged in Pettitt.

28 Our Supreme Court explicitly approved the Pierce County action
29 to file death penalty notices in all cases where the defense does 30 not notify the Prosecuting Attorney's Office of mitigating circumstances. They also made it very clear that there is a significant difference between the filing of a death penalty notice in a premeditated First Degree Murder case and a decision to file an habitual criminal proceeding under former Washington law. They stated at page 693:

"There is, moreover, a significant distinction between the death penalty charging decision at issue here and the decision whether to file habitual criminal charges. Pertinent factors the prosecutor may consider in making the latter decision include the nature of the defendant's present and prior convictions, the amount

1
2
3 of time between them, and the State's
4 ability to prove the existence and validity
5 of the prior convictions. State v. Lee,
6 supra at 935; State v. Nixon, 10 Wn. App.
7 355, 356-57, 517 P.2d 212 (1973). These 8 are, in the main, matters of public
9 record to which the prosecutor has ready 10 access.

11 A prosecutor who charges a defendant with 12 aggravated first degree murder, by contrast,
13 must make the more subjective determination
14 of whether there is 'reason to believe that
15 there are not sufficient mitigating circum-
16 stances to merit leniency.' RCW 10.95.040;
17 see also State v. Campbell, 103 Wn.2d 1, 25,
18 691 P.2d 929 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S.
19 1094 (1985). Although some statutory miti-20 gating factors involve objective facts the 21 prosecutor can readily ascertain (see, e.g., 22 RCW 10.95.070(1) (lack of criminal history)), 23 most are in the nature of explanations or 24 excuses related to the crime itself. RCW
25 10.95.040(2) (extreme mental disturbance),
26 (3) (consent of victim), (4) (minor par-27 ticipation as an accomplice), (5) (duress), 28 and (6) (mentally impaired capacity). As 29 with criminal defenses generally, these 30 tend to be matters about which the defendant and his attorney will have more knowledge than the State. Additionally, although the State will at trial bear the burden of proving there are insufficient mitigating circumstances to merit leniency,
State v. Rupe, 101 Wn.2d 664, 701, 683 P.2d 571 (1984), it cannot attempt to rebut on any particular point unless the defendant first presents evidence on it. State v.
Bartholomew, 101 Wn.2d 631, 642-43, 683
P.2d 1079 (1984). The Pierce County charging policy makes sense in light of this evidentiary principle. (Emphasis ours).

23 CONCLUSION

24 The constitutionality of our death penalty statutes and 25 specifically the constitutionality of the Prosecuting Attorney's 26 decision to seek the death penalty have been previously challenged 27 in our appellate courts and always have been upheld as 28 constitutional by the Washington State Supreme Court.

3 On the issue of the Prosecuting Attorney's actual decision to 4 file the death penalty notice, the Yakima County Prosecuting
5 Attorney specifically requested from the defense any evidence of 6 mitigating circumstances as part of his decision-making process.
7 In fact, the deadline for the filing of the Notice of Special
8 Proceedings was delayed for approximately 30 days by mutual 9 agreement of the parties in order to allow the defense additional 10 time to provide the State with just such information if they 11 discovered it during their pre-trial investigations and decided to 12 release such information to the State. (See the attached Order
13 marked as Exhibit "A" which was entered and filed in this case 14 previously). No such information was provided.

15 Our Supreme Court has previously upheld a Pierce County
16 procedure wherein a Death Penalty Notice is always filed in all 17 aggravated First Degree Murder cases in which the defense does not 18 provide the Prosecuting Attorney with any evidence of mitigating 19 circumstances. See In re Harris, supra.

20 The defense has not established any allegation of abuse of 21 prosecutorial discretion in this case or have they provided any 22 authority for a pre-trial review of the Prosecuting Attorney's 23 decision to seek the death penalty in this case.

24 The State respectfully submits that the Motion for Bill of 25 Particulars in this case should be denied.

THIS MATTER having come on before the above-entitled court on April 12, 1988, on the joint motion of the State represented by JEFFREY C. Sullivan, Prosecuting Attorney for Yakima County, Washington, and Howard W. Hansen, Deputy Prosecuting Attorney for Yakima County, Washington; the court finding that the defendant, Russell Duane McNeil, was arraigned on March 16, 1988, on the charge of Aggravated First Degree Murder as defined by RCW 10.95.020 and therefore the Prosecuting Attorney must file and serve upon the defendant or his attorney a written notice of a special sentencing proceeding if the Prosecuting Attorney wishes to seek the death penalty, within thirty days of that date

Supreme Court of Washington following a conviction will somehow tell us all we need to know about prosecutorial discretion and proportionality?

4. If this Court does NOT inquire into the decision made by the Prosecuting Attorney BEFORE the trial, how will appellate courts later review prosecutorial discretion? What record will have been made? What record exists in those cases in which the same Prosecuting Attorney did NOT file a NOTICE OF SPECIAL SENTENCING PROCEEDING? Is proportionality review possible without a record?

5. Does the Constitution require that the laws and procedures which authorize hangings provide explicit standards for those who apply them?

6. What remedy exists when a Prosecutor abuses his discretion—either by filing the NOTICE in the face of overwhelming mitigation evidence, or by not filing the NOTICE in the absence of any mitigation?

POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

Trial courts have inherent power to dismiss a criminal prosecution before trial for lack of sufficient evidence. State v. Knapstad, 107 Wn. 2nd. 346 (1986), CrR 8.3 (b).

Trial courts also have inherent power to review the charging decisions and policies of Prosecuting Attorneys. State v. Pettitt, 93 Wn. 2nd 288, (1980), In Re Harris, 111 Wn. 2nd. (1988), State v. Dictado, 102 Wn. 2nd. 277 (1984), State v. Zornes, 78 Wn. 2nd. 9, (1970) and State v. Judge, 100 Wn. 2nd. 706 (1984).

It is clear from the record in Harris, supra, that the Prosecuting Attorney in Pierce County had a death penalty charging policy, and that our Supreme Court knew what the Pierce County charging policy was. Numerous references are made throughout the opinion to the policy itself, and the way in which it worked.

Faced with a Motion for a Bill of Particulars aimed at disclosure of the Yakima County charging policy, the Prosecuting Attorney now resists that Motion, telling the Court that post-conviction review will tell us all we need to know about proportionality.

To date, no party to this lawsuit knows what the Yakima County charging policy is, if there is one.

We do know that Yakima County has not seen a capital case in over 50 years, and that since being elected in 1974, this Prosecuting Attorney has never before filed a Notice of Special Sentencing Proceeding. He has filed 34 cases alleging murder in the first degree since January 1, 1981. See Exhibit C.

We know that in the cases of State v. Kester, and State v. Kincaid, 103 Wn. 2nd. 304 (1985) this Prosecuting Attorney filed charges against each man alleging "aggravated first degree murder." See Exhibits A, B, D, and E.

We do not know why Notice of Special Sentencing Proceedings were filed in Kester or Kincaid. Similarly, we do not know what objective criteria, if any, were considered by this Prosecuting Attorney in deciding not to file Notices in either of those cases. We do not know what the charging policy was, if

MOTION FOR BILL OF PARTICULARS 3

3 there was one, in 1982 when verdicts were entered in Kester and 4 Kincaid.

5
6 While RCW 10.95.070 lists examples of factors which a jury
7 may consider as it votes for life or death, the statute does not
8 define a "mitigating factor." As a result of this statutory omission, 9 prosecutors have no statutory guidance as they evaluate evidence,
10 or as they choose to seek the death penalty. Similarly, the term 11 "reason to believe" has never been defined, either by statute or by 12 decision.

13 If a State seeks to authorize capital punishment the 14 Constitution requires that the state "tailor and apply its law in a 15 manner that avoids the arbitrary and capricious infliction of the 16 death penalty." Godfrey vs. Georgia, 446 U.S. 420, 428, 100 S. Ct.
17 1759, 1764, 64 L. Ed. 2d 398 (1980).

- 18 1. The Discretionary Authority Granted the 19 Prosecutor by Washington's Capital Punishment
20 State Violates Constitutional Standards in that It
21 does Not Set Forth Clear and Objective Standards
22 that Provide Specific and Detailed Guidelines
23 which Direct and restrain the Prosecutor's 24 Exercise of Discretion in seeking the Death
25 Penalty.

26 Laws and procedures "must provide explicit standards for 27 those who apply them." Grayned vs. City of Rockford, 408 U.S.
28 104, 109, 92 S. Ct. 2294, 2299, 33 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1972);
29 Papachristou vs. City of Jacksonville, 405, U.S. 156, 92 S. Ct. 839, 30 843, 31, L. Ed. 2d 110 (1972). A law which delegates basic policy 31 decisions to policemen, prosecutors, judges, and juries, "for 32 resolution on an ad hoc and subjective basis, with the attendant

33 MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF 34 MOTION FOR BILL OF PARTICULARS 4

2
3 dangers of arbitrary and discriminatory application" violates th
4 Fourteenth Amendment and denies a defendant his 5 constitutional rights. Grayned vs. Rockford, 92 S. Ct. at 2299.
6 Where there are no statutory standards governing the exercise of 7 discretion, the statutory "scheme permits and encourages 8 arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement." Papachristou vs.
9 Jacksonville, 405 U.S. at 170.

10 A statute which delegates and grants the prosecutor the 11 discretionary authority to determine whether a defendant will be 12 subject to the death penalty must set forth clear and objective 13 standards that provide specific and detailed guidelines which 14 direct and restrain the prosecutor's exercise of discretion so as to 15 minimize the risk of arbitrary and capricious action. Godfrey vs.
16 Georgia, supra; Gregg vs. Georgia, 428 U.S. 325, 96 S. Ct. 3301, 49
17 L. Ed. 2d 929 (1976); Proffitt vs. Florida, 428 U.S. 242, 96 S. Ct.
18 2960, 49 L. Ed. 2d 913 (1976); Furman vs. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238, 19 92 S. Ct. 2726, 33 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1972).

20 CONCLUSION

21 The Washington statutory scheme is Constitutionally
22 defective in that it impermissibly delegates to the Prosecuting
23 Attorney the discretionary power to seek the death penalty,
24 without prior notice to any party.

25 Instead of providing the equal protection guaranteed by the 26 Federal and State Constitutions, the Washington statute invites 27 disparate treatment.

28 Important terminology remains undefined.

29 Different prosecutors exercise discretion in different ways.

30 Without a record, proportionality review on appeal is no
31 more than an empty promise.

The citizens of Yakima County-even those who are not old enough to vote for a Prosecuting Attorney, but who are old enough to be hanged for their crimes-deserve to discover how and when their Prosecuting Attorney decides to seek the death penalty.

The Motion for Bill of Particulars should be granted.

DATED this 8th day of MAY, 1989.

Respectfully submitted,

III.

1
2 That the Prosecuting Attorney for Pierce County, Washington, has 3 reason to believe that one or more aggravating circumstances was 4 present at the commission of the aforesaid Murder in the First Degree
5 and intends to prove the presence of such circumstances in a special
6 sentencing proceeding pursuant to statute.

7 IV.

8 That the aggravating circumstances referred to herein are as 9 follows:

10 (1) The defendant, Benjamin James Harris, III, solicited another 11 person to commit the murder and had paid or had agreed to pay money or 12 other thing of value for committing the murder.

13 V.

14 That further, there is reason to believe that there are not 15 sufficient mitigating circumstances to merit leniency. The 16 prosecution may open the sentencing phase only with the defendant's 17 criminal record and evidence which would have been admissible at the 18 guilt phase of the trial. Presentation of mitigating circumstances is 19 the responsibility of the defendant. See State v. Bartholomew, 101
20 Wn.2d 631, 643, ___ P.2d ___ (1984). No mitigating circumstances 21 have been brought to the attention of this office.

I. AGGRAVATED MURDER, DEATH PENALTY.

A. Procedure:

Only the Prosecuting Attorney, or in his absence the Chief Deputy or Chief Criminal Deputy, or his assistant, may file Aggravated Murder charges.

B. Aggravated Murder in the First Degree:

Aggravated murder shall be filed when the Prosecuting Attorney, or in his absence the Chief Deputy or Criminal Deputy, is satisfied to a high degree of certainty that: -

1. substantial evidence exists to establish that the homicide was in fact premeditated; and,
2. substantial evidence exists to establish the aggravating factor.

If it is decided that the aggravating factor shall be filed, it will be filed at the same time as the first degree murder charge.

C. Notice of Special Death Penalty Sentencing Proceedings

1. Procedure:

In aggravated murder cases, the assigned deputy under the direction of the Chief Deputy shall compile available information for review by the Prosecutor. In the absence of the Prosecutor, the decision may be made by the Chief Deputy.

2. Decision to File: Notice of special (death penalty) sentencing proceedings shall be filed in accordance with RCW 10.95.040 when the Prosecuting Attorney has personally decided that there is not sufficient evidence of mitigation to warrant leniency and that, therefore, the death penalty option should be given a jury.

Pierce Co. Changing Standards by Griffies -
Not effective after January 1987

II. PROSECUTOR'S DEATH PENALTY DECISION PROCEDURES

A. Files

1. When Created: Whenever it is decided that aggravated murder in the first degree charges are to be filed, two files shall be created. One file is for the Prosecutor and the other for the Chief Deputy.
2. Contents: The contents of the files shall be prepared and gathered by the Chief Deputy. The following shall be placed in the files:

Aggravated Murder - Death Penalty Report:
A report containing the following information in summary form:

- a. Case Status
- b. Factual Statement
- c. Case Problems and Solutions
- d. Aggravating Factors and Any Proof Problems
- e. Mitigating Factors Existing Under 10.95.040(1)
- f. Other Mitigating Factors
- g. Prior Convictions
- h. Significant Statements From The Police Report
Defense Input: The Chief Deputy shall request defense counsel to immediately submit material. The deputy shall keep a record of any verbal communications with defense counsel as well as any written correspondence.

B. Decision Making Process

1. Conference: The Prosecutor may consult with the Chief, and assigned deputy in a group meeting.
2. Record: The final decision of the Prosecutor shall be reported in a written document and, if deemed appropriate, the notice of special sentencing proceeding shall be filed.

III. MURDER IN THE FIRST DEGREE - 9A.32.030

1. Premeditated Murder in the First Degree - 9A.32.030.

a. Premeditated homicide cases in which no statutory aggravating factor is found, shall be filed as murder in the first degree if sufficient admissible evidence of "premeditation" (See 9A.32.020) exists to take that issue to the jury.

2. Reckless Disregard - Murder in the First Degree - 9A.32.030(b)

Reckless disregard-murder cases shall be filed where the evidence discloses that the criminal action was not directed at any one individual, e.g., car bombing, firing into a crowd.

3. Felony Murder in the First Degree 9A.32.030(c)

a. Felony murder in the first degree shall be charged if sufficient admissible evidence exists to take to the jury the question of whether the death was caused in the course of or in the furtherance of the requisite felony or in immediate flight therefrom, and no evidence of a premeditated intent to kill exists.

b. Requisite felonies:

IV. MURDER IN THE SECOND DEGREE - 9A.34.050

1. All intentional homicides other than those covered above shall be charged as murder in the second degree.

2. Felony Murder in the Second Degree

a. Felony murder in the second degree shall be charged if sufficient admissible evidence exists to take to the jury the question of whether the death was caused in the course of or in the furtherance of the requisite felony or in immediate flight therefrom.

Felony murder in the second degree, based on an assault theory, shall be filed where the assault was committed with a weapon or where a clear indication of intent to assault (as opposed to engaging in a mutual fight) is evident.

Felony murder in the second degree, based on an assault, is the appropriate charge in deaths of children caused by abuse.

V. MANSLAUGHTER - 9A.32.060 and 9A.32.070

Non-intentional homicide resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle shall be charged as Vehicular Homicide (46.61.520). The issue of the defendant's actual knowledge of the risk of death is a question to be put to the jury.

Where the decedent is a quick unborn fetus (1000 grams etc.) and an intentional wound is inflicted on the mother, manslaughter in the first degree shall be charged. Note: No intent to kill the fetus need be shown.

VI. WHERE DOUBT EXISTS AS TO DEGREE

Cases where a question exists as to the proper degree to be charged should be resolved by filing the higher degree and including a notification to the trial deputy to consider an amendment if such is justified by the facts as developed during trial preparation. It should not be assumed that cases will be reduced in degree upon a plea of guilty.

VII. INITIAL FILING - NUMBER OF COUNTS

One count for each murder in the first or second degree shall be filed in the information. One count normally should be filed for each other crime up to the number of counts necessary for the defendant's offender score to reach the "9 or more category". For example, six (6) counts of manslaughter in the second degree (separate and distinct criminal conduct) would be the maximum number of counts filed. The additional counts after the first one are counted as prior convictions or 2 offender points and the "9 or more category" is reached if 6 counts are alleged. RCW 9.94A.400.

In the event of a trial each victim must be named in a separate count to insure restitution to the next of kin.

A. Sexual Assault Homicides:

Homicides involving sexual assaults normally shall be handled in conjunction with the special assault unit.

Homicides where the only or key witnesses are children (under age 10) will be handled in conjunction with the special assault unit.

VIII. DISPOSITION

A. CHARGE REDUCTION

1. Degree

- a. A defendant will normally be expected to plead guilty to the degree charged or to go to trial. The correction of errors in the initial charging decision or the development of proof problems which were not apparent at filing are the only factors which may normally be considered in determining whether a reduction to a lesser degree will be offered. Caseload pressure or the expense of prosecution may not be considered.

The sentence a defendant will receive under the determinate sentence range is not the basis for reduction by this office. If such reduction is contemplated, approval will be obtained from the Prosecuting Attorney, or, in his absence, the Chief Deputy or Chief Deputy and approved in a conference with the defendant's attorney, plaintiff's attorney and presiding judge. The exception policy shall be followed before any reduction is considered. All reductions shall be discussed with the victim's next of kin before being concluded. The exception policy shall be followed before a dismissal of counts is offered.

- b. A charge of aggravated murder or murder in the first degree shall not be reduced without the prior personal approval of the Prosecuting Attorney.

- c. The Prosecuting Attorney, the Chief Criminal Deputy, or his designee shall be notified of all proposed reductions prior to the time the reduction is offered.

2. Dismissal of Counts

- a. Normally counts representing separate homicides will not be dismissed in return for a plea of guilty to other counts.
- b. On approval of the Prosecuting Attorney or Chief Criminal Deputy, counts of manslaughter representing separate deaths arising from a single act or omission may be combined into one count alleging the death of each victim if the defendant indicates a willingness to plead guilty to such a count.

B. SENTENCE RECOMMENDATION

A determinate sentence within the presumptive sentencing range shall be recommended. Recommendations outside the specific range shall be made only pursuant to the exception policy. The requests of the next of kin of the victim shall always be considered and may justify an exception.

An offender convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree shall be sentenced to a term of total confinement not less than twenty years. Total confinement may not be modified. RCW 9.94A.120(4).

I. ISSUE

The defense argues that the separate statutory provisions of RCW 10.95 concerning capital punishment and aggravated first degree murder have been repealed by the passage of the Sentence Reform Act of 1981 by the Washington State legislature.

The defense in this case has not filed a memorandum on this issue. Since it appears to be the same motion as filed in the companion case of State v. Rice, Yakima County Cause No. 88-1-00427-2, the State submits its same memorandum in opposition to this defense motion.

ARGUMENT

The defense appears to reach this conclusion by asserting that there is no crime of aggravated murder under Washington law. They cite the cases of State v. Kincaid, 103 Wn.2d 304, 692 P.2d 823 (1985) and State v. Irizarry, 111 Wn.2d 591, 763 P.2d 432 (1988) as authority for that proposition. The defense has to conveniently overlook the

1
2
3 fact that RCW 9.94.320 lists aggravated murder as a crime
4 under the Sentence Reform Act and RCW 9.94A.310 specifically
5 gives it a seriousness level of XIV and a standard range
6 sentence of life without parole or death as provided in RCW
7 10.95 in order to reach its conclusion. Everything else
8 stated and argued by the defense in their memorandum on this 9 issue is premised on this unsubstantiated assertion.

10 The cited cases do not establish what the defense
11 contends. The Kincaid case is really a jury instruction
12 case on the issue of whether each alleged aggravating 13 circumstance provided in RCW 10.95 must be listed as an 14 element of the crime charged when presented to the jury or 15 whether special verdict instructions should be given 16 concerning the aggravating factors. The Washington Supreme 17 Court stated in its opinion at page 312:

18 "Conceptually the crime is premeditated murder
19 in the first degree with aggravating circum-
20 stances. Commonly, however, the crime is often 21 referred to by the courts and others as 22 'aggravated first degree murder'. This is 23 understandable from a historical point of 24 view because, as previously noted, at one 25 stage in the development of the law in this 26 regard, Initiative 316 did establish it as 27 a separate RCW Title 9A crime; in fact,
28 State v. Green, 91 Wn.2d 431, 439, 588 P.2d
29 1370 (1979), in discussing the initiative, 30 referred to it as 'a distinct and separate crime'. Since the present procedural statute, RCW 10.95.020, carries over the term 'aggravated first degree murder' into RCW Title 10, the criminal procedure title, we perceive nothing inappropriate about continuing to refer to the crime as 'aggravated first degree murder', 'aggravated murder in the first degree' or simply as 'aggravated murder'. Nor is it our 1

2
3 intention to hold herein that referring
4 to this crime in instructions as the crime
5 of 'aggravated murder in the first degree',
6 and including any alleged aggravating cir-
7 cumstances as an element of the offense,
8 would be error. While the manner in which 9 the trial court structured its instructions
10 to the jury in this case may conceptually
11 be the preferred manner, it is not the only 12 way that a jury may be properly instructed 13 on the matter."

14 This case hardly establishes that the crime of 15 aggravated first degree murder does not exist. In fact, the 16 case states that references to the crime as aggravated 17 murder are understandable and proper even though 18 conceptually it is more accurate to refer to the crime as 19 premeditated first degree murder with aggravating
20 circumstances. The Irizarry case merely cites the Kincaid 21 case as standing for that same proposition. In fact, the 22 Irizarry case seems to stand for just the opposite position
23 put forward by the defense when it states at page 593:

24 "The statute defining aggravated first degree
25 murder is equally clear; that crime is pre-26 meditated murder in the first degree (not 27 murder by extreme indifference or felony
28 murder) accompanied by the presence of one
29 or more of the statutory aggravating circum-
30 stances listed in the criminal procedure title of the code (RCW 10.95.020)."

31 CONCLUSION

32 The crime of pre-meditated first degree murder with 33 aggravating circumstances does presently exist. It has been 34 directly and properly incorporated into the Sentencing
35 Reform Act of 1981 and there is no valid basis for striking

DEFENSE MOTION FOR A BILL

ISSUES

Defendant requests that the trial court order the State specify in a Bill of Particulars what evidence it intends to rely on to prove 1) premeditation of the murders in this case, 2) that the murders were done for the purpose of concealing the commission of a crime and the identity of those committing the crimes, and 3) that the murders were part of a common scheme or plan.

ARGUMENT

CrR 2.1 governs the application of a Bill of Particulars in a Superior Court criminal case:

- "(a) Use of Indictment or Information. The initial pleading by the State shall be an indictment or an information in all criminal proceedings filed by the prosecuting attorney.
- (b) Nature and Contents. The indictment or the information shall be a plain, concise and definite written statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged. It shall be signed by the prosecuting attorney. Allegations made in one count may be incorporated by reference in another count. It may be alleged that the means by which the defendant committed the offense are unknown or that the defendant committed it by one or more specified means. The

12 Defendant requests that the trial court order the State
13 specify in a Bill of Particulars what evidence it intends to rely 14 on to prove 1) premeditation of the murders in this case, 2) that 15 the murders were done for the purpose of concealing the commission

17 that the murders were part of a common scheme or plan.

18 ARGUMENT

19 CrR 2.1 governs the application of a Bill of Particulars in a 20 Superior Court criminal case:

21 "(a) Use of Indictment or Information. The initial pleading by the State shall 22 be an indictment or an information in all criminal proceedings filed by the 23 prosecuting attorney.

24 (b) Nature and Contents. The indictment or the information shall be a plain, con-25 cise and definite written statement of the essential facts constituting the 26 offense charged. It shall be signed by the prosecuting attorney. Allegations 27 made in one count may be incorporated by reference in another count. It may be 28 alleged that the means by which the defendant committed the offense are un-29 known or that the defendant committed it by one or more specified means. The 3 indictment or information shall state

4 for each count the official or customary 5 citation of the statute, rule, regulation

7 defendant is alleged therein to have

9 omission shall not be ground for dis-

15 (d) Bill of Particulars. The court may 16 direct the filing of a bill of particulars.
17 A motion for a bill of particulars may be 18 made before arraignment or within 10 days 19 after arraignment or at such later time as 20 the court may permit.

21 (e) Amendment. The court may permit any 22 information or bill of particulars to be 23 amended at any time before verdict or find-24 ing of substantial rights of the defendant
25 are not prejudiced.

26"

27 The State has followed the statutory language of the 28 applicable statutes in charging the defendants with capital murder
29 in these cases. Additionally, the State has provided the defense 30 with copies of all the written reports and statements obtained in the investigation of these cases and the defense has reasonable access to all physical evidence held concerning this case, so that the defense has detailed knowledge of all of the evidence that the State has to support the allegations made in these cases.

The case of State v. Dictado, 102 Wn.2d 277, 285, 687 P.2d 172
(1984), is cited by the defense as supporting their request for a Bill of Particulars. In that case, the defendant was charged with non-capital aggravated murder alleging as an aggravating factor that multiple victims were killed as part of a common scheme, plan,

1
3 or single act of the defendant. The defendant complained that even 4 though charged with aggravated murder, he was made to defend 5 gambling allegations introduced to establish the aggravating
6 factor. The Appellate Court upheld the denial of his request for a 7 Bill of Particulars. The Appellate Court stated:

8 "What is important to defendant is whether 9 adequate notice was given of the State's theory of the nexus between the killings.
We find adequate notice."

10 Continuing at page 286:

11 "Defendant further complains that the lack 12 of notice and the vagueness of the charges in the information entitled him to a bill 13 of particulars. A technically proper information may be subject to a timely 14 motion for a more definite statement if it is vague as to the specifics of the crime committed. State v. Bonds, 98 Wn.2d 15 1, 653 P.2d 1024 (1982); see CrR 2.1(e).
A bill of particulars should be granted 16 when it will aid defendant in preparing his case. State v. Devine, 84 Wn.2d 467, 17 527 P.2d 72 (1974). A ruling on a motion for particulars is discretionary with the 18 trial court. State v. Devine, supra.
Having found no lack of notice, we find 19 no abuse of discretion in this case.
Nothing in the record indicates what 20 information, beyond that already provided, the State could have furnished to give additional notice of the charges."

21 State v. Devine, 84 Wn.2d 467, 471, 527 P.2d 72 (1974), also 22 cited by the defense, once again reiterates the purpose of the Bill 23 of Particulars is to assure adequate notice of the nature of the 24 charges to the defense and to avoid any defense surprises at the 25 time of trial:

26 "It cannot be contended here that the 27 defendant was unfairly surprised by the prosecution's evidentiary presentation.
28 Indeed, the defense had apparently anticipated such a departure from the 1

2
3 bill of particulars as it immediately
4 offered a memorandum of authorities in 5 support of its motion to limit the 6 evidence to the bill of particulars.
7 In our opinion, the information supple-
8 mented by the bill of particulars amply 9 informed the appellant of the nature of 10 the charges against him. If error, the 11 minute departures from the bill of partic-
12 ulars in this instance were harmless."

13 State v. Brown, 45 Wn. App. 571, 578, 726 P.2d 60 (1986), is 14 another recent case where the defendant alleged error when the 15 trial court denied a motion for a bill of particulars. The 16 Appellate Court disagreed with the defendant's contention that they 17 had insufficient information to defend the State's allegation in 18 that case. The State had accused the defendant of conspiracy to 19 commit theft by a "rip and tease" operation in which people were 20 duped into believing they were paying for sexual acts from a 21 saleswoman, only to find out that they would receive nothing for 22 their money and would be forced to leave the premises under threat 23 of violence:

24 "Admittedly, the information and affidavit
25 do not allege specifics of the agreement to 26 conspire. However, the State may prove an 27 illegal agreement giving rise to a conspiracy
28 by circumstantial evidence, often by overt 29 acts alone. State v. Gallagher, 15 Wn. App.
30 267, 277, 549 P.2d 499 (1976).

No formal agreement between the parties is essential to the information of the conspiracy, for the agreement may be shown 'if there be concert of action, all the parties working together understandingly, with a single design for the accomplishment of a common purpose.'

Gallagher, at 277, quoting Marino v. United States, 91 F.2d 691, 694, 113 A.L.R. 975
(9th Cir. 1937). Since the State was not required to prove the specifics of the 1

2
3 agreement in order to prove conspiracy,
4 the trial court did not abuse its discre-
5 tion in denying the motion for a bill of 6 partiulars."

7 Washington case law specifically has held that using statutory 8 language to charge a crime is adequate notice to the defendant and 9 that a Bill of Particulars is not appropriate if the request is 10 merely for evidentiary purposes. State v. Bates, 52 Wn.2d 207, 11 210, 324 P.2d 810 (1958) states:

12 "[1] It is sufficient, in charging a crime, to 13 follow the language of the statute, where 14 such crime is there defined and the language 15 used is adequate to apprise the accused with 16 reasonable certainty of the nature of the 17 accusation. State v. Olsen, 43 Wn.2d 726,
18 263 P.2d 824; State v. Moser, 41 Wn.2d 29,
19 246 P.2d 1101; State v. Forler, 38 Wn.2d 20 39, 227 P.2d 727. But an information may 21 be so vague as to be subject to a motion
22 for a bill of particulars, or it may be so
23 vague as to fail to state any crime whatso-
24 ever. State ex rel. Clark v. Hogan, 49
25 Wn.2d 457, 303 P.2d 290.

26 [2] If the information charges a crime (and 27 here there can be no question that it does),
28 an information will be considered sufficient 29 when the facts constituting the crime are 30 so stated that a man of common understanding can determine therefrom the offense with which he is charged. State v. Ternan, 32 Wn.2d 584, 203 P.2d 342, and cases cited therein.

[3,4] The portions of the information which the appellant thinks are too vague are taken from the language of the statute. They are commonly understood words, and we can think of none which would convey the nature of the charge better. Nor has the appellant suggested in what way the information could be improved without setting forth the evidence in detail. This the state is not called upon to do. The objection to the information is not well taken." (Emphasis ours).

See also In re Richard, 75 Wn.2d 208, 449 P.2d 809 (1969).

2
3 State v. Mesaros, 62 Wn.2d 579, 583, 384 P.2d 372 (1963), 4 upheld a trial court's decision to deny a motion for a Bill of 5 Particulars when the request was purely evidentiary in nature. The 6 court stated:

7 "The appellant was arraigned December 19,
8 1961, at which time his counsel stated to 9 the court that they were ready to plead,
10 but that he was going to request a bill of 11 particulars as to one item in the informa-12 tion, namely, the make and caliber of the 13 pistol alleged to have been used in the 14 crime charged. The court denied the 15 request, stating that this was purely 16 evidentiary, but granted counsel permis-
17 sion to file the motion.

19 Continuing at page 585:

20 "The furnishing of a bill of particulars
21 to a defendant is a matter within the 22 discretion of the trial court, and will 23 be disturbed by this court only on a 24 showing of an abuse of discretion."
25 Citing cases.

26 CONCLUSION

27 Defendant's motion for a Bill of Particulars is not 28 appropriate since they are not requesting information needed to 29 understand the nature of the charges against them as alleged in the 30 information filed by the State of Washington.

 The aggravated murder charges are clear and straight forward, alleged in the appropriate statutory language, which need not be improved upon in order for the defendant to understand the charges against him. The defense has been provided copies of all the investigative materials in this case and has reasonable access to the actual evidence presently in the custody of the State which may be presented in the State's case against the defendant.

The defendant has made no showing of confusion or inability to address the allegations of the information in this case while preparing their defense. In actuality, the defense is inappropriately requesting the court require the State to reveal the specific evidence it intends to present on specific identified issues in this case. That is clearly inappropriate. The questions themselves, presented by the defense, reveal that they clearly understand the issues of the case at this time. The defense either has or has access to all of the investigative and evidentiary materials the State has in its possession which the State may use in order to present its case.

The defendants are not entitled to anything more. They are particularly not entitled to the State's intended method of actually proving the allegations of the information which has been clearly drafted in statutory language and which is obviously understood by the defense.

MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION

FOR CHANGE OF VENUE

RUSSELL DUANE McNEIL,)

ISSUE

The defendant has requested a change of venue in this case stating that the defense will show at the appropriate pre-trial hearing that the defendant cannot receive a fair trial in Yakima County, Washington.

ARGUMENT

There are numerous Washington appellate cases that consider this issue. They all begin their analysis with an almost standard recitation of the law in this area. State v. Toennis, 52 Wn. App. 176, 182, 758 P.2d 539 (Aug. 1988) is a most recent Washington case which does this:

"A motion for change of venue in a criminal case is directed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and its decision will not be disturbed on appeal absent a convincing showing of an abuse of discretion."
(Citations omitted.) State v. Stiltner, 80 Wn.2d 47, 52, 491 P.2d 1043 (1971). It is error for a trial court to deny a motion for change of venue where the conclusion is inescapable that a change of venue is necessary to guarantee a defendant's right to a fair trial by an unbiased jury. Stiltner, 80 Wn.2d at 53. A denial of due process may be found even without an affirmative showing of actual prejudice. When the circumstances show a probability of prejudice, the trial is deemed to be inherently lacking in due process.

2
3 Stiltner, 80 Wn.2d at 54.

4 The mere fact that jurors may know about 5 a case is not the central issue. In 6 Patton v. Yount, 467 U.S. 1025, 1035,
7 81 L.Ed.2d 847, 104 S. Ct. 2885, 2891
(1984), the United States Supreme Court
8 said that the fact that a great majority
9 of veniremen knew about the case is ir-10 relevant:

11 The relevant question is not whether 12 the community remembered the case, but 13 whether the jurors . . . had such 14 fixed opinions that they could not 15 judge impartially the guilt of the 16 defendant.

17 In determining whether a motion for change of 18 venue should be granted because of pretrial
19 publicity, trial courts should be guided by 20 the following factors in determining whether 21 due process will be afforded:

22 (1) the inflammatory or noninflammatory
23 nature of the publicity; (2) the degree
24 to which the publicity was circulated 25 throughout the community; (3) the 26 length of time elapsed from the dis-27 semination of the publicity to the 28 date of trial; (4) the care exercised 29 and the difficulty encountered in the 30 selection of the jury; (5) the 31 familiarity of prospective or trial jurors with the publicity and the resultant effect upon them; (6) the challenges exercised by the defendant in selecting the jury, both peremptory and for cause; (7) the connection of government officials with the release of publicity; (8) the size of the area from which the venire is drawn.

State v. Jeffries, 105 Wn.2d 398, 409, 717
P.2d 722, cert. denied, 107 S. Ct. 328 (1986).

24 State v. Laureano, 101 P.2d 745, 757, 682 P.2d 889

25 (1984) addresses the issue of when the trial court may make 26 its decision on change of venue when it states:

27 "The trial court may postpone its decision
28 on a motion for change of venue until after 29 30 31

(2)

2
3 the voir dire examination of prospective
4 jurors. See Crudup, 11 Wn. App. at 589."

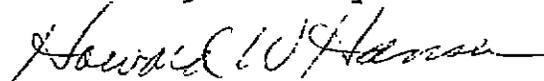

5 Almost all the appellate cases reviewing this issue
6 direct their written opinion to the application of the above
7 listed factors. This must almost of necessity involve a 8 review of the actual voir dire of the jurors called and 9 selected to serve in order to see if pre-trial publicity or 10 other concerns affected their ability to be fair and 11 impartial jurors.

12 The State submits that the pre-trial progression of 13 this case thus far has been very factual and relatively non-14 inflammatory so that no obvious basis to grant a Motion for 15 Change of Venue presently exists based upon what has 16 happened in this case thus far. The State argues that 17 consideration of this issue should await the actual voir 18 dire of perspective jurors at the time of trial in each of 19 these cases.

I. FACTS

Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff were an elderly couple, 82 and 74 years of age respectively, who were retired and lived alone in their single family dwelling in rural Yakima County. In the early evening of January 7, 1988, Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff were both brutally murdered in their home, the result of each receiving multiple knife stab wounds. Two portable television sets were taken from the house at the time of the murders.

The Yakima Sheriff's Department continued to investigate these homicides and follow-up on the many leads provided to the authorities. On January 25, 1988, Det. Shaw of the Sheriff's Department contacted an individual who told the detective that he had been approached by an individual named Chief Rice approximately two or three days before the Nickoloff homicides. Mr. Rice had asked this individual to assist him in a burglary on Kays Road. Rice had told this individual that Rice had previously been at the house he wanted to burglarize when his vehicle had broken down and he

3 had gone there for assistance. Rice told this individual 4 that two old people live there, one having a walker and 5 wheelchair to get around, that there was a freezer at the 6 front of the house, and that the back door was left open.
7 This individual told Det. Shaw that he refused Rice's
8 request to participate in the burglary, but was recontacted
9 by Rice two days after the homicides. During this contact,
10 Rice was accompanied by a white male individual named "Russ"
11 and they were attempting to sell two portable television 12 sets, one set was black and white and one set was color.

13 The informant initially told Det. Shaw that Rice and 14 his companion left with both of the television sets. On 15 January 26, 1988, this same individual recontacted Det. Shaw 16 at approximately 1500 hours and turned over a black and 17 white portable television set to the officer stating it came 18 from Rice and was given to the informant to pay off a debt 19 Rice owed him. The informant was directed to attempt to 20 gain additional information concerning the two individuals
21 and the television sets. The informant was recontacted 22 later that afternoon and provided detectives with the 23 additional information that the suspect "Russ" went to Pace
24 Alternative School and had lots of pimples on his face.
25 Contact at the Pace School revealed that the only person
26 with that first name and description was a Russell McNeil.

27 Detectives once again contacted the informant at 28 approximately 7:45 that evening and at that time the second 29 television set which was a color portable unit was turned 30

2
3 over to the detectives. The informant at that time stated
4 to the detectives that he had been with "Rice" and "Russ"
5 when they had sold the second television set to a third 6 party. The two television sets were shown to members of the 7 Nickoloff family and were identified as the televisions
8 coming from their parents' home.

9 Detectives contacted Russell McNeil at his home in 10 Toppenish, Washington, that evening and the defendant agreed 11 to go with the officers to the Toppenish substation for an 12 interview.

13 Upon entering the substation, the defendant, Russell
14 Duane McNeil, told the detectives his name, date of birth, 15 address, and that he was a student at the Pace School in 16 Wapato, Washington. Mr. McNeil was then verbally given his 17 Miranda warnings, which he stated he understood fully and 18 executed a written waiver agreeing to talk to the detectives 19 at 2258 hours on January 26, 1988.

20 After the defendant McNeil admitted he knew Chief Rice 21 and was with Rice when they were trying to sell the 22 television sets, the interview was adjourned to be 23 recommenced at the Yakima Sheriff's Department in Yakima, 24 Washington. Det. Shaw continued to talk to the defendant 25 McNeil about the homicides on the trip up to Yakima and 26 detoured to the nearby crime scene once McNeil began talking 27 about the actual crimes. Once they arrived at the Nickoloff
28 house and while remaining in the police vehicle, McNeil 29 verified that this was the the location of the crimes and 30

2
3 discussed their movements and actions at the crime scene,
4 initially minimizing his own participation in the crimes.
5 After they had left the Nickoloff residence and were headed 6 towards Yakima, McNeil finally admitted his participation in 7 the homicides with Chief Rice.

8 Upon arriving at the Yakima Sheriff's Department
9 Detectives interview room, defendant McNeil was again read
10 his Miranda warnings, McNeil stated he understood, and a 11 verbal interview took place. Thereafter, a taped statement
12 was taken going over the entire incident. This taped 13 statement also included another advice of rights during the 14 recorded statement in which the defendant once again
15 acknowledged he understood his rights and agreed to waive 16 those rights and talk to the detectives voluntarily.

17 ARGUMENT

18 The case of State v. Prater, 77 Wn.2d 526, 463 P.2d 640
19 (1970) is an early Washington case which notes the movement
20 of our courts away from the non-adversarial parens patriae
21 approach to juvenile criminal offenses to the approach
22 dictated by the United States Supreme Court case In re 23 Gault, 387 U.S. 1, 18 L.Ed.2d 527, 87 S. Ct. 1428 (1967) in 24 which juveniles were also granted their constitutional 25 rights against self-incrimination and for court-appointed 26 lawyers to assist them as contained in Miranda v. Arizona,
27 384 U. S. 436, 16 L.Ed.2d 694, 86 S. Ct. 1602 (1966).

28 The Washington Supreme Court stated at page 533:

29 "The Constitution requires that a juvenile be 30 be advised of his rights and that he be warned

2
3 of the possible consequences of an admission
4"

5 The Court then detailed at page 534 that an officer

6 "must make sure that a juvenile understands 7 their Miranda warning. If there is not an 8 intelligent waiver of his constitutional rights,
9 the juvenile's answers should not be used
10 against him. Whether there is such a waiver
11 depends on a number of factors such as the age, 12 intelligence and experience of the juvenile.
13 Whether a proper warning is given and whether 14 there is an intelligent waiver is a factual
15 matter for the court to decide in each case."

16 See also State v. Barriault, 20 Wn. App. 419, 423, 581
17 P.2d 1365 (1978).

18 The case of Dutil v. State, 93 Wn.2d 84, 88, 6060 P.2d 19 269 (1980) formally acknowledged the federal standard known 20 as the "totality of the circumstances" test in determining 21 whether a juvenile's Fifth and Sixth Amendment rights have 22 been protected.

23 "This totality of the circumstances approach
24 is adequate to determine whether there has been 25 a waiver even where interrogation of juveniles
26 is involved. We discern no persuasive reasons 27 why any other approach is required where the 28 question is whether a juvenile has waived his 29 rights, as opposed to whether an adult has done 30 so. The totality approach permits - indeed, it mandates - inquiry into all the circumstances surrounding the interrogation. This includes evaluation of the juvenile's age, experience, education, background, and intelligence, and into whether he has the capacity to understand the warnings given him, the nature of his Fifth Amendment rights, and the consequences of waiving those rights. See North Carolina v. Butler,
[441 U.S. 369, 60 L.Ed.2d 286, 99 S. Ct. 1755
(1979)].

Courts repeatedly must deal with these issues of waiver with regard to a broad variety of constitutional rights. There is no reason to assume that such courts - especially juvenile courts, with their special expertise in this area - will 1

2
3 be unable to apply the totality of the circum-
4 stances analysis so as to take into account those 5 special concerns that are present when young 6 persons, often with limited experience and 7 education and with immature judgment are involved.
8 Where the age and experience of a juvenile 9 indicate that his request for his probation
10 officer or his parents is, in fact, an invocation
11 of his right to remain silent, the totality
12 approach will allow the court the necessary 13 flexibility to taken this into account in 14 making a waiver determination. At the same 15 time, that approach refrains from imposing 16 rigid restraints on police and courts in 17 dealing with an experienced older juvenile 18 with an extensive prior record who knowingly
19 and intelligently waives his Fifth Amendment
20 rights and voluntarily consents to interroga-21 tion."

22 The Dutil opinion further recognized at page 93 that 23 waiver by older juveniles should be viewed much like an 24 adult waiver:

25 "The legislature apparently recognized that 26 a youngster nearing the age of majority is 27 more likely to have the ability to comprehend 28 advice given him about his rights. This is 29 particularly true, of course, where he has had 30 previous experience in the juvenile court. As with adults, the question whether his waiver was intelligent becomes one of fact rather than one of presumption."

See also State v. Fagundes, 26 Wn. App. 477, 482, 614
P.2d 198 (1980). State v. Jones, 95 Wn.2d 616, 625, 628
P.2d 472 (1981).

State v. Wolfer, 39 Wn. App. 287, 290, 693 P.2d 154 (1984) provides a restatement of what the court should consider in addressing the issue of whether a confession is voluntary:

"The voluntariness of a confession or admission is determined by examining the totality of the circumstances.
See Davis v. North Carolina, 384 U.S.

1
2
3 737, 741-42, 16 L.Ed.2d 895, 86 S. Ct.
4 1761 (1966); State v. Fagundes, 26 Wn.
5 App. 477, 482, 614 P.2d 198, 625 P.2d
6 179 (1980). The test is if the 7 defendant's will to resist was so
8 overborne as to bring about a confes-
9 sion not freely self-determined.
10 Rogers v. Richmond, 365 U.S. 534,
11 544, 5 L.Ed.2d 760, 81 S. Ct. 735
12 (1961); State v. Gilcrist, 91 Wn.2d
13 603, 607, 590 P.2d 809 (1979).
14 Although it is the State's burden
15 to prove voluntariness, it need only
16 do so by a preponderance of the evidence.
17 State v. Braun, 82 Wn.2d 157, 162, 509 P.2d
18 742 (1973); State v. Davis, 34 Wn. App. 546, 19 550, 662 P.2d 78 (1983). Moreover, a trial 20 court's determination that a confession was 21 voluntary is binding on appeal when there 22 is substantial evidence from which the 23 trial court could find voluntariness by a 24 preponderance of the evidence. State v.
25 Vannoy, 25 Wn. App. 464, 467, 610 P.2d
26 380 (1980)."

27 See also, State v. Mark, 34 Wn. App. 349, 351, 661 P.2d 28 157 (1983).

29 The Washington case of State v. Rupe, 101 Wn.2d 664, 30 679, 683 P.2d 571 (1984) attempts to summarize some of the factors to be considered in viewing the "totality of the circumstances":

"To be voluntary, a confession must be the produce of a rational intellect and a free will. Mincey v. Arizona, 437 U.S. 385, 398, 57 L.Ed.2d 290, 98 S. Ct. 2408 (1978). In determining voluntariness, the Court evaluates
'all the circumstances of the interrogation'.
Mincey, at 401. The Court has considered the physical condition of the defendant (Mincey, defendant wounded and in great pain); his mental abilities (Davis v. North Carolina,
384 U.S. 737, 16 L.Ed.2d 895, 86 S. Ct.
176 (1966) (low intelligence)); and the conduct of the police (Spano v. New York,
360 U.S. 315, 3 L.Ed.2d 1265, 79 S. Ct. 1202
(1959) (police used close friend to interrogate; informed defendant that friend would lose job if no confession)); (Davis, police isolated defendant for 16 days with minimal

1
2
3 food).

4 Viewing the totality of the circumstances,
5 we conclude that defendant's confession was 6 voluntary. The police tactics employed were 7 neither overly zealous nor coercive."

8 Lastly, the case of State v. Terrovona, 105 Wn.2d 632,
9 646, 716 P.2d 295 (1986) demonstrates that a valid waiver 10 can not only be revealed by express waivers (which we 11 certainly have numerous examples of in this case), but also 12 by implied waiver contained in the facts of the custodial 13 interrogation:

14 "A valid waiver may be expressly made by a 15 suspect or implied from the facts of a 16 custodial interrogation. As held in State
17 v. Adams, 76 Wn.2d 650, 671, 458 P.2d 558
18 (1969), rev'd on other grounds, 403 U.S.
19 947, 29 L.Ed.2d 855, 91 S. Ct. 2273 (1971):

20 The Supreme Court has not required
21 an express statement by the accused 22 for an effective waiver, but rather 23 has forbidden the presumption that
24 an intelligent waiver was made
25 simply from the fact that a state-26 ment was eventually extricated from 27 the accused after he was warned
28 of his rights. Some additional showing
29 is required that the inherently coercive 30 atmosphere of custodial interrogation has not disabled the accused from making a free and rational choice.

Implied waiver has been found where the record reveals that a defendant understood his rights and volunteered information after reaching such understanding. Waiver has also been inferred where the record shows that a a defendant's answers were freely and voluntarily made without duress, promise or threat and with a full understanding of his constitutional rights."

CONCLUSION

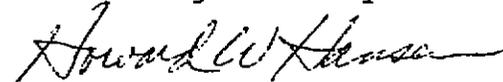

Under the facts and circumstances presented in this memorandum and to be presented in the 3.5 hearing to be held

1
2
3 in this case, the State submits the defendant's Miranda
4 rights have been fully protected, the State has met its 5 burden to show the defendant knowingly, voluntarily, and 6 intelligently waived his Miranda rights, and therefore the 7 statements obtained from the defendant are admissible
8 against him in the trial of this case.

1. Relief Sought. The defendant, Russell Duane McNeil, by and through his attorneys, Chris Tait and Thomas Bothwell, move the Court for an order directing the State of Washington to provide the defense with a bill of particulars specifying the following information:

(a) The specific evidence it relies upon to support the allegation that the deaths of Dorothy and Mike Nickoloff in this case were premeditated;

COMES NOW the above-named Defendant, through counsel, offering this memorandum relative to the 3.5 hearing.

INTRODUCTION

The underlying premises of this memorandum are that the State intends to offer one or more statements of the Defendant RUSSELL DUANE McNEIL in evidence, allegedly given by Defendant while in "custodial interrogation" as that term is employed in the case law (Miranda and its progeny). It is the undersigned counsel's understanding that the State acknowledges it must show that the Defendant manifested in some way an intent to waive his "Miranda rights" and that the waiver was fully, knowingly and intelligently made.

LEGAL STANDARDS

Custodial interrogation imposes a heavy burden on the State to show that a defendant's waiver of his Miranda rights was "an intentional relinquishment or abandonment or a known right or privilege."

Inculpatory statements taken from a suspect during custodial interrogation are presumed to be inherently compelled even after proper Miranda warnings have been given.

Ferguson, 13 Washington Practice, Section 2915 (1984).

Defendant McNeil was a 17-year-old juvenile when the alleged statements were given.

Whether a juvenile has knowingly and voluntarily waived his Miranda rights is determined by a "totality-of-the-circumstances" approach. Fare v. Michael C., 442 U.S. 707, 725, 61 L.Ed.2d 197, 99 S.Ct 2560 (1979); Dutil v. State, 93 Wn.2d 84, 606 P.2d 269 (1980); State v. Luoma, 88 Wn.2d 28, 558 P.2d 756 (1977).

The totality approach permits - indeed, it mandates - inquiry into all the circumstances surrounding the interrogation. This includes evaluation of the juvenile's age, experience, education, background, and intelligence, and into whether he has the capacity to understand the warnings given him, the nature of his Fifth Amendment rights, and the consequences of waiving those rights.

State v. Jones, 95 Wn.2d 616, 625, 628 P.2d 472 (1981), quoting from Fare v. Michael C., 442 U.S. 707, 725 (1979).

CHRISTOPHER TAIT, being first duly sworn upon oath,
deposes and states:

I am lead counsel for defendant Russell Duane McNeil.

Trial of this case is currently scheduled for April 10 or April 12, 1989, if defendant McNeil is ordered to stand trial before defendant Rice. Defense pre-trial motions are now due on February 13, 1989. Responsive motions and/or briefs from the Prosecuting Attorney are due on February 27, 1989. Pre-trial hearings are now scheduled to begin on March 13, 1989.

On the same day that the United States Supreme Court issued its opinion in OKLAHOMA V. THOMPSON, it accepted certiorari in WILKINS V. MISSOURI, HIGH V. ZANT, AND STANDFORD V. KENTUCKY. Those cases, or two of them, are scheduled for oral argument in that court in March of 1989, and written opinions will be issued by that court before its summer recess, probably in June of 1989. Attorney Bothwell has communicated with the Clerk of Court, and obtained that docketing information.

While it is impossible to predict the rulings of the United States Supreme Court, it can easily and logically be argued that the rulings in those cases could eliminate execution as a method of punishment for juveniles, irrespective of the crimes for which they are convicted.

Trying either of these cases in April and May of 1989 may well be a waste of time, and a catastrophic waste of money. IF a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, with one aggravating circumstance was returned by a jury in either of these cases, the entire penalty phase may be unnecessary. Jury selection would be much more easily accomplished if the death penalty was not an issue. Many pre-trial motions would not be necessary. Other pre-trial motions might be viewed differently by this Court if execution of these juveniles was impossible.

I have reviewed this matter with every attorney involved in either of these cases, and have not heard any objection.

I do not believe that any party to this case will be harmed in any way by a continuance.

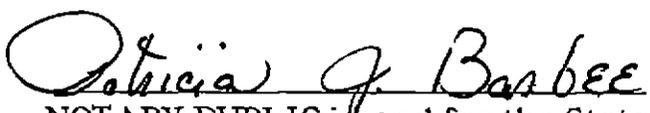

I have reviewed this matter at some length with my client, and he has agreed to a continuance until September of 1989. He has signed the WAIVER which accompanies this motion and affidavit.

In light of these facts, it is respectfully submitted that the trial date in this case should be continued until September 5, 1989, and that the deadlines for filing of motions and briefs should be extended to conform to the new trial date.

My name is Russell McNeil. I am currently being held in the Yakima County Jail. I am charged with one count of aggravated first degree murder, and one count of being an accomplice to aggravated first degree murder. The prosecutor has requested the death penalty for both crimes. My attorneys are Chris Tait and Tom Bothwell.

I was 17 years old on January 7, 1988, which is the date on which these crimes were allegedly committed. I turned 18 on August 13, 1988.

By order entered March 15, 1988, the Juvenile Court in Yakima County declined jurisdiction in my case, and I was remanded to adult court.

I was arrested on January 27, 1988, and have been in custody ever since that date.

My attorneys filed and argued a motion to dismiss the death penalty notice because juveniles are not eligible to receive the death penalty in Washington. That motion was denied. That ruling was appealed to the Supreme Court of Washington, which declined to hear this case before trial. I have been advised by my attorneys that there are at this time two cases before the United States Supreme Court which might yield opinions ruling on the eligibility of juveniles for execution. I understand that we cannot predict the rulings of the United States Supreme Court. I understand that a continuance ruling means that I must wait longer in the Yakima County Jail to go to trial. I believe it is better for me to wait, hoping for a ruling from the United States Supreme Court which is favorable to me. I have been advised of the schedule found below, and I agree to that timetable. I know and understand that I could demand a jury trial at this time. I give up the right to be tried at this time. I consent to the timetable below. I do so knowingly, voluntarily, and of my own free will. I have reviewed this document with my attorney.

(1) Defendant shall file his pre-trial motions, together with supporting affidavits and briefs, within 30 days of the date on which the opinion of the U.S. Supreme Court is filed.

(2) The Prosecuting Attorney shall file his responsive briefs, affidavits, and materials no later than 15 days after he is served with defendant's pre-trial motions.

(3) The hearing on pre-trial motions shall begin on the 60th day following the filing of pre-trial motions.

(4) The trial in this case shall begin on the 90th day following the filing of pre-trial motions.

RE: STATE OF WASHINGTON, vs. RUSSELL DUANE McNEIL,
Yakima County Cause No. 88-1-00428-1
AND STATE OF WASHINGTON, vs. HERBERT RICE, JR.,
Yakima County Cause No. 88-1-00427-2

Dear Counsel:

As you know, on January 10, 1989, the Supreme Court affirmed the decision of their court commissioner, denying the motions for discretionary review. Pursuant to Order dated September 22, 1988, I ordered all pretrial motions, together with affidavits and briefs, be filed by the defendants' within 30 days of the date the Supreme Court Opinion is filed in the Yakima County Clerk's office. The prosecutor then has 15 days to file responsive briefs and affidavits. The hearing on the pretrial motions is to be held no later than the sixtieth day following the date on which the Supreme Court's Opinion is filed with the Yakima County Clerk. The trials are to begin no later than the ninetieth day following the date the Opinion is filed.

I suggest counsel file pretrial motions well within the 30 day (45 day) periods, so they can be heard, not on the sixtieth day, but preferably well in advance. Because the trials must be set within ninety days of the date of filing, as much time between the Court's ruling on motions and the trial date as is possible, is necessary.

Letter to Messrs. Sullivan, Hansen, Frost,
Bothwell, Tait and Hoffman

January 11, 1989

The Supreme Court decision was filed at the Clerk's office today, Thursday, January 12, 1989. The first day is excluded, but the last day is included. The thirtieth day would be February 13, because the 11th is a Saturday; the forty-fifth day would be February 27, because the 26th is a Sunday; the sixtieth day would be March 13, and the ninetieth day would be April 12.

Barring any lawful and good cause reasons, any continuances or changes will not be allowed.

Be sure to send copies of all motions, affidavits, or other documents to me. I also must know the amount of time counsel feels will be required for the argument of the motions.

Very truly yours,

It is of paramount importance that a decision be made concerning the order in which these cases will be tried. Any such motion(s) are not subject to my previous order and should be noted and argued as quickly as possible. Yakima County Cause No. 88-1-00428-1
AND STATE OF WASHINGTON, vs. HERBERT RICE, JR.,
Yakima County Cause No. 88-1-00427-2

Dear Counsel:

As you know, on January 10, 1989, the Supreme Court affirmed the decision of their court commissioner, denying the motions for discretionary review. Pursuant to Order dated September 22, 1988, I ordered all pretrial motions, together with affidavits and briefs, be filed by the defendants' within 30 days of the date the Supreme Court Opinion is filed in the Yakima County Clerk's office. The prosecutor then has 15 days to file responsive briefs and affidavits. The hearing on the pretrial motions is to be held no later than the sixtieth day following the date on which the Supreme Court's Opinion is filed with the Yakima County Clerk. The trials are to begin no later than the ninetieth day following the date the Opinion is filed.

I suggest counsel file pretrial motions well within the 30 day (45 day) periods, so they can be heard, not on the sixtieth day, but preferably well in advance. Because the trials must be set within ninety days of the date of filing, as much time between the Court's ruling on motions and the trial date as is possible, is necessary.

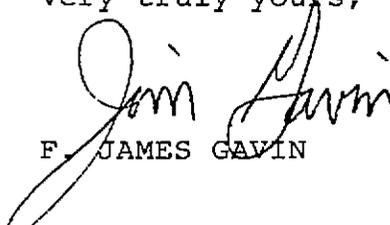

Letter to Messrs. Sullivan, Hansen, Frost,
Bothwell, Tait and Hoffman
Page 2

The Supreme Court decision was filed at the Clerk's office today, Thursday, January 12, 1989. The first day is excluded, but the last day is included. The thirtieth day would be February 13, because the 11th is a Saturday; the forty-fifth day would be February 27, because the 26th is a Sunday; the sixtieth day would be March 13, and the ninetieth day would be April 12.

Barring any lawful and good cause reasons, any continuances or changes will not be allowed.

Be sure to send copies of all motions, affidavits, or other documents to me. I also must know the amount of time counsel feels will be required for the argument of the motions.

Very truly yours,

F. JAMES GAVIN

 YAKIMA COUNTY

Russell McNeil and Herbert Rice, Jr. each stand charged in Yakima County Superior Court with one count of aggravated first degree murder and a second count of acting as an accomplice to aggravated first degree murder. The State has also given notice to both defendants of its intent to seek the death penalty. Each was about 17 1/2 years old when the crimes—the murder of an elderly couple—occurred.

Rice and McNeil each moved for dismissal of the notice of intent to seek the death penalty, contending, among other arguments, that the state and federal constitutional protections against cruel and unusual punishment prohibit imposition of the death penalty for a crime committed by a minor. The trial court denied these motions. Rice and McNeil now move for direct discretionary review, seeking an interlocutory decision by this court on that constitutional question.

The rules governing when interlocutory review is appropriate are quite strict:

[D]iscretionary review will be accepted only:

(1) If the superior court has committed an obvious error which would render further proceedings useless; or

(2) If the superior court has committed probable error and the decision of the superior court substantially alters the status quo or substantially limits the freedom of a party to act; or

(3) If the superior court has so far departed from the accepted and usual course of judicial proceedings, or so far sanctioned such a departure by an inferior court or administrative agency, as to call for review by the appellate court.

RAP 2.3(b). None of these criteria is met here.¹

In Thompson v. Oklahoma, ___ U.S. ___, 101 L. Ed. 2d 702, 108 S. Ct. 2687 (1988), the Supreme Court recently disapproved of imposition of the death penalty on a person who was under 16 when he committed his crime. A plurality of the Justices concluded that the death penalty for such a defendant would constitute cruel and unusual punishment. In a concurring opinion necessary to the Court's decision, however, Justice ¹Petitioner McNeil suggests that discretionary review might be appropriate under the standards of RAP 2.3(d). That rule, however, concerns only review of Superior Court appellate decisions in cases originating in a court of limited jurisdiction. It has no applicability here.

O'Connor declined to reach the Eighth Amendment question. Although she expressed concern that application of the death penalty for a crime committed by a 15-year-old would be of "very dubious constitutionality," she rested her decision instead on the lack of legislative consideration of the question, as evidenced by the absence of a minimum age in the Oklahoma capital punishment statute.

Petitioners have argued ably that the considerations relied upon by the Court in Thompson should apply to a 17-year-old with equal force as to a 15-year-old. Given the method of analysis which the Court employs on Eighth Amendment issues, however, it is far from clear whether either the plurality or Justice O'Connor would extend their reasoning to preclude capital punishment for any crime committed by a person under 18. Indeed, two cases which apparently will answer that question will be heard by the Supreme Court this term. High v. Zant, No. 87-5666, and Wilkins v. Missouri, No. 87-6026. On balance, and based upon my own study of the opinions in Thompson, I am unable to conclude that the trial court here committed obvious or probable error in denying the motion to dismiss on Eighth Amendment grounds.

Petitioners also argue ably that imposing the death penalty for crimes committed by minors would violate the state constitution's prohibition against "cruel punishment," Const. art. 1, § 14, even if it would not violate the Eighth Amendment.

This is, no doubt, a clear possibility. Petitioners correctly note that the analytical framework for such an inquiry is supplied by State v. Gunwall, 106 Wn.2d 54, 720 P.2d 608 (1986). I believe this court would consider itself better served, however, if it has the benefit of the Supreme Court's Eighth Amendment conclusion before addressing (if necessary) the state constitutional provision. As noted above, cases presently before the Supreme Court will likely provide that guidance. Perhaps most importantly, the limited authority that presently exists construing Const. art. 1, § 14 provides no direct support for petitioners' proposed result on the specific death penalty issue presented. On the state constitutional question as well, therefore, I cannot conclude that the trial court's decision was obvious or probable error.

Finally, I am mindful that the pretrial and trial of capital cases is a lengthy, arduous, and expensive proposition. Defendants and the State therefore often share an interest in securing interlocutory decisions on issues that may determine the availability of the death penalty. Nonetheless, interlocutory review inevitably delays the conclusion of trial court proceedings and frequently simply permits several piecemeal appeals in the same case. Since either of these results is undesirable, discretionary review is only sparingly afforded. The applicable criteria, set out in RAP 2.3(b) and quoted above, are not met here.

The motions for discretionary review are denied.

Re: State v. McNeil

Dear Judge Gavin:

Counsel were advised yesterday at about 3:00 P.M. that this matter was set for 1:30 P.M. today. Pleadings were served by the Prosecutor at 4:55 P.M. yesterday. Mr. Bothwell is in Seattle. I have office appointments set for this afternoon which I can reschedule if necessary.

The Court Administrator has not had time to note the matter for hearing. All these arrangements have been made by telephone.

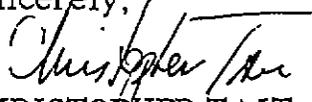

Defense counsel will NOT approve the pleadings prepared by the prosecution. Defense counsel WILL present proposed pleadings, but not today.

I respectfully submit that today's hearing should be stricken, and this case should be renoted for Monday, September 26, 1988. I will appear today only to object to improper notice, and improper service.

Please call me if I may be of further assistance.

Thank you for taking the time to listen to our scheduling problems.

Sincerely,

CHRISTOPHER TAIT

RE: STATE v. RUSSELL McNEIL
No. 88-1-00428-1

Dear Judge Gavin:

If you recall, at the last hearing in this case, the State represented to Your Honor that it would have a proposed order to present to the Court by last Friday. Since approximately the middle of last week, defense counsel have repeatedly inquired of the State as to when an order would be proposed. Today, Wednesday, at approximately 5:05 p.m., I had the opportunity to review for the first time the proposed FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW which were delivered to the office of co-counsel Chris Tait apparently approximately 20 minutes earlier. I understand the Prosecutor's Office is now proposing that we have the proposed orders considered by you tomorrow, Thursday.

I ask that the proposed Findings and Conclusions not be considered by Your Honor on Thursday. I am out of town on Thursday and Friday. I ask that we schedule a hearing any time Monday, September 26. It may be that after further reflection and an opportunity to review the proposed Findings and Conclusions, counsel for Mr. McNeil will not find it necessary to propose alternative Findings, Conclusions and Order. However, frankly, after having had this very limited opportunity to review the papers proposed by the State, I have substantial concerns as to their appropriateness.

I realize the Court wants to get this case moving. I hope my request that we have our hearing on Monday rather than tomorrow is taken with the understanding that the State has waited all this time and after last Friday to finally get something proposed, and hopefully waiting two more days can be accommodated.

1 Equally important is the Washington State
2 Constitution. In the last few years, as pointed out by
3 Mr. Frost, the Supreme Court of the state of Washington
4 has looked to our constitution to decide constitutional
5 issues, recognizing, of course, that the state
6 constitution cannot decrease the rights that individuals
7 have under the federal constitution. The federal
8 constitution affords certain minimum rights, certain
9 rights and standards which we are all compelled to follow.
10 The Washington State Constitution in some instances grants
11 even greater rights to individuals than does the federal
12 constitution as evidenced by search and seizure cases
13 already decided; and although one of those has to some
14 extent been overruled, the state Supreme Court,
15 nevertheless, applies a stricter rule with regard to
16 searches and seizures pursuant to the state constitution
17 than under the federal constitution. And, in fact, when
18 the United States Supreme Court told the Washington State
19 Supreme Court it had decided a case incorrectly under the 20 federal constitution and that a person's rights had not 21 been violated, our Supreme Court said, "Well, we will
22 decide the case strictly upon the Washington State
23 Constitution, and our constitution grants greater
24 individual rights under the circumstances than does the 25 federal constitution. We won't even decide this under the

1 federal constitution, we will decide it under our own
2 constitution."

3 It is becoming increasingly important in this state
4 to review the Washington State Constitution. As pointed
5 out by counsel, the Washington State Constitution under
6 article 1, section 14, reads, "Excessive bail shall not be
7 required, excessive fines imposed, nor cruel punishment
8 inflicted." Really the only difference between the Eighth
9 Amendment to the federal constitution and the state
10 constitution is that Washington prohibits cruel
11 punishment; in other words, cruel punishment cannot be
12 inflicted, and does not refer to cruel and inhuman
13 punishment. Inhuman is not included in the Washington
14 statute.

15 I attempted to locate a case which might help me in 16 deciding whether or not the state constitution is to be
17 interpreted differently than the federal constitution.
18 About the only indication I could find is a statement
19 contained in the Rupe case, which has been cited by 20 counsel, and State v. Forrester, at 21 Wn.App. 855.

21 Under State v. Forrester, the test which is to be
22 utilized is:

23 "...whether, in view of contemporary standards of 24 elemental decency, punishment is of such 25 disproportionate character to the offense as to shock the general conscience and violate principles
of fundamental fairness."

1 Under Rupe, 108 Wn.2d 734, the court essentially
2 affirmed that position (Rupe was decided in 1987)
3 although a statement is contained therein that the state
4 constitution requires even greater safeguards under the
5 circumstances of that case.

6 At Page 777, the court in Rupe states:

7 "Under the federal constitution, the death penalty
8 may not be imposed arbitrarily and capriciously, and 9 the jury must adhere to the substantive factors
state law lays before it."

10 Then it says our state constitution may require even 11 greater safeguards, relying upon State v. Bartholomew, the 12 second case referred to as Bartholomew II. Quoting from
13 Bartholomew II:

14 "Where the trial which results in imposition of the 15 death penalty lacks fundamental fairness, the 16 punishment violates article 1, section 14 of the state constitution."

17 None of these cases were in the context of juveniles,
18 or people under the age of 18, and let's say for purposes
19 of this decision over the age of 15.

20 To digress just a little, when an argument is made as 21 to one day over 15, or one day over 16, or within one day
22 of 16, to me that means nothing because the Supreme Court
23 has said at age 15 and below, you shall not impose the 24 death penalty. To me that means if 15 years, 364 days,
25 23 hours, 59 minutes and 59 seconds old, a person is still

1 15 and you shall not impose it. It is a guideline the
2 Supreme Court of the United States has adopted. It does
3 not make any difference age-wise, according to them.

4 There is some guidance, however, with regard to
5 article 1, section 14. If there is a violation of 6 fundamental fairness, or if contemporary standards of
7 elemental decency have been violated by imposing the death
8 penalty, then I believe our state Supreme Court would 9 hold, under those circumstances, a violation of article 1,
10 section 14.

11 That really does not say a whole lot more than is 12 said in Thompson because Thompson -- and I better refer to 13 the case and get the proper language. Thompson recognizes
14 as a very important element to be considered the "evolving
15 standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing
16 society." I do not believe that is anything other than 17 saying what does society expect under the circumstances?
18 What is decent? If you go beyond the bounds of decency,
19 then that would be cruel punishment.

20 Keeping that in mind, we should all recognize the 21 Eighth Amendment and article 1, section 14 really contain
22 categorical prohibitions against cruel and inhuman
23 punishment and cruel punishment. I would also quote to 24 counsel from page 4894 of 56 Law Week from the opinion of 25 Justice Stevens. It says:

1 "The authors of the Eighth Amendment drafted a
2 categorical prohibition against the infliction of
3 cruel and unusual punishments, but they made
4 no attempt to define the contours of that category.
5 They delegated that task to future generations of
6 judges who have been guided by the 'evolving
7 standards of decency that mark the progress of a
8 maturing society'."

9 Which sounds quite similar to the statement contained in 10 Forrester and what I believe our state Supreme Court would 11 rely upon.

12 The quotation also leads me to believe there is a
13 difference between Justice O'Connor's opinion and that of 14 the plurality insofar as related to the legislature. As 15 Justice O'Connor says: "Let the legislature do it. Send 16 it to the legislature and let them decide what the age
17 limit will be."

18 Now, Mr. Tait and Mr. Bothwell have pointed out, in 19 response to the argument of Mr. Hansen and Mr. Sullivan, 20 that there are several places where the legislature ^{is}
21 mentioned in the opinion of the plurality and in the
22 footnotes, and what have you; but I think there is a
23 distinction. The plurality believes the definition of the 24 contours of the category, as referred to by Justice
25 Stevens, are to be provided by judges and not the legislature. They are to be provided by judges, however, relying upon what the legislature has done in certain circumstances; therefore obtaining certain guidelines from

1 the legislature, guidelines from what juries have done,
2 guidelines from standards of decency within the community.

3 In deciding these cases, I believe I must look first
4 to the state of Washington. I am a state judge. Our
5 state Supreme Court will undoubtedly be involved in
6 determining this issue, whether in these cases or another,
7 at least sometime in the near future. I look to our
8 constitution first, keeping in mind the federal
9 constitution provides minimum standards, and I must adhere
10 to the decision in Thompson insofar as it sets out those 11 minimum standards; but I feel compelled to look to the 12 state to see what has been accomplished in the state and
13 what guidelines we have in the state of Washington.

14 One of the critical issues in these cases, at least 15 counsel believe, is with regard to the proceedings that 16 took place prior to these two men being transferred into 17 Superior Court as adults. They were, of course, in 18 Superior Court in the juvenile process through a
19 declination proceeding. That would be a decline of 20 jurisdiction in the juvenile court and being transferred
21 to adult court to be tried as adults.

22 There is, I believe, a very substantial difference
23 between the Oklahoma statutory scheme and the Washington
24 statutory scheme. In Washington -- Let me get the
25 statute. In Washington, under RCW Chapter 13.40, if a

1 person is 16 or 17 and there is an allegation of a Class A
2 felony, which we have here, or attempt to commit a Class A
3 felony, a decline hearing is mandatory unless it is waived
4 by the court, the parties and the parties' counsel. In
5 other words, there must be a decline hearing in the
6 state of Washington unless everybody agrees there will not
7 be and all waive the hearing.

8 Thompson demonstrates the Oklahoma statutory scheme
9 is different. The difference is extremely important and
10 is demonstrated at page 4905 as follows:

11 "Under Oklahoma law, anyone who commits a crime when 12 he is under the age of eighteen is defined to be a
13 child, unless he is sixteen or seventeen and has 14 committed murder or certain other specified
15 crimes..."

16 Now that is much the same as Washington; but then it
17 continues:

18 "...in which case he is automatically certified to 19 stand trial as an adult."

20 So in Oklahoma if you are charged with the crime of 21 murder and you are 16 or 17, you are automatically an 22 adult. You are tried as an adult. In the state of
23 Washington if you are 16 or 17, you are automatically
24 entitled to a hearing where it will be determined whether 25 or not you should be tried as an adult. Part of that process is set out in case law, both state and federal, as

1 well as RCW 13.40.110.

2 Under RCW 13.40.110, the court may order a case
3 transferred after a decline hearing for adult criminal
4 prosecution. There must be a finding the declination
5 would be in the best interests of the juvenile or the
6 public; and the court is required to consider relevant
7 reports, facts, opinions, and arguments presented by the
8 parties and their counsel.

9 Now that seems to sound like almost any other hearing
10 except when you consider what must be considered by the 11 court pursuant to Kent v. United States, which was decided 12 in 1966, and has been elaborated upon by our courts in 13 these hearings. If anyone here looks at the record of the 14 decline hearing, you will know how extensive it was and 15 what all was gone into. They really are quite protective
16 of the rights of an individual with a presumption that 17 that individual can be as a juvenile rehabilitated and 18 treated within the juvenile system unless certain unique
19 circumstances are present.

20 What is taken into account in some of the factors ^{is} are 21 as follows: The seriousness of the alleged offense and
22 whether protection of the community necessitates
23 prosecution under the adult system. Protection of the 24 community. Do community standards dictate there should be
25 a transfer to adult court? The degree of premeditation,

1 willfulness, violence and aggression involved in the
2 alleged offense. Well, for purposes of this hearing, to
3 me that is not as important as some of the other ones.
4 Whether the alleged offense was against persons or
5 property; greater weight being given to offenses against
6 persons especially if injury resulted. The prosecutive
7 merit of the complaint, the desirability of trial and
8 disposition of the entire offense in one court when
9 defendants or associates are adults. That does not apply
10 here. But the next one is sophistication and maturity of 11 the juvenile determined by consideration of his home,
12 environmental situation, emotional attitudes, and pattern
13 of living, record and previous history as a juvenile and 14 prospects for adequate protection of the public, and 15 likelihood of reasonable rehabilitation of the juvenile 16 through services and facilities currently available to the 17 juvenile court.

18 A decision was made in these cases following an 19 extensive hearing and going into the background of these
20 individuals, particularly related to their sophistication
21 and maturity, and also as to consideration of their
22 emotional attitudes, their patterns of living, their 23 environmental situations. It went into the backgrounds of 24 these two individuals very extensively. Only after that
25 hearing was it determined these people would be

1 transferred to this court, the adult court. They were 2 both about 17, between 17 and 18 at the time of this
3 offense.

4 The court in Thompson did not decide whether 17-year
5 olds or 16-year olds can receive the death penalty, and
6 chose instead to accept certiorari in two separate cases
7 wherein they will decide that issue. I cannot guess as to
8 why the court did that. I think the court had before it
9 the perfect opportunity to make the decision: Do we
10 apply the death penalty to juveniles? The court chose not
11 to. One of the critical reasons, at least I consider that 12 they did not do so, is because it was just about
13 universally agreed, or at least the conclusion was that it
14 was almost universally agreed, anyone who is the age of 15
15 should not receive the death penalty because it is:

16 "...generally abhorrent to the conscience of the 17 community."

18 They were looking at the various legislative
19 enactments, what ages were set for purposes of applying
20 the death penalty, and it seemed to them almost universal
21 throughout the states if you are 15 years of age, you are 22 not going to be executed because you do not have the 23 degree of maturity and sophistication an adult would have.
24 However, it is clear from the opinion they did not decide
25 the issue as to 16- and 17-year olds, and expressly chose

1 not to do so even after being asked to do so.

2 At page 4896 of the opinion the court says:

3 "When we confine our attention to the 18 States that
4 have expressly established a minimum age in their
5 death-penalty statutes, we find that all of them
6 require that the defendant have attained at least the 7 age of 16 at the time of the capital offense."

8 To me it was important to them that someone is at least
9 age 16.

10 An argument has been made that the legislature must
11 set the age and then let the courts act upon that age.
12 But what has happened, in the quote I gave initially at 13 the start of my opinion, is our Supreme Court has said it
14 is up to the judges to make that determination and the 15 U.S. Supreme Court has made the determination for 15-year
16 olds and has decided, no, but did not make the decision as 17 to 16- and 17-year olds. It is up to the courts to render
18 that decision.

19 I do not feel the Thompson opinion is authority for 20 the proposition or can be argued - well, it can be
21 argued - but it is not authority for the proposition that
22 16- and 17-year olds should not receive the death penalty
23 for their actions because it would be cruel and inhuman
24 punishment or cruel punishment. I cannot accept that 25 argument. I realize juveniles, people under the age of 18, are essentially presumed not to have the same

1 culpability as people who are older. I recognize that
2 because the Court recognizes it; however, I believe in
3 looking to Washington, and I am looking to the state of
4 Washington, at what the citizens of this state have
5 determined and what the legislature has determined, that
6 this state feels if, following a proper hearing, a
7 declination hearing, a juvenile has the right
8 sophistication and maturity, they can have such 9 culpability that they can receive the ultimate penalty and
10 that is the death penalty.

11 The death penalty was reinstated due to a public
12 outcry in the state of Washington. To me that speaks very 13 loudly in the state of Washington. That does not seem to 14 be mentioned in the Thompson opinion whether any of these
15 other states had that happen where the death penalty was 16 thrown out, suddenly it is reactivated because the people
17 get upset, and then the legislature acts on it also.

18 Another thing that is important to point out is under
19 the juvenile act -- I thought I had a copy of that here.
20 But under the juvenile code one of the things the state
21 has determined - and I made a copy but I forgot to bring 22 it with me - is juveniles should be more answerable for 23 their offenses. There is to be greater protection for the 24 citizenry from criminal behavior. Juveniles are to be
25 more accountable for their criminal behavior. To me that

1 speaks loudly of what the citizens of this state say. The
2 citizens of this state, through the legislature and
3 through the process of citizen legislation have said, We
4 want the death penalty.

5 Now, the question becomes: Is it required there be a
6 specific age set out? Does Thompson say that? I do not
7 believe that is what Thompson says. I think the state of
8 Washington has clearly said, We have set out the 9 guidelines. If a person goes through the process from 10 juvenile to adult court and all of the background is 11 looked into and he or she is determined to have the
12 sophistication and maturity to stand trial as an adult,
13 more safeguards have been provided, and he or she is then
14 subject to all of the penalties imposed by the statute
15 which they have violated. The penalties in this case are 16 either life without release or parole, or death, depending 17 upon what a jury decides, if the jury decides guilt of 18 aggravated first degree murder. That, of course, is a
19 big hurdle.

20 To me, under these circumstances the public has said
21 if you commit the crime, you shall be punished
22 commensurate with the crime. And when the opinion in 23 Thompson says at 4897 - I read part of that to you
24 earlier - it says:

25 "The road we have traveled during the past four

1 decades - in which thousands of juries have tried
2 murder cases - leads to the unambiguous conclusion
3 that the imposition of the death penalty on a 15-year
4 old offender is now generally abhorrent to the
5 conscience of the community."

6 I can paraphrase and say in light of Forrester, and the
7 other tests as to whether or not the punishment fits the 8 crime, that probably it is now generally abhorrent to the
9 conscience of the community to have two people brutally
10 killed. Although no one has ever said anything about 11 victims in this case and whether or not the rights of 12 victims -- and I don't find anything like that in the 13 Thompson opinion. I think that has something to do with 14 the situation -- our legislature has said, Yes, we are 15 going to protect our citizens and this is the standard way
16 of adopting it. To me that is very important. This is 17 the standard way to adopt it.

18 Consequently, I believe, No. 1, according to
19 article 1, section 14 of the Washington State
20 Constitution, there is no prohibition against asking for
21 the death penalty in a situation involving 16- and 17-year
22 olds herein limited to 17-year olds because they were 17
23 at the time. No. 2, I do not believe the Eighth Amendment
24 of the United States Constitution, applicable to the 25 states through the Fourteenth Amendment, prohibits the death penalty in cases involving 16- and 17-year olds. I

1 look mainly to the state of Washington because I believe
2 Washington has a proper and acceptable procedure. I
3 believe it is distinguishable from the situation in the
4 Oklahoma case. I also look to the federal opinion and I
5 can draw no other conclusion then that when the state asks
6 for and gave notice of the death penalty in this case, it
7 is constitutional.

8 The motion to have the death penalty aspects of this
9 stricken is denied.

10 Now, I do not know if counsel have spoken at all
11 about guidelines as to time limits for pretrial motions or 12 anything, if you had an opportunity to do that.

13 MR. FROST: Yes, Your Honor, I believe we have.

14 First of all, could the Court order that we be 15 provided with a written copy of the Court's oral opinion
16 in this matter?

17 THE COURT: So ordered.

NO. 88-1-00428-1

State's Proposed
FINDINGS OF FACT AND
CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

THIS MATTER having come on before the above-entitled court for hearing on September 8, 1988, on the defense Motion for Dismissal of Plaintiff's Notice of Intent to Seek the Death Penalty; that the defendant was present and represented by his attorneys Chris Tait and Tom Bothwell; the State of Washington being represented by Jeffrey C. Sullivan, Prosecuting Attorney for Yakima County, Washington and by Howard W. Hansen, Deputy Prosecuting Attorney for Yakima County, Washington, and the court having considered the memorandums submitted on this issue in this case as well as previous records made in this case and having heard the arguments of counsel and being fully advised in the premises, the court now makes and enters the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I.

Michael and Dorothy Nickoloff were an elderly couple, 82 and 74 years of age respectfully, who were retired and lived alone in their single family dwelling in rural Yakima County. In the early evening of January 7, 1988, Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff were both brutally murdered in their home, the result of each receiving multiple knife stab wounds. Property was removed from

2 the house at the time of the murders. The Yakima Sheriff's 3 Department investigation of these crimes led to the recovery of 4 the stolen property involved in this case and traced the stolen
5 property to the two co-defendants Russell McNeil and Herbert
6 Rice, Jr. As a result of this Yakima Sheriff's Department
7 investigation, Herbert Rice Jr., and Russell Duane McNeil were 8 each charged with two counts of Aggravated First Degree Murder, 9 one count as a principal and one count as an accomplice to the 10 other co-defendant. Notice that the Prosecuting Attorney would 11 seek the death penalty in each case was also given. Both 12 defendants were approximately 17 and 1/2 years of age at the time 13 these crimes were committed.

14 II.

15 The State of Washington re-instituted the death penalty in 16 1981 as a result of the passage of a referendum by the people of 17 the State of Washington after Washington's previous death penalty 18 statute had been found to be unconstitutional.

19 III.

20 The legislative intent and purpose of the Juvenile Justice
21 Act of 1977 was to make juveniles more accountable for their 22 criminal behavior and to provide greater protection for the 23 citizenry from criminal behavior. See RCW 13.40.010 which is 24 attached hereto and made a part of these findings.

25 IV.

26 A declination hearing was conducted in this case on March 27 11, 1988, under the provisions of RCW 13.40.110 wherein the 28 defendants Herbert Rice, Jr. and Russell Duane McNeil were 29 30

1
2 transferred for prosecution in adult court. See attached
3 Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and Order of Declination
4 which are hereby made a part of these findings.

5 V.

6 The people of the State of Washington have also recently
7 demonstrated through the passage by our State Legislature of 8 various crime victims statutes that the rights of the victims of 9 crime and their survivors shall be protected. See the attached 10 RCW 7.69 which is hereby made a part of these findings which 11 includes the legislative intent that victim's rights be protected 12 as vigorously as that of criminal defendants.

13 Based upon the above Findings of Fact and the court's oral 14 ruling the court now makes and enters the following:

15 CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

16 I.

17 The above-entitled court has jurisdiction over the subject 18 matter and of the defendant herein.

19 II.

20 The Washington State Constitution is not constrained by the 21 Federal Supreme Court's interpretation of the 8th and 14th 22 Amendments to the United States Constitution, in the 23 interpretation of our state's due process and cruel punishment
24 clauses. The Washington Supreme Court has interpreted Article 1
25 Section 14 of our Constitution to provide broader protection.

3 The principles stated in Thompson v. Oklahoma, _____ U.S.
4 _____, 56 LW. 4292, 43 CRrim. LAW Rptr. 3175 dated June 29, 1988, 5 are important and provide an approach to the determination of 6 this case. The Thompson case does not, however, require that a 7 minimum age be set by the legislature in order for juveniles of 8 16 or 17 years of age to be eligible for the death penalty.

9 The specific ruling in Thompson is limited to 15 year olds
10 or younger not being eligible for capital punishment since the 11 court only found that the necessary consensus for determination 12 of cruel and unusual punishment exist for that age group.

13 The Thompson case tells us the categorical prohibition of 14 cruel and unusual punishment has been purposefully left undefined
15 by the framers of our federal constitution so that future
16 generations of judges can decide what is cruel and unusual 17 punishment taking into consideration "evolving standards of 18 decency that mark the progress of a maturing society."

19 IV.

20 The Washington test is ". . . whether, in view of 21 contemporary standards of elemental decency, punishment is of 22 such disproportionate character to the offense as to shock the 23 general conscious and violate principles of fundamental 24 fairness." State v. Forrester, 21 Wn. App. 855, 870, 587 P.2d 25 179 (1978).
26
27
28 29

1
2 v.

3 The declination procedure of a 17 year old juvenile under 4 Washington Law is consistent with the principles of the Thompson
5 case in that it operates from the premise that juveniles are 6 presumed to be less culpable than adults. Further, in order to 7 treat a 17 year old juvenile as an adult, the court must 8 determine, utilizing the "Kent" criteria, that the individual has 9 the proper maturity, and that the alleged criminal acts 10 sufficiently raise issues of public safety and concern that the 11 juvenile system cannot properly deal with, so that the juvenile 12 defendant must be treated as an adult.

13 The record in this case clearly supports the court's 14 previous Order Declining jurisdiction in this case.

15 VI.

16 The passage by the Washington State Legislature of the 17 Juvenile Justice Act of 1977, the re-inactment of the death
18 penalty in this State in 1981 mandated by referendum of the 19 people, and the Victim's Rights Act passed by the Washington
20 State Legislature in 1985 all show that our developing community
21 standard in the area of capital punishment for juveniles is not 22 toward limiting the application of the death penalty for 17 year 23 old juveniles.

24 VII.

25 There is no constitutional prohibition against asking for 26 the death penalty in the case of a 17 year old juvenile defendant 27 since Washington Law has sufficient procedures to protect the 28 rights of the accused.

)
vs.)	FINDINGS OF FACT AND
)	CONCLUSIONS OF LAW AND
RUSSELL DUANE McNEIL,)	ORDER DECLINING JURISDICTION

Defendant.)

THIS MATTER having come on before the above-entitled court for hearing on March 11, 1980, on whether or not the Juvenile Court should decline jurisdiction over the above-named defendant; that the defendant was present and represented by his attorney, Dan Lorello; and the State of Washington being represented by Howard W. Hansen, Deputy Prosecuting Attorney for Yakima County, Washington; testimony and evidence having been presented and received, and the court being fully advised in the premises, the court now makes and enters the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I.

The seriousness of the alleged offense to the community and whether the protection of the community requires waiver.

The defendant, Russell Duane McNeil, has been charged with two counts of Aggravated First Degree Murder, one as a principal and one

1
2 as an Accomplice to his co-defendant, Herbert Rice, Jr. Each charge
3 is the most serious type of criminal offense possible under Washington 4 law.

5 The victims of these crimes, Mike Nickoloff and Dorothy
6 Nickoloff, were an elderly couple, 82 and 74 years of age
7 respectively, who were living alone in their single family home in 8 rural Yakima county. Mr. Nickoloff was quite disabled in that he 9 required a walker in order to move around. Both victims were 10 essentially defenseless to the crimes committed against them. The 11 murder of these two individuals occurred in the early evening of 12 January 7, 1988, in the victims' home as part of a robbery in which 13 property was removed from their home. Since these alleged acts 14 involve crimes against persons and property while situated in their 15 home, they are the most serious type of breach of community safety.

16 II.

17 Whether the alleged offenses were committed in an aggressive,
18 violent, premeditated or willful manner.

19 Autopsy reports, and the testimony of Sheriff deputies at the 20 declination hearing both indicate without question that the victims
21 both met a most aggressive and violent death. Both victims died as a 22 result of multiple stab wounds and both appeared to have received 23 defensive wounds to their hands and arms as they were being attacked.
24 Mr. Nickoloff was killed as he sat in his chair in the living room of 25 their home receiving stab wounds to the face, neck and chest. Mrs.
26 Dorothy Nickoloff was killed in the kitchen of their home receiving 27 numerous stab wounds to the back as she lay on the floor. Both 28
29 30

2 victims received so many stab wounds that it is not possible to 3 determine the actual number of wounds received by each individual.

4 This indicates a sociopathic or psychopathic disorder
5 by the perpetrator, whoever it may be. L005

6 The alleged offense was against persons or against property.

7 The victims, Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff, were killed as a result
8 of multiple stab wounds and property, that is, two television sets
9 were taken from their home as part of this crime. The property taken 10 has since been recovered and directly traced back to the two co-11 defendants in this case.

12 IV.

13 was The ^{prosecutive} ~~prospective~~ merit of the complaint whether there is evidence 14 on which a grand jury may be expected to return an indictment.

15 The information in this case accuses each defendant of murdering 16 one victim himself and acting as an accomplice to the other murder by 17 his co-defendant. The crimes were discovered very shortly after their 18 occurrence so that the Yakima County Sheriff's Department was able to 19 adequately preserve available evidence. The property stolen from the 20 victims' house during these crimes has been recovered and has been 21 directly traced back to the two co-defendants. Both defendants have 22 given the police statements implicating themselves in the crimes. The 23 allegations of these cases therefore appear to be highly meritorious.
24
25
26
27
28
29 30

1
2 V.

3 The desirability of trial and disposition of the offense in one
4 court when the juvenile's associates in the alleged offense are 5 adults.

6 This criteria appears not be appropriate as both co-defendants
7 charged in this matter are juvenile and are both facing declination
8 hearing at this time.

9 VI.

10 Sophistication and maturity of the juvenile considering his home
11 environment, emotional attitude and pattern of living.

12 Russell McNeil was born on August 15, 1970, and is approximately 13 17 and a half years of age. He has lived with one of his parents
14 until approximately November of 1987. At that time, he began living 15 with his 20 year old brother in Wapato, Washington, and was attending 16 Pace Alternative High School. There is no evidence that indicates 17 Russell McNeil suffers from any type of mental retardation.

18 Mr. McNeil has worked as a ranch hand and in a firewood business 19 for at least the last two years. Mr. McNeil's living situation was 20 independent and as an adult while working in the firewood splitting 21 forest camp and was considered a mature, dependable worker when he 22 worked as a ranch hand. Mr. McNeil's employers, teachers, and 23 associates all consider him to be a mature individual with a good deal 24 of sophistication and who is articulate and in control of himself.

25 VII.

26 Previous juvenile criminal history.
27
28
29 30

1
2 Russell McNeil has previously been convicted of Second Degree
3 Burglary in Juvenile Court and has had one diversion agreement. Mr.
4 McNeil's previous criminal history is not considered remarkable.

5 VIII.

6 Prospects for adequate protection of the public and adequacy of 7 the Juvenile Court system in this case.

8 The standard range for First Degree Murder in Juvenile Court for 9 Russell McNeil as a 17 and a half year old is 180 to 224 weeks of 10 confinement. Juvenile Court only has jurisdiction over an individual 11 until age 21. Therefore the maximum period of supervision will be 12 approximately 160 weeks of confinement. Additionally, it appears 13 theoretically possible that after serving 60% of this sentence and 14 assuming that the defendant has no problems while in the juvenile 15 institution, he could be considered for some kind of a community 16 residential placement for the last year of his confinement. Clearly, 17 under either one of these possibilities, the time of confinement of 18 the defendant is grossly insufficient considering the interests of 19 protecting the public given the very serious nature of the crimes 20 charged. There is insufficient time for rehabilitation. was

21 Based upon the above findings of fact, and the Court's conclusion
22 enters the following:

23
24 CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

25 I.

26 The above entitled court has jurisdiction of the subject matter 27 and of the juvenile.
28
29 30

2 II.

3 Declination of Juvenile Court jurisdiction over this juvenile is 4 in the best interest of the public.

5 III.

6 An Order Permanently Declining Juvenile Court Jurisdiction and 7 Transferring the Juvenile For Adult Criminal Prosecution should be 8 entered.

9 Based upon the above Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law;
10 IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED that juvenile 11 jurisdiction over Russell Duane McNeil is permanently declined and the 12 defendant shall be immediately transferred to the Yakima County Jail
13 for incarceration until further adult proceedings in Yakima County
14 Superior Court. Bail shall be maintained in the amount of ~~$300,000.00~~
15 until further proceedings in adult court if appropriate. $250,000.00 WTS

13.40.450 Chapters 13.04 and 13.40 RCW as exclusive authority for adjudication and disposition of juvenile offenders.

1977 ex.s. c-291: "(1) There is appropriated for the period July 1, 1978, to June 30, 1979, from the general fund nine hundred eighty-three thousand six hundred dollars to be allocated to counties for the cost of operating diversion units as required by this chapter.

(2) The secretary shall administer the funds and shall promulgate, pursuant to chapter 34.04 RCW, rules establishing a planning process and standards which meet the intent of this chapter. The secretary shall also monitor and evaluate, against established standards, all programs and services funded by this appropriation.

(3) The total sum shall be allocated by the secretary to the counties. Diversion units funded by this section shall be administered and operated separately from the court. Provided, That counties of classes other than AA and A may request for an exemption from this requirement. The secretary may grant such exemption if it is clearly demonstrated that resources do not exist nor can be established in such county to operate diversion units separately from the court.

(4) In meeting the requirements of this chapter, there shall be a maintenance of effort whereby counties shall exhaust existing resources prior to the utilization of funds appropriated by this section.

(5) It is the intent of the legislature that these funds shall be the maximum amount necessary to meet the requirement of this chapter for the stated period. Courts shall be required to provide diversion programs and services to the extent made possible by available sources. In addressing diverted youths, a resource priority continuum shall be developed whereby the highest priority in resource allocation shall be given to diverted youths who have inflicted bodily harm while the lowest priority shall be given to diverting youths who have committed victimless crimes or minor property offenses." [1977 ex.s. c 291 § 79.]

13.40.010 Short title—Legislative intent—Chapter purpose. (1) This chapter shall be known and cited as the Juvenile Justice Act of 1977.

(2) It is the intent of the legislature that a system capable of having primary responsibility for, being accountable for, and responding to the needs of youthful offenders, as defined by this chapter, be established. It is the further intent of the legislature that youth, in turn, be held accountable for their offenses and that both communities and the juvenile courts carry out their functions consistent with this intent. To effectuate these policies, it shall be the purpose of this chapter to:

- (a) Protect the citizenry from criminal behavior;
- (b) Provide for determining whether accused juveniles have committed offenses as defined by this chapter;

CRIME VICTIMS, SURVIVORS, AND WITNESSES

Sections

7.69.010	Intent.
7.69.020	Definitions.
7.69.030	Rights of victims, survivors, and witnesses.
7.69.040	Representation of incapacitated or incompetent victim.
7.69.050	Construction of chapter—Other remedies or defenses.

7.69.010 Intent. In recognition of the severe and detrimental impact of crime on victims, survivors of victims, and witnesses of crime and the civic and moral duty of victims, survivors of victims, and witnesses of crimes to fully and voluntarily cooperate with law enforcement and prosecutorial agencies, and in further recognition of the continuing importance of such citizen cooperation to state and local law enforcement efforts and the general effectiveness and well-being of the criminal justice system of this state, the legislature declares its intent, in this chapter, to grant to the victims of crime and the survivors of such victims a significant role in the criminal justice system. The legislature further intends to ensure that all victims and witnesses of

[Title 7 RCW—p 52]

crime are treated with dignity, respect, courtesy, and sensitivity; and that the rights extended in this chapter to victims, survivors of victims, and witnesses of crime are honored and protected by law enforcement agencies, prosecutors, and judges in a manner no less vigorous than the protections afforded criminal defendants. [1985 c 443 § 1; 1981 c 145 § 1.]

Severability—1985 c 443: "If any provision of this act or its application to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the act or the application of the provision to other persons or circumstances is not affected." [1985 c 443 § 27.]

Effective date—1985 c 443: "This act is necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, and safety, the support of the state government and its existing public institutions, and shall take effect on July 1, 1985." [1985 c 443 § 28.]

7.69.020 Definitions. Unless the context clearly requires otherwise, the definitions in this section apply throughout this chapter.

(1) "Crime" means an act punishable as a felony, gross misdemeanor, or misdemeanor under the laws of this state or equivalent federal or local law.

(2) "Survivor" or "survivors" of a victim of crime means a spouse, child, parent, legal guardian, sibling, or grandparent. If there is more than one survivor of a victim of crime, one survivor shall be designated by the prosecutor to represent all survivors for purposes of providing the notice to survivors required by this chapter.

(3) "Victim" means a person against whom a crime has been committed or the representative of a person against whom a crime has been committed.

(4) "Victim impact statement" means a statement submitted to the court by the victim or a survivor, individually or with the assistance of the prosecuting attorney if assistance is requested by the victim or survivor, which may include but is not limited to information assessing the financial, medical, social, and psychological impact of the offense upon the victim or survivors.

(5) "Witness" means a person who has been or is expected to be summoned to testify for the prosecution in a criminal action, or who by reason of having relevant information is subject to call or likely to be called as a witness for the prosecution, whether or not an action or proceeding has been commenced. [1985 c 443 § 2; 1981 c 145 § 2.]

Severability—Effective date—1985 c 443: See notes following RCW 7.69.010.

7.69.030 Rights of victims, survivors, and witnesses. There shall be a reasonable effort made to ensure that victims, survivors of victims, and witnesses of crimes have the following rights:

(1) To be informed by local law enforcement agencies or the prosecuting attorney of the final disposition of the case in which the victim, survivor, or witness is involved;

(2) To be notified by the party who issued the subpoena that a court proceeding to which they have been subpoenaed will not occur as scheduled, in order to save the person an unnecessary trip to court;

(3) To receive protection from harm and threats of harm arising out of cooperation with law enforcement and prosecution efforts, and to be provided with information as to the level of protection available;

(4) To be informed of the procedure to be followed to apply for and receive any witness fees to which they are entitled;

(5) To be provided, whenever practical, a secure waiting area during court proceedings that does not require them to be in close proximity to defendants and families or friends of defendants;

(6) To have any stolen or other personal property expeditiously returned by law enforcement agencies or the superior court when no longer needed as evidence. When feasible, all such property, except weapons, currency, contraband, property subject to evidentiary analysis, and property of which ownership is disputed, shall be photographed and returned to the owner within ten days of being taken;

(7) To be provided with appropriate employer intercession services to ensure that employers of victims, survivors of victims, and witnesses of crime will cooperate with the criminal justice process in order to minimize an employee's loss of pay and other benefits resulting from court appearance;

(8) To access to immediate medical assistance and not to be detained for an unreasonable length of time by a law enforcement agency before having such assistance administered. However, an employee of the law enforcement agency may, if necessary, accompany the person to a medical facility to question the person about the criminal incident if the questioning does not hinder the administration of medical assistance;

(9) With respect to victims and survivors of victims, to be physically present in court during trial, or if subpoenaed to testify, to be scheduled as early as practical in the proceedings in order to be physically present during trial after testifying and not to be excluded solely because they have testified;

(10) With respect to victims and survivors of victims, to be informed by the prosecuting attorney of the date, time, and place of the trial and of the sentencing hearing for felony convictions upon request by a victim or survivor;

(11) To submit a victim impact statement or report to the court, with the assistance of the prosecuting attorney if requested, which shall be included in all presentence reports and permanently included in the files and records accompanying the offender committed to the custody of a state agency or institution;

(12) With respect to victims and survivors of victims, to present a statement personally or by representation, at the sentencing hearing for felony convictions; and

(13) With respect to victims and survivors of victims, to entry of an order of restitution by the court in all felony cases, even when the offender is sentenced to confinement, unless extraordinary circumstances exist which make restitution inappropriate in the court's judgment. [1985 c 443 § 3; 1981 c 145 § 3.]

Severability—Effective date—1985 c 443: See notes following RCW 7.69.010.

Child victims and witnesses, additional rights: Chapter 7.69A RCW.

(1987 Ed.)

7.69.040 Representation of incapacitated or incompetent victim. For purposes of this chapter, a victim who is incapacitated or otherwise incompetent shall be represented by a parent or present legal guardian, or if none exists, by a representative designated by the prosecuting attorney without court appointment or legal guardianship proceedings. Any victim may designate another person as the victim's representative for purposes of the rights enumerated in RCW 7.69.030. [1985 c 443 § 4.]

Severability—Effective date—1985 c 443: See notes following RCW 7.69.010.

7.69.050 Construction of chapter—Other remedies or defenses. Nothing contained in this chapter may be construed to provide grounds for error in favor of a criminal defendant in a criminal proceeding, nor may anything in this chapter be construed to grant a new cause of action or remedy against the state, its political subdivisions, law enforcement agencies, or prosecuting attorneys. The failure of a person to make a reasonable effort to ensure that victims, survivors, and witnesses under this chapter have the rights enumerated in RCW 7.69.030 shall not result in civil liability against that person. This chapter does not limit other civil remedies or defenses of the offender or the victim or survivors of the victim. [1985 c 443 § 5.]

Severability—Effective date—1985 c 443: See notes following RCW 7.69.010.

The legislature recognizes that it is important that child victims and child witnesses of crime cooperate with law enforcement and prosecutorial agencies and that their assistance contributes to state and local enforcement efforts and the general effectiveness of the criminal justice system of this state. Therefore, it is the intent of the legislature by means of this chapter, to insure that all child victims and witnesses of crime are treated with the sensitivity, courtesy, and special care that must be afforded to each child victim of crime and that their rights be protected by law enforcement agencies, prosecutors, and judges in a manner no less vigorous than the protection afforded the adult victim, witness, or criminal defendant. My name is Russell McNeil. I am currently being held in the Yakima County Jail. I am charged with one count of aggravated first degree murder, and one count of being an accomplice to aggravated first degree murder. The prosecutor has requested the death penalty for both crimes. My attorneys are Chris Tait and Tom Bothwell.

I was 17 years old on January 7, 1988, which is the date on which these crimes were allegedly committed. I turned 18 on August 13, 1988.

By order entered March 15, 1988, the Juvenile Court in Yakima County declined jurisdiction in my case, and I was remanded to adult court.

I was arrested on January 27, 1988, and have been in custody ever since that date.

My attorneys filed and argued a motion to dismiss the death penalty notice because juveniles are not eligible to receive the death penalty in Washington. That motion was denied. We are now going to file an appeal of that ruling to the Washington Supreme Court. I know that process will be lengthy, and that we

FACTS

Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff were an elderly couple, 82 and 74 years of age respectively, who were retired and lived alone in their single family dwelling in rural Yakima County. In the early evening of January 7, 1988, Mike and Dorothy Nickoloff were both brutally murdered in their home, the result of each receiving multiple knife stab wounds. Property was removed from the house at the time of the murders. Yakima Sheriff's Department investigation of these crimes recovered the stolen property involved in this case and traced the stolen property to the two co-defendants Russell McNeil and Herbert Rice, Jr. Both co-defendants gave the police statements concerning their involvement in the crimes. Both defendants were approximately 17 1/2 years of age at the times these crimes were committed.

2 ARGUMENT

3 The defense requests the court to declare that the 4 Washington State Death Penalty Statutes are unconstitutional as 5 applied to juvenile offenders.

6 The constitutionality of the Washington State Death Penalty
7 Statutes have been reviewed on numerous occasions since enacted
8 in its latest form in 1981. In each case, the Washington State
9 Supreme Court has upheld its constitutionality from the numerous 10 methods of attack, with some qualifications concerning the 11 penalty phase of the trial. The following Washington Supreme 12 Court cases address the various attacks on the constitutionality
13 of the Death Penalty Statutes and with those qualifications 14 referred to above, uphold their validity:

15 State v. Bartholomew, I
16 98 Wn.2d 173, 654 P.2d 1170 (1982)

17 State v. Bartholomew, II
18 101 Wn.2d 631, 683 P.2d 1079 (1984)

19 State v. Rupe
20 101 Wn.2d 664, 683 P.2d 571 (1984)

21 State v. Dictado
22 102 Wn.2d 277, 607 P.2d 172 (1984)

23 State v. Campbell
24 103 Wn.2d 1, 691 P.2d 929 (1984)

25 State v. Jeffries
26 105 Wn.2d 398, 717 P.2d 722 (1986)

27 State v. Mak
28 105 Wn.2d 692, 718 P.2d 407 (1986)

29 State v. Harris
30 106 Wn.2d 784, 725 P.2d 975 (1986)

The State has not detailed the holdings in the above cases since the defense in the present case has not mounted any

1
2 related arguments presented in those cases in its motion to 3 dismiss the death penalty aspects of this case. Instead, the 4 defense argues that the most recent federal Supreme Court case of 5 Thompson v. Oklahoma, _____ U.S. _____, 56 LW. 4892, 43 Crim.
6 Law Rptr. 3175, dated June 29, 1988, provides a new approach for 7 the Washington courts to declare our death penalty statute
8 unconstitutional for all juveniles, that is, individuals less 9 than eighteen years of age.

10 In the Thompson case the defendant was fifteen years old at 11 the time he participated in a murder for which he was found
12 guilty and sentenced to death under Oklahoma state law.

13 Justice Stevens in the opening of his opinion briefly
14 discussed the basis of review of the Federal Supreme Court on the 15 issue of whether the death penalty is cruel and unusual 16 punishment for a fifteen year old defendant:

17 The authors of the Eighth Amendment drafted 18 a categorical prohibition against the infliction of cruel and unusual punishments, but 19 they made no attempt to define the contours of that category. They delegated that task
20 to future generations of judges who have been guided by the 'evolving standards of decency 21 that mark the progress of a maturing society.'
22 Trop v. Dulles, 356 U.S. 86, 101 (1958)
23 (plurality opinion) (Warren, C. J.). In performing that task the Court has reviewed the 24 work product of state legislatures and sentencing juries, and has carefully considered the reasons
25 why a civilized society may accept or reject the death penalty in certain types of cases.

26 Justice Stevens is careful to limit his analysis to that of 27 a fifteen year old when he states in subsection (III) of his 28 Opinion:
29 30

1
2 "The line between childhood and adulthood is 3 drawn in different ways by various States.
4 There is, however, complete or near unanimity
5 among all 50 States and the District of 6 Columbia in treating a person under 16 years
7 of age as anything but a 'child'

8 . . .

9 All of this legislation is consistent with 10 the experience of mankind, as well as the 11 long history of our law that the normal 12 fifteen year old is not prepared to assume 13 the full responsibilities of an adult."

14 Justice Steven's plurality opinion then points out that of 15 the fifty states and the District of Columbia, fourteen states do
16 not authorize capital punishment at all, nineteen states
17 (including Washington) have capital punishment but do not specify
18 a minimum age to impose such punishment, and of the eighteen
19 remaining states which have established minimum ages, twelve 20 states appear to have set the minimum age at eighteen and the 21 remaining six at either sixteen or seventeen years of age.

22 Justice Stevens' decision seems to be based mostly upon the 23 court's belief that, in general, juveniles are less culpable than 24 adults who commit similar crimes. As the court stated in 25 subsection IV of its opinion:

26 "It is generally agreed 'that punishment should be 27 directly related to the personal culpability of 28 the criminal defendant'." California v. Brown, 29 U. S. _____, _____ (1987) (O'Connor, J., con-30 curring). There is also broad agreement on the proposition that adolescents as a class are less mature and responsible than adults. We stressed this difference in explaining the importance of treating the defendant's youth as a mitigating factor in capital cases:

'But youth is more than a chronological fact. It is a time and condition of life when a person may 1

2 be most susceptible to influence and
3 to psychological damage. Our history
4 is replete with laws and judicial 5 recognition that minors, especially
6 in their earlier years, generally
7 are less mature and responsible than 8 adults. Particulary 'during the 9 formative years of childhood and 10 adolescence, minors often lack the 11 experience, perspective, and judgment'
12 expected of adults. Bellotti v. Baird,
13 443 U.S. 622, 635 (1979)." Eddings v.
14 Oklahoma, 455 U.S., at 115-116 (foot-15 notes omitted).

16
17 To add further emphasis to the special mitigating 18 force of youth, Justice Powell quoted the follow-
19 ing passage from the 1978 Report of the Twentieth 20 Century Fund Task Force on Sentencing Policy
21 Toward Young Offenders:

22 'Adolescents, particularly in the early
23 and middle teen years, are more vulnerable,
24 more impulsive, and less self-disciplined
25 than adults. Crimes committed by youths 26 may be just as harmful to victims as those 27 committed by older persons, but they deserve 28 less punishment because adolescents may have 29 less capacity to control their conduct and 30 to think in long-range terms than adults.
Moreover, youth crime as such is not exclusively the offender's fault; offenses by the young also represent a failure of family, school, and the social system, which share responsibility for the development of America's youth.'

1 The State submits that Justice Stevens argument against the 2 deterence value of capital punishment for juveniles is less
3 persuasive and seems to be a simple statement of his personal 4 belief on the subject.

5 Once again, it should be reiterated that the court strictly 6 limited its decision to defendants less than sixteen years of 7 age. This was emphasized by the court's closing comments when it
8 states in subsection VI of its opinion:

1
2 "Petitioner's counsel and various amici curiae
3 have asked us to 'draw a line' that would pro-4 hibit the execution of any person who was under 5 the age of 18 at the time of the offense. Our 6 task today, however, is to decide the case before 7 us; we do so by concluding that the Eighth and 8 Fourteenth Amendments prohibit the execution of 9 a person who was under 16 years of age at the time
10 of his or her offense."

11 The occurring opinion of Justice Sandra Day O'Connor also 12 agreed that capital punishment under the facts of this case is 13 cruel and unusual punishment i.e. for a juvenile under 16 years 14 of age. Justice O'Connors' concurring opinion appears to be 15 based upon her concern that the State of Okalahoma (and by 16 inference, all states who do not have a set minimum age to be 17 capital punishment eligible) may not have given its capital
18 punishment scheme proper consideration concerning establishment 19 of a minimum age that juvenile defendants are eligible for the 20 death penalty.

21 The State submits that the analysis of the plurality opinion
22 and the concurring opinion in the Thompson case are not 23 applicable to the facts of our case under the Washington Death
24 Penalty statutes and Washington Juvenile Code.

25 The actual written text of the plurality opinion limits its 26 analysis and decision to those defendants who are less than 16
27 years of age at the time they commit their crime. The entire 28 thrust of this opinion rests on the discernable difference in 29 culpability between 15 year olds and adults for the same criminal 30 act based upon perceived standards of decency in American society. Commonsense dictates that that discernable difference fades into obscurity as an individual approaches the age of 18.

1
2 It should be noted parenthetically that no party to this case has 3 attacked the constitutionality of capital punishment for adults,
4 particularly 18 year old adults, under Washington State Law.

5 Further, Washington State's Juvenile Code and its 6 declination procedure specifically address the concerns of the 7 plurality opinion that juveniles should not be treated the same
8 as adults because of their lack of maturity and development 9 particularly when dealing with a 17 year old juvenile as in our 10 case. This concern is addressed by the Juvenile Court in the 11 declination process, when the court considers the "Kent criteria" 12 on determining whether the defendant functions as an adult and 13 can be best dealt with as an adult in the criminal justice 14 system.

15 The Washington Juvenile Code also addresses Justice 16 O'Connor's concern that due consideration be given for the 17 setting of a minimum age to be eligible for capital punishment.
18 First, we should be reminded that our Juvenile Code, RCW 13.40
19 known as the Juvenile Justice Act of 1977 was passed with the 20 specific purpose of making juveniles more accountable for their 21 crimes. RCW 13.40.010 states the legislative purpose of the act:

22 "(1) This chapter shall be known and 23 cited as the Juvenile Justice Act of 1977.

24 (2) It is the intent of the legislature
25 that a system capable of having primary 26 responsibility for, being accountable for,
27 and responding to the needs of youthful 28 offenders, as defined by this chapter, be 29 established. It is the further intent
30 of the legislature that youth, in turn, be held accountable for their offenses and that both communities and the juvenile courts carry out their functions consis-

1
2 tent with this intent. To effectuate
3 these policies, it shall be the purpose
4 of this chapter to:

5 (a) Protect the citizenry from 6 criminal behavior;

7 (b) Provide for determining whether
8 accused juveniles have committed offenses
9 as defined by this chapter;

10 (c) Make the juvenile offender ac-
11 countable for his or her criminal behavior;

12 (d) Provide for punishment commen-
13 surate with the age, crime, and criminal
14 history of the juvenile offender;

15 (e) Provide due process for juve-
16 niles alleged to have committed an offense;

17 (f) Provide necessary treatment,
18 supervision, and custody for juvenile 19 offenders;

20 (g) Provide for the handling of 21 juvenile offenders by communities when-
22 ever consistent with public safety;

23 (h) Provide for restitution to 24 victims of crime;

25 (i) Develop effective standards and
26 goals for the operation, funding, and eval-27 uation of all components of the juvenile 28 justice system and related services at the 29 state and local levels; and 30 (j) Provide for a clear policy to determine what types of offenders shall receive punishment, treatment, or both, and to determine the jurisdictional limitations of the courts, institutions, and community services. [1977 ex.s. c 291 Sec. 55.]

The declination procedure contained in RCW 13.40.110 specifically requires a declination hearing unless waived by all parties for 16 or 17 year olds who are alleged to have committed or attempted to commit a Class A felony. Although not couched in 1

2 terms of a minimum age to be eligible for capital punishment, the 3 issue of when a defendant must be formally considered for adult
4 prosecution for Class A felony has been set at 16 years of age.

5 The State submits that if the defendants in this case were 6 less than 16 years of age, we may face the same concern expressed 7 by Justice Sandra Day O'Connor's concurring opinion since our 8 declination process also does not specifically address what 9 treatment should be given to individuals less than 16 years of 10 age for Class A felonies. Our declination procedure for such 11 individuals is optional for Class A felonies so that the argument
12 could be made that our legislature also has not adequately 13 addressed the issue of capital punishment eligibility for those 14 offenders less than 16 years of age.

15 But, our declination procedure does show that our 16 legislature has properly considered the eligibilty of 16 and 17
17 year olds for such crimes and has stated that they must be 18 considered for declination and treatment as adults.

19 Consistent with that approach is the fact that Justice
20 O'Connor's opinion did not call into question the Oklahoma 21 procedures for declination of 16 and 17 year olds subject to 22 capital punishment, but only for those less than 16 years old who 23 were not specifically considered in their juvenile declination
24 procedure.

25 The State therefore argues that she has not indicated that 26 she would register the same concerns for 16 and 17 year olds
27 under Oklahoma law, and by inference, under our declination 28 procedures. And, in fact, it suggests that she would allow such 29 30

2 a procedure since the legislature has clearly considered the 3 matter and has made 16 and 17 year olds eligible for capital
4 punishment under appropriate circumstances.
5

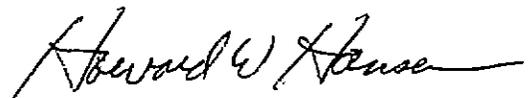

6 CONCLUSION

7 It is therefore respectfully requested that the court uphold 8 the Washington State Laws for capital punishment as it applies to 9 juveniles under the facts alleged in the present case.

10 DATED this 10 day of August, 1988.

deposes and states:

1. I am one of the attorneys appointed by the Court to represent Defendant Russell Duane McNeil.

2. I have previously met in Judge F. James Gavin's chamber regarding the issue of the confusion and the high level of medical terminology, which will need expert clarification in regard to the crime/lab reports on the evidence taken at the scene of the crime for which the Defendant herein is accused of committing. I requested his advice on the issuance of hiring a Forensic Expert Witness for the purposes of clarification and proper defense of the Defendant herein. Judge F. James Gavin agreed that the hiring of a Forensic Expert in this matter was appropriate and necessary, and further that such expert witness fees should, therefore, be paid by public funds.

3. I have contacted Mr. Raymond Davis of the Quantum
Analytical Company, at 1000 8th Avenue, Suite 705, Seattle, WA

on behalf of the Defendant, Russell Duane McNeil. Mr. Davis' hourly rate is $70.00 per hour for pre-trial out-of court time.

16)	PLAINTIFF'S REQUEST FOR
17	Defendant.)	DEATH PENALTY

COMES NOW the above-named Defendant, RUSSELL DUANE McNEIL, by and through his attorneys, and moves this Court to dismiss the Plaintiff's request for the death penalty.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Defendant asks this Court to declare that it is unconstitutional and otherwise illegal to impose the death penalty upon a juvenile offender, particularly in the absence of express statutory authorization of the death penalty for juvenile offenders. (Defendant Russell McNeil was 17 years old at the time of the crimes alleged herein.)

Most of the legal principles upon which Defendant's motion is based were enunciated by the plurality and concurring opinions in the very recent decision of the United States Supreme Court, Thompson v. Oklahoma, _____ U.S. _____, 56 L.W. 4892

(June 29, 1988, copy appended). Thompson specifically holds that no 15-year-old offender may receive the death penalty.

The day following its decision in Thompson, the United States Supreme Court granted certiorari in two cases presenting the following issues, respectively:

Does execution of accused under age of 18 at time of the offense violate evolving standards of decency, and is it cruel and unusual punishment under Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments?

Does infliction of death penalty on person who is 16 at time crime was committed constitute cruel and unusual punishment prohibited by Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments?

High v. Zant, 43 CrL 4084 (No. 87-5666); Wilkins v. Missouri, 43 CrL 4084 (No. 87-6026). (Summaries of grants of certiorari appended hereto.)

There are several other appendices to this memorandum, including briefs submitted to the U.S. Supreme Court by the parties and amici in Thompson, as well as portions of the Petition for Certiorari in Wilkins, plus a law review article cited several times in the Thompson decision: Streib, "Death Penalty for Children: The American Experience with Capital Punishment for Crimes Committed While Under Age Eighteen," 36 Ok.L.Rev. 613 (1983) and two other articles by Professor Streib. Defendant McNeil offers these materials, frankly, because they most articulately present his various arguments. Defendant asks this Court to consider these materials and to give him the benefit of the arguments presented therein, which may be summarized as follows:

- (1) The execution of a youth who was under the age of eighteen at the time of the offense would violate evolving standards of decency.

(a) In most states (including Washington) and for most purposes, age eighteen marks the boundary between childhood and adult responsibilities.

(b) The reasons for the boundary line: Adolescents lack the maturity, experience, moral judgment and sophistication of adults. Child development experts agree that adolescence is a transitional period in which young people are still developing the cognitive ability, judgment and fully formed identity or character of adults.

(c) The reasons for treating juveniles differently from adults apply with special force here: The developmental differences between adolescents and adults diminish the state's interest in inflicting the death penalty on minors.

(i) The death penalty does not deter youths from committing capital offenses.

(ii) Retribution is not a legitimate penological purpose with respect to adolescents.

(2) Executing juvenile offenders violates the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution, particularly in the absence of the legislation expressly authorizing capital punishment for juveniles.

ARGUMENT

I. THE REASONING IN THOMPSON APPLIES WITH EQUAL FORCE TO 17-YEAR-OLDS.

In deciding whether the age of the defendant Thompson - specifically the fact that he was 15 years old at the time of his offense - was "a sufficient reason for denying the state the power to sentence him to death," the U.S. Supreme Court plurality adhered to the following analysis:

"[W]e first review relevant legislative enactments, then refer to jury determinations, and finally explain why these indicators of contemporary standards of decency confirm our judgment that such a young person is not capable of acting with the degree of culpability that can justify the ultimate penalty.

Thompson v. Oklahoma, supra, 56 LW at 4894 (footnotes omitted).

(1) Legislative Enactments:

The Thompson plurality first summarizes the numerous examples in law illustrating that "the experience of mankind, as well as the long history of our law, recognize that there are differences which must be accommodated in determining the rights and duties of children as compared with those of adults." Id., at 4894.

The court notes, for example, that Oklahoma recognizes this distinction in numerous statutes, e.g., forbidding minors the right to vote, sit on a jury, marry without parental consent, or purchase alcohol or cigarettes.

Similarly, the State of Washington has numerous statutes recognizing basic distinctions between minors and adults. Attaining the age of 18 in our state is the express statutory condition precedent to such rights or privileges as: voting (RCW 26.28.015); marrying without either parental consent or court approval (RCW 26.04.010 and 26.28.215); drafting a Last Will (RCW 11.12.010); authorizing an abortion (RCW 9.02.070); purchasing "erotic" material (RCW 9.68.080); owning a motor vehicle (RCW 46.12.250); suing (or being sued) without a guardian ad litem (RCW 26.28.015); becoming a notary public (RCW 42.44.020) or securing occupations such as insurance adjustor (RCW 48.17.380); or even for such acts as entering into a contract to play baseball (RCW 67.04.090); donating blood (RCW 70.01.020); obtaining a license or permit to discharge fireworks (RCW 70.77.255); authorizing an

3 autopsy (RCW 68.50.101) or adopting a child (RCW 26.33.140). See 4 also, generally, RCW 26.28.010, which specifies 18 as the age of 5 majority.
6

7 Continuing its review of the legislation, Thompson cites
8 the Oklahoma statutory juvenile justice system, including a 9 specific statute providing that 16- or 17-year-olds charged with 10 murder and other serious felonies shall be considered as adults, 11 and other statutes providing a special "certification" procedure 12 whereby the juvenile system may determine that a person less than 13 16 may be tried as an adult for such crimes as murder. Id., at 14 4893-4894.
15

16 Washington, too, has legislatively created a distinct 17 juvenile justice system, RCW 13.40, including a declination
18 procedure whereby juvenile court may transfer a juvenile for adult 19 criminal prosecution, RCW 13.34.110. Washington's declination 20 statute authorizes transfer if the juvenile is 16 or 17 and the 21 alleged crime is a Class A felony or an attempt to commit a Class 22 A felony, or if the juvenile is 17 and the alleged crime is 23 second-degree assault, kidnapping, rape or robbery, or first-24 degree extortion, or indecent liberties. RCW 13.40.110(a) and 25 (b).
26

27 The plurality in Thompson cites those various age-28 distinguishing statutes for the proposition that "[a]ll of this 29 legislation is consistent with the experience of mankind, as well
30 as the history of the law, that the normal 15-year-old is not 31 prepared to assume the full responsibilities of an adult." Id., at 32 4895 (footnote omitted). Because these statutes, including the 33 multitude here in Washington, draw the line at 18 years, rather 34 than somewhere between 15 and 17, it should similarly be said that 35 the legislation, experiences of mankind, and long history of the 36 law recognize that 17-year-olds are similarly not prepared to assume the full responsibilities of an adult.

After further reviewing the common tradition of American legislatures to "draw the line," the Thompson plurality cites additional numerous organizations - national and international - as well as other countries, as follows:

The conclusion that it would offend civilized standards of decency to execute a person who was less than 16 years old at the time of his or her offense is consistent with the views that have been expressed by respected professional organizations, by other nations that share our Anglo-American heritage, and by leading members of the Western European community. Thus, the American Bar Association and the American Law Institute have formally expressed their opposition to the death penalty for juveniles. Although the death penalty has not been entirely abolished in New Zealand (it has been abolished in Australia, except in the State of New South Wales, where it is available for treason and piracy), in neither of those countries may a juvenile be executed. The death penalty has been abolished in West Germany, France, Portugal, The Netherlands, and all of the Scandinavian countries, and is available only for exceptional crimes such as treason in Canada, Italy, Spain, and Switzerland. Juvenile executions are also prohibited in the Soviet Union.

Id., at 4903 (footnotes omitted). None of these organizations or countries draw the line between 15- and 17-year olds: all either abolish the death penalty completely or draw the line at 18.

Summarizing the types of legislative enactments considered by the Thompson plurality: The legislation taken as a whole offers no meaningful basis for drawing the line somewhere between 15- and 17-year-olds. Rather, this legislative analysis supports prohibiting the death penalty against any juvenile offender.

(2) Jury Determinations:

"The second societal factor the court has examined in determining the acceptability of capital punishment to the American sensibility is the behavior of juries." Thompson, supra, 56 LW at 4896-7.

For its review of the incidence of execution of persons who were under the age of 16, the Thompson court relies heavily upon the research of Professor Streib. Id., at 4897. (Articles attached.)

No juveniles have been executed in the State of Washington pursuant to RCW 10.95, the current death penalty statute (enacted in 1981). According to the undersigned's research, only two juvenile offenders have been executed by this State (in the years 1906 and 1932).

Thompson's plurality reviews the statistics and concludes that the five persons who were 16-year-old offenders in the United States sentenced to death between 1982 and 1986 "received sentences that are 'cruel and unusual in the same way that being struck by lightning is cruel and unusual.'" Id., at 4897, quoting Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 239, 309 (Stewart, J., concurring). The statistics (attached) concerning the incidence of death penalty for any-aged juveniles are no less compelling towards the conclusion that such sentences for 17-year-olds as well are cruel and unusual in the same way as being struck by lightning.

(3) Whether "such a young person is...capable of acting with the degree of culpability that can justify the ultimate penalty." Thompson, at 4894.

In making its judgment on this third issue, the Thompson plurality states:

[W]e first ask whether the juvenile's culpability should be measured by the same standards as that of an adult, and then consider whether the application of the death penalty to this class of offenders "measurably contributes" to the societal purposes that are served by the death penalty.

Thompson, supra, at 4897, citing Enmund v. Florida, 458 U.S. 782, 798 (1982).

Thompson's analysis of these criteria is found in Part V of the plurality's decision. 56 LW at 4897-98. Also, appended to this memorandum are two amicae briefs submitted to the Supreme Court in Thompson, one by the National Legal Aid and Defender Association, et al., the other by The American Society for Adolescent Psychiatry, et al.

The Thompson plurality acknowledged that the petitioner and various amici curiae had asked the court "to 'draw the line' that would prohibit the execution of any person who was under the age of 18 at the time of the offense." Id., at 4898. For the time being, the court simply concluded that:

[W]e are not persuaded that the imposition of the death penalty for offenses committed by persons under 16 years of age has made, or can be expected to make, any measurable contribution to the goals that capital punishment is intended to achieve. It is, therefore, "nothing more than the purposeless or needless imposition of pain and suffering," Coker v. Georgia, 433 U.S. [584] at 592, and thus an unconstitutional punishment.

Thompson, 56 LW at 4898 [(footnoting Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 186 (1976) ("the sanction imposed cannot be so totally without penological justification that it results in the gratuitous infliction of suffering") (joint opinion of Stewart, Powell and Stevens, J.J.)].

None of the sources cited by the Thompson plurality or by the amici make any meaningful distinction between 15- and 17-year-olds for purposes of these criteria, e.g., retribution and deterrence. In summary then: When the court reaches the issue which was reserved in Thompson, but which is now before it (in the two cases for which certiorari has been granted), it should hold, and this court should now hold, that the imposition of the death penalty for offenses committed by 17-year-olds as well is "nothing more than the purposeless and needless imposition of pain and suffering" and thus an unconstitutional punishment.

II. THE CONCURRING OPINION IN THOMPSON OFFERS ADDITIONAL SUPPORT FOR DEFENDANT'S REQUEST FOR RELIEF.

Justice O'Connor's concurring opinion in Thompson provides additional support for the relief requested by Defendant herein, particularly as it focuses upon the failure of the state's legislature to expressly authorize the death penalty for the juvenile in question.

First, Justice O'Connor observes that:

Under the Eighth Amendment, the death penalty has been treated differently from all other punishments...

The restrictions that we have required under the Eighth Amendment affect both legislatures and the sentencing authorities for decisions in individual cases.

Thompson, supra, 56 LW at 4903.

The Justice then turns to the particular vice of the Oklahoma statutory scheme:

The case before us today raises some of the same concerns that have led us to erect barriers to the imposition of capital punishment in other contexts. Oklahoma has enacted a statute that authorizes capital punishment for murder, without setting any minimum age at which the commission of murder may lead to the imposition of that

2
3 penalty. The State has also, but quite separately, 4 provided that 15-year-old murder defendants may be
5 treated as adults in some circumstances. Because it
6 proceeded in this manner, there is a considerable risk
7 that the Oklahoma legislature either did not realize that 8 its actions would have the effect of rendering 15-year-9 old defendants death-eligible or did not give the question the serious consideration that would have been reflected in the explicit choice of some minimum age for death-eligibility.

10 ...

11
12 [T]he Oklahoma statutes have presented this Court with a 13 result that is of very dubious constitutionality, and 14 they have done so without the earmarks of careful 15 consideration that we have required for other kinds of 16 decisions leading to the death penalty. In this unique 17 situation, I am prepared to conclude that petitioner and 18 others who were below the age of 16 at the time of their 19 offense may not be executed under the authority of a capital punishment statute that specifies no minimum age at which the commission of a capital crime can lead to the offender's execution.

20 Id., at 4904.

21
22 Justice O'Connor then concludes by explaining her reason 23 for not immediately addressing whether the death penalty may be 24 imposed upon any offender less than 18 (not just under 16):

25
26 By leaving open for now the broader Eighth Amendment 27 question that both the plurality and the dissent would 28 resolve, the approach I take allows the ultimate moral 29 issue at stake in the constitutional question to be 30 addressed in the first instance by those best suited to do so, the people's elected representatives.

31 Id.

32
33 Washington's statutory scheme suffers the same vices
34 described by Justice O'Connor in relation to those of Oklahoma.
35 Washington, like Oklahoma, has enacted a statute that authorizes capital punishment for murder, without setting any minimum age at which the commission of murder may lead to the imposition of that penalty. Washington, like Oklahoma, has also, but quite separately, provided that 17-year-old murder defendants may be treated as adults in some circumstances. As a result, as Justice O'Connor said of Oklahoma, it may be said that "there is considerable risk that the [Washington] legislature either did not realize that its actions would have the effect of rendering [17]-year-old defendants either death-eligible or did not give the question the serious consideration that would have been reflected in the explicit choice of some minimum age for death-eligibility." It is therefore similarly appropriate to refuse the Plaintiff herein the right to to pursue the death penalty against Defendant McNeil or any other juvenile offender until "the ultimate moral issue [has been] addressed in the first instance by those best suited to do so, the people's elected representatives," our state legislature.

CONCLUSION

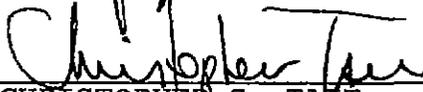

It is therefore respectfully requested that the Court strike the Plaintiff's request to impose the death penalty upon this seventeen-year-old Defendant.

DATED this 20th day of July, 1988.

Respectfully submitted,

No. 86-6169

WILLIAM WAYNE THOMPSON, PETITIONER
v. OKLAHOMA

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS OF OKLAHOMA

Syllabus

No. 86-6169. Argued November 9, 1987—Decided June 29, 1988

Petitioner, when he was 16 years old, actively participated in a brutal murder. Because petitioner was a "child" as a matter of Oklahoma law, the District Attorney filed a statutory petition seeking to have him tried as an adult, which the trial court granted. He was then convicted and sentenced to death, and the Court of Criminal Appeals of Oklahoma affirmed.

Held: The judgment is vacated and the case is remanded.

724 P. 2d 780, vacated and remanded.

JUSTICE STEVENS, joined by JUSTICE BRENNAN, JUSTICE MARSHALL, and JUSTICE BLACKMUN, concluded that the "cruel and unusual punishment" prohibition of the Eighth Amendment, made applicable to the States by the Fourteenth Amendment, prohibits the execution of a person who was under 16 years of age at the time of his or her offense.

(a) In determining whether the categorical Eighth Amendment prohibition applies, this Court must be guided by the "evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society," Trop v. Dulles, 356 U. S. 86, 101, and, in so doing, must review relevant legislative enactments and jury determinations and consider the reasons why a civilized society may accept or reject the death penalty for a person less than 16 years old at the time of the crime.

(b) Relevant state statutes—particularly those of the 18 States that have expressly considered the question of a minimum age for imposition of the death penalty, and have uniformly required that the defendant have attained at least the age of 16 at the time of the capital offense—support the conclusion that it would offend civilized standards of decency to execute a person who was less than 16 years old at the time of his or her offense. That conclusion is also consistent with the views expressed by respected professional organizations, by other nations that share the Anglo-American heritage, and by the leading members of the Western European Community.

(c) The behavior of juries—as evidenced by statistics demonstrating that, although between 18 and 20 persons under the age of 16 were executed during the first half of the 20th century, no such execution has taken place since 1948 despite the fact that thousands of murder cases were tried during that period, and that only 5 of the 1,393 persons sentenced to death for willful homicide during the years 1982 through 1986 were less than 16 at the time of the offense—leads to the unambiguous conclusion that the imposition of the death penalty on a 15-year-old offender is now generally abhorrent to the conscience of the community.

(d) The juvenile's reduced culpability, and the fact that the application of the death penalty to this class of offenders does not measurably contribute to the essential purposes underlying the penalty, also support the conclusion that the imposition of the penalty on persons under the age of 16 constitutes unconstitutional punishment. This Court has already endorsed the proposition that less culpability should attach to a crime committed by a juvenile than to a comparable crime committed by an adult, since inexperience, less education, and less intelligence make the teenager less able to evaluate the consequences of his or her conduct while at the same time he or she is much more apt to be motivated by mere emotion or peer pressure than is an adult. Cl. Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U. S.

622: Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U. S. 104. Given this lesser culpability, as well as the teenager's capacity for growth and society's fiduciary obligations to its children, the retributive purpose underlying the death penalty is simply inapplicable to the execution of a 15-year-old offender. Moreover, the deterrence rationale for the penalty is equally unacceptable with respect to such offenders, since statistics demonstrate that the vast majority of persons arrested for willful homicide are over 16 at the time of the offense, since the likelihood that the teenage offender has made the kind of cold-blooded cost-benefit analysis that attaches any weight to the possibility of execution is virtually nonexistent, and since it is fanciful to believe that a 15-year-old would be deterred by the knowledge that a small number of persons his age have been executed during the 20th century.

JUSTICE O'CONNOR concluded that:

1. Although a national consensus forbidding the execution of any person for a crime committed before the age of 16 very likely does exist, this conclusion should not unnecessarily be adopted as a matter of constitutional law without better evidence than is before the Court. The fact that the 18 legislatures that have expressly considered the question have set the minimum age for capital punishment at 16 or above, coupled with the fact that 14 other States have rejected capital punishment completely, suggests the existence of a consensus. However, the Federal Government and 19 States have authorized capital punishment without setting any minimum age, and have also provided for some 15-year-olds to be prosecuted as adults. These laws appear to render 15-year-olds death eligible, and thus pose a real obstacle to finding a consensus. Moreover, although the execution and sentencing statistics before the Court support the inference of a consensus, they are not dispositive because they do not indicate how many juries have been asked to impose the death penalty on juvenile offenders or how many times prosecutors have exercised their discretion to refrain from seeking the penalty. Furthermore, granting the premise that adolescents are generally less blameworthy than adults who commit similar crimes, it does not necessarily follow that all 15-year-olds are incapable of the moral culpability that would justify the imposition of capital punishment. Nor is there evidence that 15-year-olds as a class are inherently incapable of being deterred from major crimes by the prospect of the death penalty. Thus, there is the danger that any inference of a societal consensus drawn from the evidence in this case might be mistaken. Rather than rely on its inevitably subjective judgment about the best age at which to draw a line forbidding capital punishment, this Court should if possible await the express judgments of additional legislatures.

2. Petitioner's sentence must be set aside on the ground that—whereas the Eighth Amendment requires special care and deliberation in decisions that may lead to the imposition of the death penalty—there is considerable risk that, in enacting a statute authorizing capital punishment for murder without setting any minimum age, and in separately providing that juvenile defendants may be treated as adults in some circumstances, the Oklahoma Legislature either did not realize that its actions would effectively render 15-year-olds death eligible or did not give the question the serious consideration that would have been reflected in the explicit choice of a particular minimum age. Because the available evidence suggests a national consensus forbidding the imposition of capital punishment for crimes committed before the age of 16, petitioner and others whose crimes were committed before that age may not be executed pursuant to a capital punishment statute that specifies no minimum age.

STEVENS, J., announced the judgment of the Court and delivered an opinion in which BRENNAN, MARSHALL, and BLACKMUN, JJ., joined. O'CONNOR, J., filed an opinion concurring in the judgment. SCALLA, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which REHNQUIST, C. J., and WHITE, J., joined. KENNEDY, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

JUSTICE STEVENS announced the judgment of the Court, and delivered an opinion in which JUSTICE BRENNAN, JUSTICE MARSHALL, and JUSTICE BLACKMUN join.

Petitioner was convicted of first-degree murder and sentenced to death. The principal question presented is whether the execution of that sentence would violate the constitutional prohibition against the infliction of "cruel and unusual punishments"¹ because petitioner was only 15 years old at the time of his offense.

¹The Eighth Amendment provides:

"Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor

I

Because there is no claim that the punishment would be excessive if the crime had been committed by an adult, only a brief statement of facts is necessary. In concert with three older persons, petitioner actively participated in the brutal murder of his former brother-in-law in the early morning hours of January 23, 1983. The evidence disclosed that the victim had been shot twice, and that his throat, chest, and abdomen had been cut. He also had multiple bruises and a broken leg. His body had been chained to a concrete block and thrown into a river where it remained for almost four weeks. Each of the four participants was tried separately and each was sentenced to death.

Because petitioner was a "child" as a matter of Oklahoma law,² the district attorney filed a statutory petition, see 10 Okla. Stat. Ann. § 1112(b) (1987), seeking an order finding "that said child is competent and had the mental capacity to know and appreciate the wrongfulness of his [conduct]." App. 4. After a hearing, the trial court concluded "that there are virtually no reasonable prospects for rehabilitation of William Wayne Thompson within the juvenile system and that William Wayne Thompson should be held accountable for his acts as if he were an adult and should be certified to stand trial as an adult." App. 8 (emphasis in original).

At the guilt phase of petitioner's trial, the prosecutor introduced three color photographs showing the condition of the victim's body when it was removed from the river. Although the Court of Criminal Appeals held that the use of two of those photographs was error,³ it concluded that the error was harmless because the evidence of petitioner's guilt was so convincing. However, the prosecutor had also used the photographs in his closing argument during the penalty phase. The Court of Criminal Appeals did not consider whether this display was proper.

At the penalty phase of the trial, the prosecutor asked the jury to find two aggravating circumstances: that the murder was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel; and that there was a probability that the defendant would commit criminal acts of violence that would constitute a continuing threat to society. The jury found the first, but not the second, and fixed petitioner's punishment at death.

The Court of Criminal Appeals affirmed the conviction and sentence, 724 P. 2d 780 (1986), citing its earlier opinion in Eddings v. State, 616 P. 2d 1159 (1980), rev'd on other grounds, 455 U. S. 104 (1982), for the proposition that "once a minor is certified to stand trial as an adult, he may also, without violating the Constitution, be punished as an adult." 724 P. 2d, at 784. We granted certiorari to consider whether a sentence of death is cruel and unusual punishment for a crime committed by a 15-year-old child, as well as whether cruel and unusual punishments inflicted." U. S. Const., Amdt. 8.

This proscription must be observed by the States as well as the Federal Government. See, e. g., Robinson v. California, 370 U. S. 660 (1962).

²Title 10 Okla. Stat. Ann. § 1101(1) (1987) provides:

"'Child' means any person under eighteen (18) years of age, except for any person sixteen (16) or seventeen (17) years of age who is charged with murder, kidnapping for purposes of extortion, robbery with a dangerous weapon, rape in the first degree, use of a firearm or other offensive weapon while committing a felony, arson in the first degree, burglary with explosives, shooting with intent to kill, manslaughter in the first degree, or nonconsensual sodomy."

³"The other two color photographs . . . were gruesome. Admitting them into evidence served no purpose other than to inflame the jury. We do not understand why an experienced prosecutor would risk reversal of the whole case by introducing such ghastly, color photographs with so little probative value. We fail to see how they could possibly assist the jury in the determination of defendant's guilt. The trial court's admission of these two photographs was error." Thompson v. State, 724 P. 2d 780, 782-783 (Okla. Cr. 1986).

photographic evidence that a state court deems erroneously admitted but harmless at the guilt phase, nevertheless violates a capital defendant's constitutional rights by virtue of its being considered at the penalty phase. — U. S. — (1987).

II

The authors of the Eighth Amendment drafted a categorical prohibition against the infliction of cruel and unusual punishments, but they made no attempt to define the contours of that category. They delegated that task to future generations of judges who have been guided by the "evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society." Trop v. Dulles, 356 U. S. 86, 101 (1958) (plurality opinion) (Warren, C. J.).⁴ In performing that task the Court has reviewed the work product of state legislatures and sentencing juries,⁵ and has carefully considered the reasons why a civilized society may accept or reject the death penalty in certain types of cases. Thus, in confronting the question whether the youth of the defendant—more specifically, the fact that he was less than 16 years old at the time of his offense—is a sufficient reason for denying the state the power to sentence him to death, we first review relevant legislative enactments,⁶ then refer to jury determinations,⁷ and ⁴That Eighth Amendment jurisprudence must reflect "evolving standards of decency" was settled early this century in the case of Weems v. United States, 217 U. S. 349 (1910). The Court held that a sentence of 15 years of hard enclaved labor, plus deprivation of various civil rights and perpetual state surveillance, constituted "cruel and unusual punishment" under the Philippines' (then under United States control) Bill of Rights. Premising its opinion on the synonymy of the Philippine and United States "cruel and unusual punishment" clauses, the Court wrote:

"Time works changes, brings into existence new conditions and purposes. Therefore a principle to be vital must be capable of wider application than the mischief which gives it birth.

"The [cruel and unusual punishment clause] in the opinion of the learned commentators may be therefore progressive, and is not fastened to the obsolete but may acquire meaning as public opinion becomes enlightened by a humane justice." Id., at 373-374, 378.

See also Ollman v. Evans, 750 F. 2d 970, 995-996 (CA DC 1984) (en banc) (Bork, J., concurring):

"Judges given stewardship of a constitutional provision . . . whose core is known but whose outer reach and contours are ill-defined, face the never-ending task of discerning the meaning of the provision from one case to the next. There would be little need for judges—and certainly no office for a philosophy of judging—if the boundaries of every constitutional provision were self-evident. . . . They are not. . . . It is the task of the judge in this generation to discern how the framers' values, defined in the context of the world they knew, apply to the world we know. The world changes in which unchanging values find their application.

"We must never hesitate to apply old values to new circumstances The important thing, the ultimate constitutional consideration, is the constitutional freedom that is given into our keeping. A judge who refuses to see new threats to an established constitutional value, and hence provides a crabbed interpretation that robs a provision of its full, fair and reasonable meaning, fails in his judicial duty."

S. 584, 593-597 (1977) (plurality opinion) (WHITE, J.); Enmund v. Florida, 458 U. S. 782, 789-796 (1982); id., at 814 (legislative and jury statistics important in Eighth Amendment adjudication) (O'CONNOR, J., dissenting).

⁶See Furman v. Georgia, 408 U. S. 238, 277-279 (1972) (Court must look to objective signs of how today's society views a particular punishment) (BRENNAN, J., concurring); Enmund v. Florida, 458 U. S., at 789-793.

⁷Our capital punishment jurisprudence has consistently recognized that contemporary standards, as reflected by the actions of legislatures and juries, provide an important measure of whether the death penalty is "cruel and unusual." Part of the rationale for this index of constitutional value lies in the very language of the construed clause: whether an action is "unusual" depends, in common usage, upon the frequency of its occurrence or the magnitude of its acceptance.

finally explain why these indicators of contemporary standards of decency confirm our judgment that such a young person is not capable of acting with the degree of culpability that can justify the ultimate penalty.⁸

III

Justice Powell has repeatedly reminded us of the importance of "the experience of mankind, as well as the long history of our law, recognizing that there are differences which must be accommodated in determining the rights and duties of children as compared with those of adults. Examples of this distinction abound in our law: in contracts, in torts, in criminal law and procedure, in criminal sanctions and rehabilitation, and in the right to vote and to hold office." Goss v. Lopez, 419 U. S. 565, 590-591 (1975) (Powell, J., dissenting).⁹ Oklahoma recognizes this basic distinction in a number of its statutes. Thus, a minor is not eligible to vote,¹⁰ to sit on a jury,¹¹ to marry without parental consent,¹² or to purchase alcohol¹³ or cigarettes.¹⁴ Like all other States, Oklahoma has developed a juvenile justice system in which most offenders under the age of 18 are not held criminally responsible. Its statutes do provide, however, that a 16- or 17-year-old charged with murder and other serious felonies shall be considered an adult.¹⁵ Other than the special certification procedure that was used to authorize petitioner's trial in this case "as an adult," apparently there are no Oklahoma statutes, either civil or criminal, that treat a person under 16 years of age as anything but a "child."

The line between childhood and adulthood is drawn in different ways by various States. There is, however, complete or near unanimity among all 50 States and the District of Columbia¹⁶ in treating a person under 16 as a minor for several important purposes. In no State may a 15-year-old vote or serve on a jury.¹⁷ Further, in all but one State a 15-year-old may not drive without parental consent,¹⁸ and in all but four

The focus on the acceptability and regularity of the death penalty's imposition in certain kinds of cases—that is, whether imposing the sanction in such cases comports with contemporary standards of decency as reflected by legislative enactments and jury sentences—is connected to the insistence that statutes permitting its imposition channel the sentencing process toward nonarbitrary results. For both a statutory scheme that fails to guide jury discretion in a meaningful way, and a pattern of legislative enactments or jury sentences revealing a lack of interest on the part of the public in sentencing certain people to death, indicate that contemporary morality is not really ready to permit the regular imposition of the harshest of sanctions in such cases.

⁸Thus, in explaining our conclusion that the death penalty may not be imposed for the crime of raping an adult woman, JUSTICE WHITE stated: "The Constitution contemplates that in the end our own judgment will be brought to bear on the question of the acceptability of the death penalty under the Eighth Amendment." Coker v. Georgia, 433 U. S., at 597.

States a 15-year-old may not marry without parental consent.²¹ Additionally, in those States that have legislated on the subject, no one under age 16 may purchase pornographic materials (50 States),²² and in most States that have some form of legalized gambling, minors are not permitted to participate without parental consent (42 States).²³ Most relevant, however, is the fact that all States have enacted legislation designating the maximum age for juvenile court jurisdiction at no less than 16.²⁴ All of this legislation is consistent with the experience of mankind, as well as the long history of our law, that the normal 15-year-old is not prepared to assume the full responsibilities of an adult.²⁵

Most state legislatures have not expressly confronted the question of establishing a minimum age for imposition of the death penalty.²⁶ In 14 States, capital punishment is not au-

²⁵ The law must often adjust the manner in which it affords rights to those whose status renders them unable to exercise choice freely and rationally. Children, the insane, and those who are irreversibly ill with loss of brain function, for instance, all retain "rights," to be sure, but often such rights are only meaningful as they are exercised by agents acting with the best interests of their principals in mind. See Garvey, Freedom and Choice in Constitutional Law, 94 Harv. L. Rev. 1756 (1981). It is in this way that paternalism bears a beneficent face, paternalism in the sense of a caring, nurturing parent making decisions on behalf of a child who is not quite ready to take on the fully rational and considered task of shaping his or her own life. The assemblage of statutes in the text above, from both Oklahoma and other states, reflects this basic assumption that our society makes about children as a class; we assume that they do not yet act as adults do, and thus we act in their interest by restricting certain choices that we feel they are not yet ready to make with full benefit of the costs and benefits attending such decisions. It would be ironic if these assumptions that we so readily make about children as a class—about their inherent difference from adults in their capacity as agents, as choosers, as shapers of their own lives—were suddenly unavailable in determining whether it is cruel and unusual to treat children the same as adults for purposes of inflicting capital punishment. Thus, informing the judgment of the Court today is the virtue of consistency, for the very assumptions we make about our children when we legislate on their behalf tells us that it is likely cruel, and certainly unusual, to impose on a child a punishment that takes as its predicate the existence of a fully rational, choosing agent, who may be deterred by the harshest of sanctions and toward whom society may legitimately take a retributive stance. As we have observed, "Children, by definition, are not assumed to have the capacity to take care of themselves. They are assumed to be subject to the control of their parents, and if parental control falters, the State must play its part as parens patriae." Schall v. Martin, 467 U. S. 253, 265 (1984); see also May v. Anderson, 345 U. S. 523, 536 (1953) (Frankfurter, J., concurring) ("Children have a very special place in life which law should reflect. Legal theories . . . lead to fallacious reasoning if uncritically transferred to determination of a State's duty toward children"); Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U. S. 629, 649-650 (1968) (Stewart, J., concurring) ("[A]t least in some precisely delineated areas, a child . . . is not possessed of that full capacity for individual choice which is the presupposition of First Amendment guarantees. It is only upon such a premise . . . that a State may deprive children of other rights—the right to marry, for example, or the right to vote—deprivations that would be constitutionally intolerable for adults"); Parham v. J. R., 442 U. S. 584, 603 (1979) ("Most children, even in adolescence, simply are not able to make sound judgments concerning many decisions").

thorized at all,²⁷ and in 19 others capital punishment is authorized but no minimum age is expressly stated in the death penalty statute.²⁸ One might argue on the basis of this body

Rev. Stat. § 419.533(1)(a)-(b), (3) (1987); Va. Code Ann. § 16.1-269(A) (1982). However, in Michigan, that 15-year-old may not be executed—because the State has abolished the death penalty—in Oregon, that 15-year-old may not be executed—because the State has expressly set a minimum age of 18 for executions—and in Virginia that 15-year-old may be executed—because the State has a death penalty and has not expressly addressed the issue of minimum age for execution. That these three States have all set a 15-year-old waiver floor for first-degree murder tells us that the States consider 15-year-olds to be old enough to be tried in criminal court for serious crimes (or too old to be dealt with effectively in juvenile court), but tells us nothing about the judgment these States have made regarding the appropriate punishment for such youthful offenders. As a matter of fact, many States in the Union have waiver ages below 16, including many of the States that have either abolished the death penalty or that have set an express minimum age for the death penalty at 16 or higher. See S. Davis, supra, n. 22. In sum, we believe that the more appropriate measures for determining how the States view the issue of minimum age for the death penalty are those discussed in the text and in n. 29, infra.

²⁷ It is reported that a 10-year-old black child was hanged in Louisiana in 1855 and a Cherokee Indian child of the same age was hanged in Arkansas in 1835. See Streib, Death Penalty for Children: The American Experience With Capital Punishment for Crimes Committed While Under Age Eighteen, 36 Okla. L. Rev. 613, 619-620 (1983).

²⁹ One might argue, of course, that petitioner's execution "could theoretically be imposed" in 19 States, see post, at 6 (dissenting opinion), just as execution was permissible above the age of 7 in Blackstone's time. Ibid. This argument would, though, first have to acknowledge that the execution would be impermissible in 32 States. Additionally, 2 of the 19 States that retain a death penalty without setting a minimum age simply do not sentence people to death any more. Neither South Dakota nor Vermont has imposed a death sentence since our landmark decision in Furman v. Georgia, supra. See Greenberg, Capital Punishment as a System, 91 Yale L. J. 908, 929-936 (1982); NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc., Death Row, U. S. A. (1980-1987). (Vermont is frequently counted as a 15th State without a death penalty, since its capital punishment scheme fails to guide jury discretion, see 13 Vt. Stat. Ann. §§ 7101-7107 (1974), and has not been amended since our decision in Furman v. Georgia, supra, holding similar statutes unconstitutional. South Dakota's statute does provide for jury consideration of aggravating and mitigating factors. See 23A-27A S. D. Codified Laws Ann. (1979 & Supp. 1987)). Thus, if one were to shift the focus from those States that have expressly dealt with the issue of minimum age and toward a general comparison of States whose statutes, facially, would and would not permit petitioner's execution, one would have to acknowledge a 2:1 ratio of States in which it is not even "theoretically" possible that Thompson's execution could occur.

Ann. § 620.5(XIII) (prohibiting execution of one who was a minor at time of crime) (Supp. 1987)) (§ 21-B:1

The conclusion that it would offend civilized standards of decency to execute a person who was less than 16 years old at the time of his or her offense is consistent with the views that have been expressed by respected professional organizations, by other nations that share our Anglo-American heritage, and by the leading members of the Western European community.³¹ Thus, the American Bar Association³² and the American Law Institute³³ have formally expressed their opposition to the death penalty for juveniles. Although the death penalty has not been entirely abolished in the United Kingdom or New Zealand (it has been abolished in Australia, except in the State of New South Wales, where it is available for treason and piracy), in neither of those countries may a juvenile be executed. The death penalty has been abolished in West Germany, France, Portugal, The Netherlands, and all of the Scandinavian countries, and is available only for exceptional crimes such as treason in Canada, Italy, Spain, and Switzerland. Juvenile executions are also prohibited in the Soviet Union.³⁴

IV

The second societal factor the Court has examined in determining the acceptability of capital punishment to the American sensibility is the behavior of juries. In fact, the infrequent and haphazard handing out of death sentences by

Code Ann. § 2929.02(A) (1984)) (age 18); Oregon (Ore. Rev. Stat. §§ 161.620 & 419.476(1) (1987)) (age 18); Tennessee (Tenn. In addition, the Senate recently passed a bill authorizing the death penalty for certain drug-related killings, with the caveat that "[a] sentence of death shall not be carried out upon a person who is under 18 years of age at the time the crime was committed." Cong. Rec. S7580 (June 10, 1988).

capital juries was a prime factor underlying our judgment in Furman v. Georgia, 408 U. S. 238 (1972), that the death penalty, as then administered in unguided fashion, was unconstitutional.³⁵

While it is not known precisely how many persons have been executed during the 20th century for crimes committed under the age of 16, a scholar has recently compiled a table revealing this number to be between 18 and 20.³⁶ All of these occurred during the first half of the century, with the last such execution taking place apparently in 1948.³⁷ In the following year this Court observed that this "whole country has traveled far from the period in which the death sentence was an automatic and commonplace result of convictions" Williams v. New York, 337 U. S. 241, 247 (1949). The road we have traveled during the past four decades—in which thousands of juries have tried murder cases—leads to the unambiguous conclusion that the imposition of the death penalty on a 15-year-old offender is now generally abhorrent to the conscience of the community.

Department of Justice statistics indicate that during the years 1982 through 1986 an average of over 16,000 persons were arrested for willful criminal homicide (murder and non-negligent manslaughter) each year. Of that group of 82,094 persons, 1,393 were sentenced to death. Only five of them, including the petitioner in this case, were less than 16 years old at the time of the offense.³⁸ Statistics of this kind can, of course, be interpreted in different ways,³⁹ but they do suggest that these five young offenders have received sentences that are "cruel and unusual in the same way that being struck by lightning is cruel and unusual." Furman v. Georgia, 408 U. S., at 309 (Stewart, J., concurring).

"Although the judgments of legislatures, juries, and prosecutors weigh heavily in the balance, it is for us ultimately to judge whether the Eighth Amendment permits imposition of the death penalty" on one such as petitioner who committed a heinous murder when he was only 15 years old. Enmund v. Florida, 458 U. S., at 797.⁴⁰ In making that judgment, we Streib, Death Penalty for Juveniles 190-208 (1987) (compiling information regarding all executions in this country from 1620 through 1986 for crimes committed while under age 18; uncertainty between 18 and 20 because of two persons executed who may have been either 15 or 16 at time of crime).

³⁹ For example, one might observe that of the 80,233 people arrested for willful criminal homicide who were over the age of 16, 1,388, or 1.7%, received the death sentence, while 5 of the 1,361, or 0.3%, of those under 16 who were arrested for willful criminal homicide received the death penalty.

⁴⁰ That the task of interpreting the great, sweeping clauses of the Constitution ultimately falls to us has been for some time an accepted principle of American jurisprudence. See Marbury v. Madison, 5 U. S. (1 Cranch)

'first ask whether the juvenile's culpability should be measured by the same standard as that of an adult, and then consider whether the application of the death penalty to this class of offenders "measurably contributes" to the social purposes that are served by the death penalty. Id., at 798.

It is generally agreed "that punishment should be directly related to the personal culpability of the criminal defendant." California v. Brown, — U. S. —, — (1987) (O'CONNOR, J., concurring). There is also broad agreement on the proposition that adolescents as a class are less mature and responsible than adults. We stressed this difference in explaining the importance of treating the defendant's youth as a mitigating factor in capital cases:

"But youth is more than a chronological fact. It is a time and condition of life when a person may be most susceptible to influence and to psychological damage. Our history is replete with laws and judicial recognition that minors, especially in their earlier years, generally are less mature and responsible than adults. Particularly 'during the formative years of childhood and adolescence, minors often lack the experience, perspective, and judgment' expected of adults. Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U. S. 622, 635 (1979)." Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U. S., at 115-116 (footnotes omitted).

To add further emphasis to the special mitigating force of youth, Justice Powell quoted the following passage from the 1978 Report of the Twentieth Century Fund Task Force on Sentencing Policy Toward Young Offenders:

"Adolescents, particularly in the early and middle teen years, are more vulnerable, more impulsive, and less self-disciplined than adults. Crimes committed by youths may be just as harmful to victims as those committed by older persons, but they deserve less punishment because adolescents may have less capacity to control their conduct and to think in long-range terms than adults. Moreover, youth crime as such is not exclusively the offender's fault; offenses by the young also represent a failure of family, school, and the social system, which share responsibility for the development of America's youth." Id., at 115.

Thus, the Court has already endorsed the proposition that less culpability should attach to a crime committed by a juvenile than to a comparable crime committed by an adult.⁴¹ The basis for this conclusion is too obvious to require extended explanation.⁴² Inexperience, less education, and less 137, 177 (1803) ("It is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is"). With the Eighth Amendment, whose broad, vague terms do not yield to a mechanical parsing, the method is no different. See, e. g., Furman v. Georgia, 408 U. S., at 268-269 (BRENNAN, J., concurring); Coker v. Georgia, 433 U. S., at 598 ("We have the abiding conviction" that the death penalty is an excessive penalty for rape).

⁴¹ "The conception of criminal responsibility with which the Juvenile Court operates also provides supporting rationale for its role in crime prevention. The basic philosophy concerning this is that criminal responsibility is absent in the case of misbehaving children. . . . But, what does it mean to say that a child has no criminal responsibility? . . . One thing about this does seem clearly implied, . . . and that is an absence of the basis for adult criminal accountability—the exercise of an unfettered free will." S. Fox, The Juvenile Court: Its Context, Problems and Opportunities 11-12 (1967) (publication of the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice).

⁴² A report on a professional evaluation of 14 juveniles condemned to death in the United States, which was accepted for presentation to the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry, concluded:

"Adolescence is well recognized as a time of great physiological and psychological stress. Our data indicate that, above and beyond these maturational stresses, homicidal adolescents must cope with brain dysfunction, cognitive limitations, and severe psychopathology. . . . Moreover, they must intelligence make the teenager less able to evaluate the consequences of his or her conduct while at the same time he or she is much more apt to be motivated by mere emotion or peer pressure than is an adult. The reasons why juveniles are not trusted with the privileges and responsibilities of an adult also explain why their irresponsible conduct is not as morally reprehensible as that of an adult.⁴

"The death penalty is said to serve two principal social purposes: retribution and deterrence of capital crimes by prospective offenders." Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U. S. 153, 183 (1976) (joint opinion of Stewart, Powell, and STEVENS, JJ.). In Gregg we concluded that as "an expression of society's moral outrage at particularly offensive conduct," retribution was not "inconsistent with our respect for the dignity of men." Ibid. Given the lesser culpability of the juvenile offender, the teenager's capacity for growth, and society's fiduciary obligations to its children, this conclusion is simply inapplicable to the execution of a 15-year-old offender.

For such a young offender, the deterrence rationale is equally unacceptable.⁵ The Department of Justice statistics indicate that about 98 percent of the arrests for willful homicide involved persons who were over 16 at the time of the offense.⁶ Thus, excluding younger persons from the class that function in families that are not merely nonsupportive but also violent and brutally abusive. These findings raise questions about the American tradition of considering adolescents to be as responsible as adults for their offenses and of sentencing them to death." Lewis, Pincus, Bard, Richardson, Pritchep, Feldman & Yeager, Neuropsychiatric, Psychoeducational, and Family Characteristics of 14 Juveniles Condemned to Death in the United States 11 (1987).

⁴ See id. 23, supra; see also, e. g., E. Erikson, Childhood and Society 261-263 (2d ed. 1963) ("In their search for a new sense of continuity and sameness, adolescents have to refigure many of the battles of earlier years, even though to do so they must artificially appoint perfectly well-meaning people to play the roles of adversaries"); E. Erikson, Identity: Youth and Crisis 123-135 (1968) (discussing adolescence as a period of "identity confusion," during which youths are "preoccupied with what they appear to be in the eyes of others as compared with what they feel they are"); Gordon, The Tattered Cloak of Immortality, in Adolescence and Death 16, 27 (C. Corr & J. McNeil eds. 1986) ("Risk-taking with body safety is common in the adolescent years, though sky diving, car racing, excessive use of drugs and alcoholic beverages, and other similar activities may not be directly perceived as a kind of flirting with death. In fact, in many ways, this is counterphobic behavior—a challenge to death wherein each survival of risk is a victory over death"); Kastenbaum, Time and Death in Adolescence, in The Meaning of Death 99, 104 (H. Feifel ed. 1959) ("The adolescent lives in an intense present; 'now' is so real to him that past and future seem pallid by comparison. Everything that is important and valuable in life lies either in the immediate life situation or in the rather close future"); Kohlberg, The Development of Children's Orientations Toward a Moral Order, in 6 Vita Humana 11, 30 (1963) (studies reveal that "large groups of moral concepts and ways of thought only attain meaning at successively advanced ages and require the extensive background of social experience and cognitive growth represented by the age factor"); Miller, Adolescent Suicide: Etiology and Treatment, in Adolescent Psychiatry 327, 329 (S. Feinstein, J. Looney, A. Schwartzberg & A. Sorosky eds. 1981) (many adolescents possess a "profound conviction of their own omnipotence and immortality. Thus many adolescents may appear to be attempting suicide, but they do not really believe that death will occur"); V. Streib, supra, n. 36, at 3-20, 184-189 ("The difference that separates children from adults for most purposes of the law is children's immaturity, undeveloped ability to reason in an adultlike manner").

is eligible for the death penalty will not diminish the deterrent value of capital punishment for the vast majority of potential offenders. And even with respect to those under 16 years of age, it is obvious that the potential deterrent value of the death sentence is insignificant for two reasons. The likelihood that the teenage offender has made the kind of cost-benefit analysis that attaches any weight to the possibility of execution is so remote as to be virtually nonexistent. And, even if one posits such a cold-blooded calculation by a 15-year-old, it is fanciful to believe that he would be deterred by the knowledge that a small number of persons his age have been executed during the 20th century. In short, we are not persuaded that the imposition of the death penalty for offenses committed by persons under 16 years of age has made, or can be expected to make, any measurable contribution to the goals that capital punishment is intended to achieve. It is, therefore, "nothing more than the purposeless and needless imposition of pain and suffering," Coker v. Georgia, 433 U. S., at 592, and thus an unconstitutional punishment.⁷

Petitioner's counsel and various amici curiae have asked us to "draw a line" that would prohibit the execution of any person who was under the age of 18 at the time of the offense. Our task today, however, is to decide the case before us; we do so by concluding that the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments prohibit the execution of a person who was under 16 years of age at the time of his or her offense.⁸

The judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeals is vacated and the case is remanded with instructions to enter an appropriate order vacating petitioner's death sentence.

It is so ordered.

JUSTICE KENNEDY took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Appendix A—Right to Vote

The United States Constitution, Amendment 26, requires States to permit 18-year-olds to vote. No State has lowered its voting age below 18. The following chart assembles the various provisions from state constitutions and statutes that provide an 18-year-old voting age.

Florida*, 468 U. S. 447, 480 (1984) (because of invalidation of mandatory death penalty laws and additional procedural requirements to death penalty laws in which the jury's discretion must be carefully guided, deterrence rationale now rather weak support for capital punishment) (STEVENS, J., dissenting); Enmund v. Florida, 458 U. S., at 793-800 (unlikely that prospect of death penalty will deter one who neither kills nor intends to kill) (WHITE, J.); Furman v. Georgia, 408 U. S., at 301-302 (unverifiable that the death penalty deters more effectively than life imprisonment) (BRENNAN, J., concurring); id., at 345-354, and nn. 124-125 (deterrence rationale unsupported by the evidence) (MARSHALL, J., concurring).

⁹ Given the Court's disposition of the principal issue, it is unnecessary to resolve the second question presented, namely, whether photographic evidence that a state court deems erroneously admitted but harmless at the guilt phase, nevertheless violates a capital defendant's constitutional rights by virtue of its being considered at the penalty phase.

Appendix F—Right to Participate in Legalized Gambling Without Parental Consent

In 39 of the 48 States in which some form of legalized gambling is permitted, minors are absolutely prohibited from participating in some or all forms of such gambling. In three States parental consent vitiates such prohibition; in six States, no age restrictions are expressed in the statutory provisions authorizing gambling.

JUSTICE O'CONNOR, concurring in the judgment.

The plurality and dissent agree on two fundamental propositions: that there is some age below which a juvenile's crimes can never be constitutionally punished by death, and that our precedents require us to locate this age in light of the "evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society." See ante, at 3 (quoting Trop v. Dulles, 356 U. S. 86, 101 (1958) (opinion of Warren, C. J.)); ante, at 10-11; post, at 7, 13. See also, e. g., McCleskey v. Kemp, 481 U. S. —, — (1987). I accept both principles. The disagreements between the plurality and the dissent rest on their different evaluations of the evidence available to us about the relevant social consensus. Although I believe that a national consensus forbidding the execution of any person for a crime committed before the age of 16 very likely does exist, I am reluctant to adopt this conclusion as a matter of constitutional law without better evidence than we now possess. Because I conclude that the sentence in this case can and should be set aside on narrower grounds than those adopted by the plurality, and because the grounds on which I rest should allow us to face the more general question when better evidence is available, I concur only in the judgment of the Court.

I

Both the plurality and the dissent look initially to the decisions of American legislatures for signs of a national consensus about the minimum age at which a juvenile's crimes may lead to capital punishment. Although I agree with the dissent's contention, post, at 7, that these decisions should provide the most reliable signs of a society-wide consensus on this issue, I cannot agree with the dissent's interpretation of the evidence.

The most salient statistic that bears on this case is that every single American legislature that has expressly set a minimum age for capital punishment has set that age at 16 or above. See ante, at 12, and n. 30. When one adds these 18 States to the 14 that have rejected capital punishment completely, see ante, at 8-9, and n. 25, it appears that almost two-thirds of the state legislatures have definitely concluded that no 15-year-old should be exposed to the threat of execution. See also ante, at 11-12, n. 29 (pointing out that an additional two States with death penalty statutes on their books seem to have abandoned capital punishment in practice). Where such a large majority of the state legislatures have unambiguously outlawed capital punishment for 15-year-olds, and where no legislature in this country has affirmatively and unequivocally endorsed such a practice, strong counterevidence would be required to persuade me that a national consensus against this practice does not exist.

The dissent argues that it has found such counterevidence in the laws of the 19 States that authorize capital punishment without setting any statutory minimum age. If we could be sure that each of these 19 state legislatures had deliberately chosen to authorize capital punishment for crimes committed at the age of 15, one could hardly suppose that there is a settled national consensus opposing such a practice. In fact, however, the statistics relied on by the dissent may be quite misleading. When a legislature provides for some 15-year-olds to be processed through the adult criminal justice system, and capital punishment is available for adults in that jurisdiction, the death penalty becomes at least theoretically applicable to such defendants. This is how petitioner was rendered death-eligible, and the same possibility appears to exist in 18 other States. See post, at 3-6; ante, at 10, n. 26. As the plurality points out, however, it does not necessarily follow that the legislatures in those jurisdictions have deliberately concluded that it would be appropriate to impose capital punishment on 15-year-olds (or on even younger defendants who may be tried as adults in some jurisdictions). See ante, at 9, n. 24.

There are many reasons, having nothing whatsoever to do with capital punishment, that might motivate a legislature to provide as a general matter for some 15-year-olds to be channeled into the adult criminal justice process. The length or conditions of confinement available in the juvenile system, for example, might be considered inappropriate for serious crimes or for some recidivists. Similarly, a state legislature might conclude that very dangerous individuals, whatever their age, should not be confined in the same facility with more vulnerable juvenile offenders. Such reasons would suggest nothing about the appropriateness of capital punishment for 15-year-olds. The absence of any such implication is illustrated by the very States that the dissent cites as evidence of a trend toward lowering the age at which juveniles may be punished as adults. See post, at 9. New York, which recently adopted legislation allowing juveniles as young as 13 to be tried as adults, does not authorize capital punishment under any circumstances. In New Jersey, which now permits some 14-year-olds to be tried as adults, the minimum age for capital punishment is 18. In both cases, therefore, the decisions to lower the age at which some juveniles may be treated as adults must have been based on reasons quite separate from the legislatures' views about the minimum age at which a crime should render a juvenile eligible for the death penalty.

Nor have we been shown evidence that other legislatures directly considered the fact that the interaction between their capital punishment statutes and their juvenile offender statutes could in theory lead to executions for crimes committed before the age of 16. The very real possibility that this result was not considered is illustrated by the recent federal legislation, cited by the dissent, which lowers to 15 the age at which a defendant may be tried as an adult. See post, at 7-8 (discussing Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, Pub. L. 98-473, 98 Stat. 2149). Because a number of federal statutes have long provided for capital punishment, see post, at 8, n. 1, this legislation appears to imply that 15-year-olds may now be rendered death-eligible under federal law. The dissent does not point to any legislative history suggesting that Congress considered this implication when it enacted the Comprehensive Crime Control Act. The apparent absence of such legislative history is especially striking in light of the fact that the United States has agreed by treaty to set a minimum age of 18 for capital punishment in certain circumstances. See Article 68 of the Geneva Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, August 12, 1949, [1955] 6 U. S. T. 3516, 3560, T. I. A. S. No. 3365 (rules pertaining to military occupation); ante, at 14, n. 34; see also ibid. (citing two other international agreements, signed but not ratified by the United States, prohibiting capital punishment for juveniles). Perhaps even more striking is the fact that the United States Senate recently passed a bill authorizing capital punishment for certain drug offenses, but prohibiting application of this penalty to persons below the age of 18 at the time of the crime. 134 Cong. Rec. S7579, S7580 (June 10, 1988). Whatever other implications the ratification of Article 68 of the Geneva Convention may have, and whatever effects the Senate's recent action may eventually have, both tend to undercut any assumption that the Comprehensive Crime Control Act signals a decision by Congress to authorize the death penalty for some 15-year-old felons.

Thus, there is no indication that any legislative body in this country has rendered a considered judgment approving the imposition of capital punishment on juveniles who were below the age of 16 at the time of the offense. It nonetheless is true, although I think the dissent has overstated its significance, that the Federal Government and 19 States have adopted statutes that appear to have the legal effect of rendering some of these juveniles death-eligible. That fact is a real obstacle in the way of concluding that a national consensus forbids this practice. It is appropriate, therefore, to examine other evidence that might indicate whether or not these statutes are inconsistent with settled notions of decency in our society.

In previous cases, we have examined execution statistics, as well as data about jury determinations, in an effort to discern whether the application of capital punishment to certain classes of defendants has been so aberrational that it can be considered unacceptable in our society. See, e. g., Coker v. Georgia, 433 U. S. 584, 592 (1977) (plurality opinion); Enmund v. Florida, 458 U. S. 782, 794-796 (1982); id., at 818-819 (O'CONNOR, J., dissenting). In this case, the plurality emphasizes that four decades have gone by since the last execution of a defendant who was younger than 16 at the time of the offense, and that only 5 out of 1,393 death sentences during a recent 5-year period involved such defendants. Ante, at 14-16. Like the statistics about the behavior of legislatures, these execution and sentencing statistics support the inference of a national consensus opposing the death penalty for 15-year-olds, but they are not dispositive.

A variety of factors, having little or nothing to do with any individual's blameworthiness, may cause some groups in our population to commit capital crimes at a much lower rate than other groups. The statistics relied on by the plurality, moreover, do not indicate how many juries have been asked to impose the death penalty for crimes committed below the age of 16, or how many times prosecutors have exercised their discretion to refrain from seeking the death penalty in cases where the statutory prerequisites might have been proved. Without such data, raw execution and sentencing statistics cannot allow us reliably to infer that juries are or would be significantly more reluctant to impose the death penalty on 15-year-olds than on similarly situated older defendants.

Nor, finally, do I believe that this case can be resolved through the kind of disproportionality analysis employed in Part V of the plurality opinion. I agree that "proportionality requires a nexus between the punishment imposed and the defendant's blameworthiness." Enmund, supra, at 825 (O'CONNOR, J., dissenting); see also Tison v. Arizona, 481 U. S. — (1987). Granting the plurality's other premise—that adolescents are generally less blameworthy than adults who commit similar crimes—it does not necessarily follow that all 15-year-olds are incapable of the moral culpability that would justify the imposition of capital punishment. Nor has the plurality adduced evidence demonstrating that 15-year-olds as a class are inherently incapable of being deterred from major crimes by the prospect of the death penalty.

Legislatures recognize the relative immaturity of adolescents, and we have often permitted them to define age-based classes that take account of this qualitative difference between juveniles and adults. See, e. g., Hazelwood School District v. Kuhlmeier, 484 U. S. — (1988); Schall v. Martin, 467 U. S. 253 (1984); McKeiver v. Pennsylvania, 408 U. S. 528 (1971); Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U. S. 629 (1968). But compare Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U. S. 52, 74-75 (1976) (unconstitutional for a legislature to presume that all minors are incapable of providing informed consent to abortion), and Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U. S. 622, 654 (1979) (STEVENS, J., joined by BRENNAN, MARSHALL, and BLACKMUN, JJ.; concurring in judgment) (same), with Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U. S. 416, 469, n. 12 (1983) (O'CONNOR, J., dissenting) (parental notification requirements may be constitutional). The special qualitative characteristics of juveniles that justify legislatures in treating them differently from adults for many other purposes are also relevant to Eighth Amendment proportionality analysis. These characteristics, however, vary widely among different individuals of the same age, and I would not substitute our inevitably subjective judgment about the best age at which to draw a line in the capital punishment context for the judgments of the nation's legislatures. Cf. Enmund, supra, at 826, and n. 42 (O'CONNOR, J., dissenting).

The history of the death penalty instructs that there is danger in inferring a settled societal consensus from statistics like those relied on in this case. In 1846, Michigan became the first State to abolish the death penalty for all crimes except treason, and Rhode Island soon thereafter became the first jurisdiction to abolish capital punishment completely. F. Zimring & G. Hawkins, Capital Punishment and the American Agenda 28 (1986). In succeeding decades, other American States continued the trend towards abolition, especially during the years just before and during World War I. Id., at 28-29. Later, and particularly after World War II, there ensued a steady and dramatic decline in executions—both in absolute terms and in relation to the number of homicides occurring in the country. W. Bowers, Legal Homicide 26-28 (1984). In the 1950's and 1960's, more States abolished or radically restricted capital punishment, and executions ceased completely for several years beginning in 1968. H. Bedau, The Death Penalty in America 23, 25 (3d ed. 1982).

In 1972, when this Court heard arguments on the constitutionality of the death penalty, such statistics might have suggested that the practice had become a relic, implicitly rejected by a new societal consensus. Indeed, counsel urged the Court to conclude "that the number of cases in which the death penalty is imposed, as compared with the number of cases in which it is statutorily available, reflects a general revulsion toward the penalty that would lead to its repeal if only it were more generally and widely enforced." Furman v. Georgia, 408 U. S. 228, 386 (1972) (Burger, C. J., dissenting). We now know that any inference of a societal consensus rejecting the death penalty would have been mistaken. But had this Court then declared the existence of such a consensus, and outlawed capital punishment, legislatures would very likely not have been able to revive it. The mistaken premise of the decision would have been frozen into constitutional law, making it difficult to refute and even more difficult to reject.

The step that the plurality would take today is much narrower in scope, but it could conceivably reflect an error similar to the one we were urged to make in Furman. The day may come when we must decide whether a legislature may deliberately and unequivocally resolve upon a policy authorizing capital punishment for crimes committed at the age of 15. In that event, we shall have to decide the Eighth Amendment issue that divides the plurality and the dissent in this case, and we shall have to evaluate the evidence of societal standards of decency that is available to us at that time. In my view, however, we need not and should not decide the question today.

II

Under the Eighth Amendment, the death penalty has been treated differently from all other punishments. See, e. g., California v. Ramos, 463 U. S. 992, 998-999, and n. 9 (1983). Among the most important and consistent themes in this Court's death penalty jurisprudence is the need for special care and deliberation in decisions that may lead to the imposition of that sanction. The Court has accordingly imposed a series of unique substantive and procedural restrictions designed to ensure that capital punishment is not imposed without the serious and calm reflection that ought to precede any decision of such gravity and finality.

The restrictions that we have required under the Eighth Amendment affect both legislatures and the sentencing authorities responsible for decisions in individual cases. Neither automatic death sentences for certain crimes, for example, nor statutes committing the sentencing decision to the unguided discretion of judges or juries, have been upheld. See, e. g., Woodson v. North Carolina, 428 U. S. 280 (1976); Roberts v. Louisiana, 428 U. S. 325 (1976); Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U. S. 153, 188-189 (1976) (opinion of Stewart, Powell, and STEVENS, JJ.) (discussing Furman v. Georgia, supra). We have rejected both legislative restrictions on the mitigating evidence that a sentencing authority may consider, e. g., Lockett v. Ohio, 438 U. S. 586 (1978); Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U. S. 104 (1982), and the lack of sufficiently precise restrictions on the aggravating circumstances that may be considered, e. g., Godfrey v. Georgia, 446 U. S. 420 (1980). As a practical matter we have virtually required that the death penalty be imposed only when a guilty verdict has been followed by separate trial-like sentencing proceedings, and we have extended many of the procedural restrictions applicable during criminal trials into these proceedings. See, e. g., Gardner v. Florida, 430 U. S. 349 (1977); Estelle v. Smith, 451 U. S. 454 (1981); Bullington v. Missouri, 451 U. S. 430 (1981). Legislatures have been forbidden to authorize capital punishment for certain crimes. Coker v. Georgia, 433 U. S. 584 (1977); Enmund v. Florida, 458 U. S. 782 (1982); see also Ford v. Wainwright, 477 U. S. 399 (1986) (Eighth Amendment forbids the execution of insane prisoners). Constitutional scrutiny in this area has been more searching than in the review of noncapital sentences. See Enmund v. Florida, supra, at 815, n. 27 (O'CONNOR, J., dissenting); Rummel v. Estelle, 445 U. S. 263, 272 (1980).

The case before us today raises some of the same concerns that have led us to erect barriers to the imposition of capital punishment in other contexts. Oklahoma has enacted a statute that authorizes capital punishment for murder, without setting any minimum age at which the commission of murder may lead to the imposition of that penalty. The State has also, but quite separately, provided that 15-year-old murder defendants may be treated as adults in some circumstances. Because it proceeded in this manner, there is a considerable risk that the Oklahoma legislature either did not realize that its actions would have the effect of rendering 15-year-old defendants death-eligible or did not give the question the serious consideration that would have been reflected in the explicit choice of some minimum age for death-eligibility. Were it clear that no national consensus forbids the imposition of capital punishment for crimes committed before the age of 16, the implicit nature of the Oklahoma legislature's decision would not be constitutionally problematic. In the peculiar circumstances we face today, however, the Oklahoma statutes have presented this Court with a result that is of very dubious constitutionality, and they have done so without the earmarks of careful consideration that we have required for other kinds of decisions leading to the death penalty. In this unique situation, I am prepared to conclude that petitioner and others who were below the age of 16 at the time of their offense may not be executed under the authority of a capital punishment statute that specifies no minimum age at which the commission of a capital crime can lead to the offender's execution.*

The conclusion I have reached in this unusual case is itself unusual. I believe, however, that it is in keeping with the principles that have guided us in other Eighth Amendment cases. It is also supported by the familiar principle—applied

*Contrary to the dissent's suggestion, the conclusion I have reached in this case does not imply that I would reach a similar conclusion in cases involving "those of extremely low intelligence, or those over 75, or any number of other appealing groups as to which the existence of a national consensus regarding capital punishment may be in doubt . . . because they are not specifically named in the capital statutes." See post, at 20. In this case, there is significant affirmative evidence of a national consensus forbidding the execution of defendants who were below the age of 16 at the time of the offense. The evidence includes 18 state statutes setting a minimum age of 16 or more, and it is such evidence—not the mere failure of Oklahoma to specify a minimum age or the "appealing" nature of the group to which petitioner belongs—that leaves me unwilling to conclude that petitioner may constitutionally be executed. Cases in which similarly persuasive evidence was lacking would in my view not be analogous to the case before us today. The dissent is mistaken both when it reads into my discussion a contrary implication and when it suggests that there are ulterior reasons behind the implication it has incorrectly drawn.

in different ways in different contexts—according to which we should avoid unnecessary, or unnecessarily broad, constitutional adjudication. See generally, e. g., Ashwander v. TVA, 297 U. S. 288, 341–356 (1936) (Brandeis, J., concurring). The narrow conclusion I have reached in this case is consistent with the underlying rationale for that principle, which was articulated many years ago by Justice Jackson: "We are not final because we are infallible, but we are infallible only because we are final." Brown v. Allen, 344 U. S. 443, 540 (1953) (opinion concurring in result); see also Califano v. Yamasaki, 442 U. S. 682, 692–693 (1979). By leaving open for now the broader Eighth Amendment question that both the plurality and the dissent would resolve, the approach I take allows the ultimate moral issue at stake in the constitutional question to be addressed in the first instance by those best suited to do so, the people's elected representatives.

For the reasons stated in this opinion, I agree that petitioner's death sentence should be vacated, and I therefore concur in the judgment of the Court.

JUSTICE SCALIA, with whom CHIEF JUSTICE REHNQUIST and JUSTICE WHITE join, dissenting.

If the issue before us today were whether an automatic death penalty for conviction of certain crimes could be extended to individuals younger than 16 when they commit the crimes, thereby preventing individualized consideration of their maturity and moral responsibility, I would accept the plurality's conclusion that such a practice is opposed by a national consensus, sufficiently uniform and of sufficiently long standing, to render it cruel and usual punishment within the meaning of the Eighth Amendment. We have already decided as much, and more, in Lockett v. Ohio, 438 U. S. 586 (1978). I might even agree with the plurality's conclusion if the question were whether a person under 16 when he commits a crime can be deprived of the benefit of a rebuttable presumption that he is not mature and responsible enough to be punished as an adult. The question posed here, however, is radically different from both of these. It is whether there is a national consensus that no criminal so much as one day under 16, after individualized consideration of his circumstances, including the overcoming of a presumption that he should not be tried as an adult, can possibly be deemed mature and responsible enough to be punished with death for any crime. Because there seems to me no plausible basis for answering this last question in the affirmative, I respectfully dissent.

I

I begin by restating the facts since I think that a fuller account of William Wayne Thompson's participation in the murder, and of his certification to stand trial as an adult, is helpful in understanding the case. The evidence at trial left no doubt that on the night of January 22–23, 1983, Thompson brutally and with premeditation murdered his former brother-in-law, Charles Keene, the motive evidently being, at least in part, Keene's physical abuse of Thompson's sister. As Thompson left his mother's house that evening, in the company of three older friends, he explained to his girl friend that "we're going to kill Charles." Several hours later, early in the morning of January 23, a neighbor, Malcolm "Possum" Brown was awakened by the sound of a gunshot on his front porch. Someone pounded on his front door shouting: "Possum, open the door, let me in. They're going to kill me." Brown telephoned the police, and then opened the front door to see a man on his knees attempting to repel blows with his arms and hands. There were four other men on the porch. One was holding a gun and stood apart, while the other three were hitting and kicking the kneeling man, who never attempted to hit back. One of them was beating the victim with an object twelve to eighteen inches in length. The police called back to see if the disturbance was still going on, and while Brown spoke with them on the telephone the men took the victim away in a car.

Several hours after they had left Thompson's mother's house, Thompson and his three companions returned. Thompson's girlfriend helped him take off his boots, and heard him say, "we killed him. I shot him in the head and cut his throat and threw him in the river." Subsequently, the former wife of one of Thompson's accomplices heard Thompson tell his mother that "he killed him. Charles was dead and Vicki didn't have to worry about him anymore." During the days following the murder Thompson made other admissions. One witness testified that she asked Thompson the source of some hair adhering to a pair of boots he was carrying. He replied that was where he had kicked Charles Keene in the head. Thompson also told her that he had cut Charles' throat and chest and had shot him in the head. Another witness testified that when she told Thompson that a friend had seen Keene dancing in a local bar, Thompson remarked that that would be hard to do with a bullet in his head. Ultimately, one of Thompson's codefendants admitted that after Keene had been shot twice in the head Thompson had cut Keene "so the fish could eat his body." Thompson and a codefendant had then thrown the body into the Washita River, with a chain and blocks attached so that it would not be found. On February 18, 1983, the body was recovered. The Chief Medical Examiner of Oklahoma concluded that the victim had been beaten, shot twice, and that his throat, chest, and abdomen had been cut.

On February 18, 1983, the State of Oklahoma filed an information and arrest warrant for Thompson, and on February 22 the State began proceedings to allow Thompson to be tried as an adult. Under Oklahoma law, anyone who commits a crime when he is under the age of eighteen is defined to be a child, unless he is sixteen or seventeen and has committed murder or certain other specified crimes, in which case he is automatically certified to stand trial as an adult. Okla. Stat., Tit. 10, §§1101, 1104.2 (Supp. 1987). In addition, under the statute the State invoked in the present case, juveniles may be certified to stand trial as adults if: (1) the State can establish the "prosecutive merit" of the case, and (2) the court certifies, after considering six factors, that there are no reasonable prospects for rehabilitation of the child within the juvenile system. Okla. Stat., Tit. 10, §1112(b) (1981).

At a hearing on March 29, 1983, the District Court found probable cause to believe that the defendant had committed first degree murder and thus concluded that the case had prosecutive merit. A second hearing was therefore held on April 21, 1983, to determine whether Thompson was amenable to the juvenile system, or whether he should be certified to stand trial as an adult. A clinical psychologist who had examined Thompson testified at the second hearing that in her opinion Thompson understood the difference between right and wrong but had an antisocial personality that could not be modified by the juvenile justice system. The psychologist testified that Thompson believed that because of his age he was beyond any severe penalty of the law, and accordingly did not believe there would be any severe repercussions from his behavior. Numerous other witnesses testified about Thompson's prior abusive behavior. Mary Robinson, an employee of the Oklahoma juvenile justice system, testified about her contacts with Thompson during several of his previous arrests, which included arrests for assault and battery in August 1980; assault and battery in October 1981; attempted burglary in May 1982; assault and battery with a knife in July 1982; and assault with a deadly weapon in February 1983. She testified that Thompson had been provided with all the counseling the State's Department of Human Services had available, and that none of the counseling or placements seemed to improve his behavior. She recommended that he be certified to stand trial as an adult. On the basis of the foregoing testimony, the District Court filed a written order certifying Thompson to stand trial as an adult. That was appealed and ultimately affirmed by the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals.

Thompson was tried in the District Court of Grady County between December 4 and December 9, 1983. During the guilt phase of the trial, the prosecutor introduced three color photographs showing the condition of the victim's body when it was removed from the river. The jury found Thompson guilty of first degree murder. At the sentencing phase of the trial, the jury agreed with the prosecution on the existence of one aggravating circumstance, that the murder was "especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel." As required by our decision in Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U. S. 104, 115-117 (1982), the defense was permitted to argue to the jury the youthfulness of the defendant as a mitigating factor. The jury recommended that the death penalty be imposed, and the trial judge, accordingly, sentenced Thompson to death. Thompson appealed, and his conviction and capital sentence were affirmed. Standing by its earlier decision in Eddings v. State, 616 P. 2d 1159, 1166-1167 (1980), rev'd on other grounds, 455 U. S. 104 (1982), the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals held that "once a minor is certified to stand trial as an adult, he may also, without violating the Constitution, be punished as an adult." Thompson v. State, 724 P. 2d 780, 784 (1986). It also held that admission of two of the three photographs was error in the guilt phase of the proceeding, because their prejudicial effect outweighed their probative value; but found that error harmless in light of the overwhelming evidence of Thompson's guilt. It held that their prejudicial effect did not outweigh their probative value in the sentencing phase, and that they were therefore properly admitted, since they demonstrated the brutality of the crime. Thompson petitioned for certiorari with respect to both sentencing issues, and we granted review. 479 U. S. — (1987).

II A

As the foregoing history of this case demonstrates, William Wayne Thompson is not a juvenile caught up in a legislative scheme that unthinkingly lumped him together with adults for purposes of determining that death was an appropriate penalty for him, and for his crime. To the contrary, Oklahoma first gave careful consideration to whether, in light of his young age, he should be subjected to the normal criminal system at all. That question having been answered affirmatively, a jury then considered whether, despite his young age, his maturity and moral responsibility were sufficiently developed to justify the sentence of death. In upsetting this particularized judgment on the basis of a constitutional absolute, the plurality pronounces it to be a fundamental principle of our society that no one who is as little as one day short of his 16th birthday can have sufficient maturity and moral responsibility to be subjected to capital punishment for any crime. As a sociological and moral conclusion that is implausible; and it is doubly implausible as an interpretation of the United States Constitution:

The text of the Eighth Amendment, made applicable to the states by the Fourteenth, prohibits the imposition of "cruel and unusual punishments." The plurality does not attempt to maintain that this was originally understood to prohibit capital punishment for crimes committed by persons under the age of 16; the evidence is unusually clear and unequivocal that it was not. The age at which juveniles could be subjected to capital punishment was explicitly addressed in Blackstone's Commentaries on the Laws of England, published in 1769 and widely accepted at the time the Eighth Amendment was adopted as an accurate description of the common law. According to Blackstone, not only was 15 above the age (viz., 7) at which capital punishment could theoretically be imposed; it was even above the age (14) up to which there was a rebuttable presumption of incapacity to commit a capital (or any other) felony. 4 W. Blackstone, Commentaries 23-24 (1769). See also M. Hale, Pleas of the Crown 22 (1736) (describing the age of absolute incapacity as 12 and the age of presumptive incapacity as 14); Kean, The History of the Criminal Liability of Children, 53 L.Q. Rev. 364, 369-370 (1937); Streib, Death Penalty for Children: The American Experience with Capital Punishment for Crimes Committed While under Age Eighteen, 36 Okla. L. Rev. 613, 614-615 (1983) (hereinafter Streib, Death Penalty for Children). The historical practice in this country conformed with the common-law understanding that 15-year-olds were not categorically immune from commission of capital crimes. One scholar has documented 22 executions, between 1642 and 1899, for crimes committed under the age of 16. See Streib, Death Penalty for Children 619.

Necessarily, therefore, the plurality seeks to rest its holding on the conclusion that Thompson's punishment as an adult is contrary to the "evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society." Trop v. Dulles, 356 U.S. 86, 101 (1958) (plurality opinion) (Warren, C.J.). Asite, at 3. Of course the risk of assessing evolving standards is that it is all too easy to believe that evolution has culminated in one's own views. To avoid this danger we have, when making such an assessment in prior cases, looked for objective signs of how today's society views a particular punishment. Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238, 277-279 (1972) (BRENNAN, J., concurring). See also Woodson v. North Carolina, 428 U.S. 280, 293 (1976) (joint opinion of Stewart, Powell, and STEVENS, JJ.); Coker v. Georgia, 433 U.S. 584, 593-597 (1977); Enmund v. Florida, 458 U.S. 782, 788-789 (1982). The most reliable objective signs consist of the legislation that the society has enacted. It will rarely if ever be the case that the members of this Court will have a better sense of the evolution in views of the American people than do their elected representatives.

It is thus significant that, only four years ago, in the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, Pub. L. 98-473, 98 Stat. 2149, Congress expressly addressed the effect of youth upon the imposition of criminal punishment, and changed the law in precisely the opposite direction from that which the plurality's perceived evolution in social attitudes would suggest: It lowered from 16 to 15 the age at which a juvenile's case can, "in the interest of justice," be transferred from juvenile court to federal District Court, enabling him to be tried and punished as an adult. 18 U.S.C. § 5032 (1982 ed., Supp. IV). This legislation was passed in light of Justice Department testimony that many juvenile delinquents were "cynical, street-wise, repeat offenders, indistinguishable, except for their age, from their adult criminal counterparts," Hearings on S. 829 before the Subcommittee on Criminal Law of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 98th Cong., 1st Sess., 551 (1983), and that in 1979 alone juveniles under the age of fifteen, i. e. almost a year younger than Thompson, had committed a total of 206 homicides nationwide, more than 1,000 forcible rapes, 10,000 robberies and 10,000 aggravated assaults. Id., at 554. Since there are federal death-penalty statutes¹ which have not been determined to be unconstitutional, adoption of this new legislation could at least theoretically result in the imposition of the death penalty upon a 15-year-old. There is, to be sure, no reason to believe that the Members of Congress had the death penalty specifically in mind; but that does not alter the reality of what federal law now on its face permits. Moreover, if it is appropriate to go behind the face of the statutes to the subjective intentions of those who enacted them, it would be strange to find the consensus regarding criminal liability of juveniles to be moving in the direction the plurality perceives for capital punishment, while moving in precisely the opposite direction for all other penalties.²

Turning to legislation at the state level, one observes the same trend of lowering rather than raising the age of juvenile criminal liability.³ As for the state status quo with respect

²The concurrence disputes the significance of Congress' lowering of the federal waiver age by pointing to a recently approved Senate bill that would set a minimum age of 18 before capital punishment could be imposed for certain narcotics related offenses. This bill has not, however, been passed by the House of Representatives and signed into law by the President. Even if it eventually were, it would not result in the setting of a minimum age of 18 for any of the other federal death penalty statutes set forth in n. 1, supra. It would simply reflect a judgment by Congress that the death penalty is inappropriate for juvenile narcotics offenders. That would have minimal relevance to the question of consensus at issue here, which is not whether criminal offenders under 16 can be executed for all crimes, but whether they can be executed for any crimes. For the same reason, there is no significance to the concurrence's observation that the Federal Government has by Treaty agreed to a minimum death penalty age in certain very limited circumstances.

³Compare S. Davis, Rights of Juveniles, App. B-1 to B-26 (1987) with S. Davis, Rights of Juveniles 233-249 (1974). Idaho has twice lowered its waiver age, most recently from 15 to 14; Idaho Code § 16-1806 (Supp. 1988); Illinois has added as excluded offenses: murder, criminal sexual assault, armed robbery with a firearm, and possession of a deadly weapon in a school committed by child 15 or older; Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 37, § 805-4(6) (Supp. 1988); Indiana has lowered its waiver age to 14 where aggravating circumstances are present, and it has made waiver mandatory where child is 10 or older and has been charged with murder; Ind. Code §§ 31-6-2-4(b)-(e) (Supp. 1987); Kentucky has established a waiver age of 14 for juveniles charged with capital offenses or Class A or B felonies; Ky. Rev. Stat. §§ 635.020(2)-(4), 640.010 (Supp. 1988); Minnesota has made waiver mandatory for offenses committed by children 14 years or older who were previously certified for criminal prosecution and convicted of the offense or a lesser included offense; Minn. Stat. §§ 260.125 subd. 1, 3, and 3a (1986); and Montana has lowered its waiver age from 16 to 12 for children charged with sexual intercourse without consent, deliberate homicide, mitigated deliberate homicide, or attempted deliberate homicide or attempted mitigated deliberate homicide; Mont. Code Ann. § 41-5-206(1)(a) (1987); New York recently amended its law to allow certain 13-, 14- and 15-year-olds to be tried and punished as adults. N. Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 190.71 (McKinney to the death penalty in particular: The plurality chooses to "confine [its] attention" to the fact that all 18 of the States that establish a minimum age for capital punishment have chosen at least 16. Ante, at 11. But it is beyond me why an accurate analysis would not include within the computation the larger number of States (19) that have determined that no minimum age for capital punishment is appropriate, leaving that to be governed by their general rules for the age at which juveniles can be criminally responsible. A survey of state laws shows, in other words, that a majority of the States for which the issue exists (the rest do not have capital punishment) are of the view that death is not different insofar as the age of juvenile criminal responsibility is concerned. And the latter age, while presumed to be 16 in all the States, see ante, at 7, can, in virtually all the States, be less than 16 when individuated consideration of the particular case warrants it. Thus, what Oklahoma has done here is precisely what the majority of capital-punishment States would do.

When the Federal Government, and almost 40% of the States, including a majority of the States that include capital punishment as a permissible sanction, allow for the imposition of the death penalty on any juvenile who has been tried as an adult, which category can include juveniles under 16 at the time of the offense, it is obviously impossible for the plurality to rely upon any evolved societal consensus discernible in legislation—or at least discernible in the legislation of this society, which is assuredly all that is relevant.⁴ Thus, the plurality falls back upon what it promises will be an examination of "the behavior of juries." Ante, at 13. It turns out not to be that, perhaps because of the inconvenient fact that no fewer than 5 murderers who committed their crimes under the age of 16 were sentenced to death, in five different States, between the years 1984 and 1986. V. Streib, Death Penalty for Juveniles 168-169 (1987). Instead, the plurality examines the statistics on capital executions, which are of course substantially lower than those for capital sentences because of various factors, most notably the exercise of executive clemency. See Streib, Death Penalty for Children 619. Those statistics show, unsurprisingly, that capital punishment for persons who committed crimes under the age of 16 is rare. We are not discussing whether the Constitution requires such procedures as will continue to cause it to be rare, but whether the Constitution prohibits it entirely. The plurality takes it to be persuasive evidence that social attitudes have changed to embrace such a prohibition—changed so clearly and permanently as to be irrevocably enshrined in the 1982); and New Jersey lowered its waiver age from 16 to 14 for certain aggravated offenses; N. J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:4A-26 (West 1987).

⁴The plurality's reliance upon Amnesty International's account of what it pronounces to be civilized standards of decency in other countries, ante, at 12-13, and n. 32, is totally inappropriate as a means of establishing the fundamental beliefs of this nation. That 40% of our States do not rule out capital punishment for 15-year-old felons is determinative of the question before us here, even if that position contradicts the uniform view of the rest of the world. We must never forget that it is a Constitution for the United States of America that we are expounding. The practices of other nations, particularly other democracies, can be relevant to determining whether a practice uniform among our people is not merely an historical accident, but rather so "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty" that it occupies a place not merely in our mores but, text permitting, in our Constitution as well. See Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U. S. 319, 325 (1937) (Cardozo, J.). But where there is not first a settled consensus among our own people, the views of other nations, however enlightened the Justices of this Court may think them to be, cannot be imposed upon Americans through the Constitution. In the present case, therefore, the fact that a majority of foreign nations would not impose capital punishment upon persons under 16 at the time of the crime is of no more relevance than the fact that a majority of them would not impose capital punishment at all, or have standards of due process quite different from our own.

Constitution—that in this century all of the 18 to 20 executions of persons below 16 when they committed crimes occurred before 1948.

Even assuming that the execution rather than the sentencing statistics are the pertinent data, and further assuming that a four-decade trend is adequate to justify calling a constitutional halt to what may well be a pendulum-swing in social attitudes, the statistics are frail support for the existence of the relevant trend. There are many reasons that adequately account for the drop in executions other than the premise of general agreement that no 15-year-old murderer should ever be executed. Foremost among them, of course, was a reduction in public support for capital punishment in general. Of the 14 States (including the District of Columbia) that currently have no death penalty statute, 11 have acquired that status since 1950. V. Streib, Death Penalty for Juveniles 42, Table 3-1. That reduction in willingness to impose capital punishment (which may reasonably be presumed to have been felt even in those States that did not entirely abolish it), combined with the modern trend, constitutionalized in Lockett v. Ohio, 438 U. S. 586 (1978), towards individualized sentencing determinations rather than automatic death sentences for certain crimes, reduced the total number of executions nationwide from an average of 1,272 per decade in the first half of the century to 254 per decade since then. See V. Streib, Death Penalty for Juveniles 56, Table 4-1. A society less ready to impose the death penalty, and entirely unwilling to impose it without individualized consideration, will of course pronounce death for a crime committed by a person under 16 very rarely. There is no absolutely no basis, however, for attributing that phenomenon to a modern consensus that such an execution should never occur—any more than it would have been accurate to discern such a consensus in 1927 when, despite a level of total executions almost five times higher than that of the post-1950 period, there had been no execution for crime committed by juveniles under the age of 16 for almost 17 years. That that did not reflect a new societal absolute was demonstrated by the fact that in approximately the next 17 years there were 10 such executions. Id., at 191-208.

In sum, the statistics of executions demonstrate nothing except the fact that our society has always agreed that executions of 15-year-old criminals should be rare, and in more modern times has agreed that they (like all other executions) should be even rarer still. There is no rational basis for discerning in that a societal judgment that no one so much as a day under 16 can ever be mature and morally responsible enough to deserve that penalty; and there is no justification except our own predilection for converting a statistical rarity of occurrence into an absolute constitutional ban. One must surely fear that, now that the Court has taken the first step of requiring individualized consideration in capital cases, today's decision begins a second stage of converting into constitutional rules the general results of that individuation. One could readily run the same statistical argument with respect to other classes of defendants. Between 1930 and 1955, for example, 30 women were executed in the United States. Only 3 were executed between then and 1986—and none in the 22-year period between 1962 and 1984. Proportionately, the drop is as impressive as that which the plurality points to in 15-year-old executions. (From 30 in 25 years to 3 in the next 31 years, versus from 18 in 50 years to potentially 1—the present defendant—in the next 40 years.) Surely the conclusion is not that it is unconstitutional to impose capital punishment upon a woman.⁵

⁵I leave to a footnote my discussion of the plurality's reliance upon the

If one believes that the data the plurality relies upon are effective to establish, with the requisite degree of certainty, a constitutional consensus in this society that no person can ever be executed for a crime committed under the age of 16, it is difficult to see why the same judgment should not extend to crimes committed under the age of 17, or of 18. The frequency of such executions shows an almost equivalent drop in recent years. Id., at 191-208; and of the 18 States that have enacted age limits upon capital punishment, only 3 have selected the age of 16, only 4 the age of 17, and all the rest the age of 18, ante, at 11, n. 29. It seems plain to me, in other words, that there is no clear line here, which suggests that the plurality is inappropriately acting in a legislative rather than a judicial capacity. Doubtless at some age a line does exist—as it has always existed in the common law, see supra, at 6—below which a juvenile can never be considered fully responsible for murder. The evidence that the views of our society, so steadfast and so uniform that they have become part of the agreed-upon laws that we live by, regard that absolute age to be 16 is nonexistent.

B

Having avoided any attempt to justify its holding on the basis of the original understanding of what was "cruel and unusual punishment," and having utterly failed in justifying its holding on the basis of "evolving standards of decency" evidenced by "the work product of state legislatures and sentencing juries," ante, at 4, the plurality proceeds, in Part V of the opinion, to set forth its views regarding the desirability of ever imposing capital punishment for a murder committed by a 15-year-old. That discussion begins with the recitation of propositions upon which there is "broad agreement" within our society, namely, that "punishment should be directly related to the personal culpability of the criminal defendant," and that "adolescents as a class are less mature and responsible than adults." Ante, at 15. It soon proceeds, however, to the conclusion that "[g]iven the lesser culpability of the juvenile offender, the teenager's capacity for growth, and society's fiduciary obligations to its children," none of the rationales for the death penalty can apply to the execution of a 15-year-old criminal, so that it is "nothing more than the purposeless and needless imposition of pain and suffering." Ante, at 19, quoting Coker v. Georgia, 433 U. S., at 592. On this, as we have seen, there is assuredly not general agreement. Nonetheless, the plurality would make it one of the fundamental laws governing our society solely because they have an "abiding conviction" that it is so, ante, at 15, n. 37, quoting Coker v. Georgia, supra, at 598.

This is in accord with the proposition set out at the beginning of the plurality's discussion in Part V, that "[a]lthough the judgments of legislatures, juries, and prosecutors weigh fact that in most or all States, juveniles under 16 cannot vote, sit on a jury, marry without parental consent, participate in organized gambling, patronize pool halls, pawn property, or purchase alcohol, pornographic materials, or cigarettes. Ante, at 6-7, and nn. 10-14. Our cases sensibly suggest that constitutional rules relating to the maturity of minors must be drawn with an eye to the decision for which the maturity is relevant. See Fare v. Michael C., 442 U. S. 707, 725-727 (1979) (totality of the circumstances test for juvenile waiver of Fifth Amendment rights permits evaluation of the juvenile's age, experience, education, background, and intelligence, and into whether he has the capacity to understand the warnings given him); Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U. S. 622, 634-637, 642 (1979) (abortion decision differs in important ways from other decisions that may be made during minority). It is surely constitutional for a State to believe that the degree of maturity that is necessary fully to appreciate the pros and cons of smoking cigarettes, or even of marrying, may be somewhat greater than the degree necessary fully to appreciate the pros and cons of brutally killing a human being.

heavily in the balance, it is for us ultimately to judge whether the Eighth Amendment permits imposition of the death penalty." Ante, at 15, quoting Enmund v. Florida, 458 U. S., at 797. I reject that proposition in the sense intended here. It is assuredly "for us ultimately to judge" what the Eighth Amendment permits, but that means it is for us to judge whether certain punishments are forbidden because, despite what the current society thinks, they were forbidden under the original understanding of "cruel and unusual," compare Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U. S. 483 (1954); or because they come within current understanding of what is "cruel and unusual," because of the "evolving standards of decency" of our national society; but not because they are out of accord with the perceptions of decency, or of penology, or of mercy, entertained—or strongly entertained, or even held as an "abiding conviction"—by a majority of the small and unrepresentative segment of our society that sits on this Court. On its face, the phrase "cruel and unusual punishments" limits the evolving standards appropriate for our consideration to those entertained by the society rather than those dictated by our personal consciences.

Because I think the views of this Court on the policy questions discussed in Part V of the plurality opinion to be irrelevant, I make no attempt to refute them. It suffices to say that there is another point of view, suggested in the following passage written by our esteemed former colleague Justice Powell, whose views the plurality several times invokes for support, ante, at 5, 16:

"Minors who become embroiled with the law range from the very young up to those on the brink of majority. Some of the older minors become fully "street-wise," hardened criminals, deserving no greater consideration than that properly accorded all persons suspected of crime." Fare v. Michael C., 442 U. S. 707, 734, n. 4 (1979) (Powell, J., dissenting).

The view that it is possible for a 15-year-old to come within this category uncontestedly prevailed when the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments were adopted, and, judging from the actions of the society's democratically elected representatives, still persuades a substantial segment of the people whose "evolving standards of decency" we have been appointed to discern rather than decree. It is not necessary, as the plurality's opinion suggests, that "we [be] persuaded," ante, at 19, of the correctness of the people's views.

III

If I understand JUSTICE O'CONNOR's separate concurrence correctly, it agrees (1) that we have no constitutional authority to set aside this death penalty unless we can find it contrary to a firm national consensus that persons younger than 16 at the time of their crime cannot be executed, and (2) that we cannot make such a finding. It does not, however, reach the seemingly inevitable conclusion that (3) we therefore have no constitutional authority to set aside this death penalty. Rather, it proceeds (in Part II) to state that since (a) we have treated the death penalty "differently from all other punishments," ante, at 8, imposing special procedural and substantive protections not required in other contexts, and (b) although we cannot actually find any national consensus forbidding execution for crimes committed under 16, there may perhaps be such a consensus, therefore (c) the Oklahoma statutes plainly authorizing the present execution by treating 15-year-old felons (after individuated findings) as adults, and authorizing execution of adults, are not adequate, and what is needed is a statute explicitly stating that "15-year-olds can be guilty of capital crimes."

First, of course, I do not agree with (b)—that there is any doubt about the nonexistence of a national consensus. The concurrence produces the doubt only by arbitrarily refusing to believe that what the laws of the Federal Government and 19 States clearly provide for represents a "considered judgment." Ante, at 5. Second, I do not see how (c) follows from (b)—how the problem of doubt about whether what the Oklahoma laws permit is contrary to a firm national consensus and therefore unconstitutional is solved by making absolutely sure that the citizens of Oklahoma really want to take this unconstitutional action. And finally, I do not see how the procedural and substantive protections referred to in (a) provide any precedent for what is done in (c). Those special protections for capital cases, such as the prohibition of unguided discretion, Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U. S. 153, 176-196 (1976) (opinion of Stewart, Powell, and STEVENS, JJ.) and the prohibition of automatic death sentences for certain crimes, Woodson v. North Carolina, 428 U. S. 280, 289-301 (1976) (opinion of Stewart, Powell, and STEVENS, JJ.), were not drawn from a hat, but were thought to be (once again) what a national consensus required. I am unaware of any national consensus, and the concurrence does not suggest the existence of any, that the death penalty for felons under 16 can only be imposed by a single statute that explicitly addresses that subject. Thus, part (c) of the concurrence's argument, its conclusion, could be replaced with almost anything. There is no more basis for imposing the particular procedural protection it announces than there is for imposing a requirement that the death penalty for felons under 16 be adopted by a two-thirds vote of each house of the State Legislature, or by referendum, or by bills printed in 10-point type. I am also left in some doubt whether this new requirement will be lifted (since its supposed rationale would disappear) when enough States have complied with it to render the nonexistence of a national consensus against such executions no longer doubtful; or only when enough States have done so to demonstrate that there is a national consensus in favor of such executions; or never.

It could not possibly be the concurrence's concern that this death sentence is a fluke—a punishment not really contemplated by Oklahoma law but produced as an accidental result of its interlocking statutes governing capital punishment and the age for treating juveniles as adults. The statutes, and their consequences, are quite clear. The present case, moreover, is of such prominence that it has received extensive coverage not only in the Oklahoma press but nationally. It would not even have been necessary for the Oklahoma legislature to act in order to remedy the miscarriage of its intent, if that is what this sentence was. The Governor of Oklahoma, who can certainly recognize a frustration of the will of the citizens of Oklahoma more readily than we, would certainly have used his pardon power if there was some mistake here. What the concurrence proposes is obviously designed to nullify rather than effectuate the will of the people of Oklahoma, even though the concurrence cannot find that will to be unconstitutional.

What the concurrence proposes is also designed, of course, to make it more difficult for all States to enact legislation resulting in capital punishment for murderers under 16 when they committed their crimes. It is difficult to pass a law saying explicitly "15-year-olds can be executed," just as it would be difficult to pass a law saying explicitly "blind people can be executed," or "white-haired grandmothers can be executed," or "mothers of two-year-olds can be executed." But I know of no authority whatever for our specifying the precise form that state legislation must take, as opposed to its constitutionally required content. We have in the past studiously avoided that sort of interference in the States' legislative processes, the heart of their sovereignty. Placing restraints upon the manner in which the States make their laws, in order to give 15-year-old criminals special protection against capital punishment, may well be a good idea, as perhaps is the abolition of capital punishment entirely. It is not, however, an idea it is ours to impose. Thus, while the concurrence purports to be adopting an approach more respectful of States' rights than the plurality, in principle it seems to me much more disdainful. It says to those jurisdictions that have laws like Oklahoma's: We cannot really say that what you are doing is contrary to national consensus and therefore unconstitutional, but since we are not entirely sure you must in the future legislate in the manner that we say.

In my view the concurrence also does not fulfill its promise of arriving at a more "narrow conclusion" than the plurality, and avoiding an "unnecessarily broad" constitutional holding. Ante, at 10. To the contrary, I think it hoists on to the deck of our Eighth Amendment jurisprudence the loose cannon of a brand new principle. If the concurrence's view were adopted, henceforth a finding of national consensus would no longer be required to invalidate state action in the area of capital punishment. All that would be needed is uncertainty regarding the existence of a national consensus, whereupon various protective requirements could be imposed, even to the point of specifying the process of legislation. If 15-year-olds must be explicitly named in capital statutes, why not those of extremely low intelligence, or those over 75, or any number of other appealing groups as to which the existence of a national consensus regarding capital punishment may be in doubt for the same reason the concurrence finds it in doubt here, viz., because they are not specifically named in the capital statutes? Moreover, the motto that "death is different" would no longer mean that the firm view of our society demands that it be treated differently in certain identifiable respects, but rather that this Court can attach to it whatever limitations seem appropriate. I reject that approach, and would prefer to it even the misdescription of what constitutes a national consensus favored by the plurality. The concurrence's approach is a solomonic solution to the problem of how to prevent execution in the present case while at the same time not holding that the execution of those under 16 when they commit murder is categorically unconstitutional. Solomon, however, was not subject to the constitutional constraints of the judicial department of a national government in a federal, democratic system.

IV

Since I find Thompson's age inadequate grounds for reversal of his sentence, I must reach the question whether the Constitution was violated by permitting the jury to consider in the sentencing stage the color photographs of Charles Keene's body. Thompson contends that this rendered his sentencing proceeding so unfair as to deny him due process of law.

The photographs in question, showing gunshot wounds in the head and chest, and knife slashes in the throat, chest and abdomen, were certainly probative of the aggravating circumstance that the crime was "especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel. The only issue, therefore, is whether they were unduly inflammatory. We have never before held that the excessively inflammatory character of concededly relevant evidence can form the basis for a constitutional attack, and I would decline to do so in this case. If there is a point at which inflammatoriness so plainly exceeds evidentiary worth as to violate the federal Constitution, it has not been reached here. The balancing of relevance and prejudice is generally a state evidentiary issue, which we do not sit to review.

Lisenba v. California, 314 U. S. 219, 227-228 (1941).

For the foregoing reasons, I respectfully dissent from the judgment of the Court.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

I

In a capital case against a sixteen year old defendant, the trial court admitted into evidence two gruesome photographs of the murder victim. The Court of Appeals stated that admitting the "ghastly, color" photographs into evidence was error that served no purpose other than to inflame the jury, but found that the error was harmless because evidence of the defendant's guilt was so strong. The first question presented is:

May the admission of inflammatory evidence in a capital case against a sixteen year old defendant be deemed harmless error merely because of strong evidence of guilt, when such evidence also prejudices the defendant's right to fair, full jury consideration of all mitigating circumstances—including age—during death penalty deliberations?

II

The second question presented is:

Whether the infliction of the death penalty on an individual who was a child of fifteen at the time of the crime constitutes cruel and unusual punishment under the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States?

 3. The Eighth Amendment requires that a sentencing court give careful, particularized consideration to the character and background of the defendant in order to assess the fundamental justice of the death penalty. This principle mandates that no child be sentenced to die unless the sentencing court finds that the child is morally culpable to the same degree as an adult and that the child is beyond all hope of rehabilitation..... 33

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeals is published as Thompson v. State at 724 P.2d 780. The opinion is reproduced in the Joint Appendix.

Although there is no formal or reported trial court opinion, the Judgment and Sentence on Conviction filed in the District Court of Grady County is set forth in the Joint Appendix. [JA 34-35, R. 512]

Also, set forth in the Joint Appendix is the Certification Order, in which the District Court of Grady County decided to hold petitioner accountable as if he were an adult under 10 Okla. Stat. § 1112 [JA 5-8], and the Order of the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals Affirming Certification. [JA 32-33, R. 510-11].

JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction to consider this case pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1257(3). The opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeals was entered on August 29, 1986. The Court of Criminal Appeals denied a timely petition for rehearing on September 24, 1986. On November 18, 1986, Mr. Justice White entered an order extending the time for petitioning for a writ of certiorari up to and including December 23, 1986. This Court granted the petition for writ of certiorari on February 23, 1987.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS INVOLVED

U.S. Const., Amend. VIII:

"Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted."

U.S. Const., Amend. XIV (excerpt):

"No State shall . . . deprive any person of life . . . without due process of law . . ."

STATEMENT OF CASE

William Wayne Thompson was convicted and sentenced to die for a murder committed while he was still fifteen years of age and a child under the laws of Oklahoma.

Certification Proceedings

In 10 Okla. Stat. § 1101, the term "child" is defined as "any person under the age of eighteen (18) years, except any person sixteen (16) or seventeen (17) years of age who is charged with murder" and certain other specified offenses.¹ A person who is sixteen or seventeen and who is charged with murder is automatically considered to be adult, unless the person successfully moves to be certified as a child. 10 Okla. Stat. § 1104.2. This "automatic" certification was not the basis for trying the defendant in this case in criminal court.

In this case, the trial court decided to hold Wayne Thompson accountable in criminal proceedings "as if he were an adult" under a separate statute. 10 Okla. Stat. § 1112(b). This statute allows a child of any age who is charged with an offense that would be a felony if committed by an adult to be tried in criminal court, if (i) the state can establish "the prosecutive merit" of the case, and (ii) if the court certifies "that such child shall be held accountable for its [sic] acts as if he were an adult." This certification may occur only after the court has examined whether there are "prospects for reasonable rehabilitation of the child within the juvenile system."

The state initiated a proceeding pursuant to 10 Okla. Stat. § 1112(b). Petition for Delinquency and Accountability, Case No. JFJ-83-12. [JA 3-4]² The petition asked, in part, that the District Court find that the boy was "competent and had the mental capacity to know and appreciate the wrongfulness of his . . . act." [JA 4].

After a hearing on whether the case had prosecutive merit on March 29, 1983, the District Court found probable cause to believe that the defendant had committed first degree murder:

¹ Pertinent statutes, including 10 Okla. Stat. § 1101, are included in Appendix A to this brief.

² References to the Record on Appeal are designated [R. ____]. Citations to the transcript of the petitioner's trial are designated [Tr. ____]. References to the Joint Appendix are [JA ____].

On April 21, 1983, the District Court held an "amenability" hearing. On the same day as this hearing, the District Court filed a Certification Order. [JA 5-8] The court found:

- (i) The boy was accused of "a very serious offense to the community" that had been "committed in an aggressive, violent, premeditated and willful manner." [JA 5]
- (ii) The alleged offense was against a person. [JA 5]
- (iii) The boy did not have a high I.Q., but he "knows right from wrong and understands the consequences of his actions and . . . he just doesn't care." The boy "has the sophistication and maturity necessary to understand and appreciate the wrongful nature of his actions." [JA 6]
- (iv) The boy's record included nine prior arrests. He had previously received counseling and had once been adjudicated a delinquent child, before being placed on probation. [JA 6]
- (v) "This juvenile is not amenable to any rehabilitation efforts as long as he remains in the juvenile justice system." This finding was based, in part, on testimony of witnesses from the Oklahoma Department of Human Services, who "could offer no possible placement within the Department with any services that hold out any reasonable prospect for rehabilitation of this juvenile." [JA 6-7]
- (vi) The offense did not occur while the juvenile was escaping from an institution for delinquent children. [JA 7]

On the basis of these findings, the trial court decided that William Wayne Thompson should be held accountable for his acts "as if he were an adult." Id.

Trial

Wayne Thompson was tried between December 4 and December 9, 1983 in the District Court of Grady County, Oklahoma for the murder of Charles Keene. [JA 1-2]

A. Evidence Of Motive

The only apparent motive for Keene's murder, according to evidence presented by both prosecution and defense, was the Thompson-Mann family's anger over Keene's repeated abuse of his former wife, Vicky Keene, sister of defendants Anthony Mann and Wayne Thompson.

On the afternoon of January 22, Anthony Mann, Danny Mann, and Vicky Keene visited Charles Keene at his former wife's trailer in order "to talk some sense into Charles." In Mrs. Keene's words, they were "trying to talk him into leaving . . . [to] get out of our lives." They had no success. [Tr: 588-89, 715] According to testimony of Mrs. Keene and Danny Mann, Charles Keene was "messed up" from paint sniffing. [Tr: 588, 716] When Vicky Keene asked Charles Keene for her car keys so that he could not take her car away, [Tr: 589] Charles said the keys were in the car.

While Mrs. Keene looked, in Danny Mann's words, "we said 'Charles, you're going to give us the keys or we're going to get them from you.' So we started kind of easing forward toward him . . ." [Tr: 717] Keene grabbed a knife, which Anthony Mann knocked from his hand. [Tr: 717] The two men grabbed Keene, held and searched him, took the car keys and were leaving when Keene again picked up the knife and tried to stab Danny Mann. [Tr: 717] Mrs. Keene observed her brothers running out of the trailer. She also saw Keene, butcher knife in hand, before he closed the trailer door: [Tr: 589-90] The Manns and Mrs. Keene then reported the incident to the local sheriff, but they were told that nothing could be done. [Tr: 590]

The trailer incident was one of many episodes in a violent and tragic matrimonial conflict between the Keenes. The two were married for seven years, but had been divorced approximately two years before Keene's death. When called as a prosecution witness at the defendant's trial, Mrs. Keene stated that being married to and living with Charles was a nightmare. [Tr: 610] Despite the divorce and despite her wishes, he often stayed in his ex-wife's home.³ When she "would call the law out there[,]

³ Mrs. Keene admitted that she deliberately had a child by her ex-husband. She stated that she wanted a child, but that she felt fearful if they wouldn't do nothing" about Keene's presence. [Tr: 591; see also Tr: 622-23] Mrs. Keene said that Keene had beaten her many times [Tr: 611] and had shot at her. [Tr: 611]

Wayne Thompson did not testify at his trial, but the record suggests additional reasons for his rage at Keene. According to the report of Dr. Helen Klein, a clinical psychologist who testified for the prosecution, the boy "described Charles Keene, his deceased brother-in-law, as an 'unemployed glue sniffer,' who 'beat up on me all the time . . . when I was younger he kicked me.'" [R:488] Keene also started the boy "sniffing" paint. [Tr: 612, 694-95]

B. The Murder Of Charles Keene

On the evening of January 22, Anthony Mann (age twenty-seven), Richard Jones (age twenty-four), Bobby Joe Glass (age nineteen) and Thompson left the home of Dorothy Thompson, the boy's mother. [Tr: 631-32] Before leaving, Thompson told his girl friend that "we're going to kill Charles." [Tr: 685]

In the early morning of January 23, Malcolm "Possum" Brown and his wife, Lucille, were awakened in their home by the sound of a gunshot. [Tr: 469, 484, 494] Then, someone pounded on their front door shouting: "Possum, open the door, let me in. They're going to kill me." [Tr: 469, 494] Brown went to the front door, looked out, and saw four men beating another man. [Tr: 471, 474] Brown also heard one of the assailants say, "[t]his is for the way you treated our sister." [Tr: 475-76] While she had a child by another man. [Tr: 591]

Mrs. Keene supported her family without Keene's help [Tr: 601, 610]; he had not worked for the last three or four years prior to his death. [Tr: 610] Aggravating the conflict, Keene had taken their six year old child to Texas. She moved to Texas to try to get the child back. [Tr: 613]

⁴ As a result, Anthony Mann had given her his gun for her protection. After the incident on the afternoon of January 22, she bought shells for the gun. [Tr: 600] The gun and shells were used that night to kill Keene.

Brown spoke with police on the telephone, the men took the victim away in a car. [Tr: 477, 498]

Several hours after leaving home, Thompson and the three men returned to Dorothy Thompson's house. [Tr: 686] The boy was wet from the chest down. He was visibly shaken and was crying. [Tr: 568, 686-87] Charlotte Mann, the former wife of Anthony Mann, observed him at this time. The boy's mother was hugging him and trying to calm him. In Mann's words, "he told Dorothy [his mother] that he killed him. Charles was dead and Vicky didn't have to worry about him anymore." [Tr: 568] He told his girl friend that they had killed Keene and thrown his body into the river. [Tr: 687-88] Later, apparently after the boy had changed clothes, he was still upset and crying. [Tr: 511-12]

At trial, the prosecution introduced evidence of other fragmentary accounts of the crime. [Tr: 508-512, 521-25, 567-68, 574-76, 634-35] According to Mann's statements to his ex-wife, Charlotte, "they went . . . to Vicky's house and got Charles and they went in and told him to pack his suitcase[,] that they were taking him to the highway because he was leaving. . . . Charles left with them and they ended up at Possum Brown's house and Charles got out and ran and they chased him. . . ." [Tr: 574; see also Tr: 522] The gun went off during Keene's attempt to escape, but Keene was not shot at the Browns'. [Tr: 522, 574-75] After the beating described by the Browns, the four took Keene to another location on the Washita River. [Tr: 574-75] There, Keene was shot twice—once by Thompson, once by Glass. [Tr: 521-22, 574-75] Afterwards, according to Glass' admissions, Thompson cut Keene "so the fish could eat his body." [Tr: 521] Jones and Thompson then threw Keene's body into the river. [Tr: 522]

C. Photographs And Medical Evidence

Dr. Fred Jordon, chief medical examiner for Oklahoma, testified that the victim had been beaten, shot twice and that his throat, chest and abdomen had been cut. [Tr: 661-62, 667-69]

In addition to the medical examiner's testimony, the court overruled defense objections and allowed introduction of two color photographs of the victim's remains, which had been in the Washita River for almost one month. [Tr: 627-30] Indeed, during the prosecution's opening statement, the district attorney gave the jury a preview of what they would see:

You're going to see photographs and you're going to see pictures of the entire recovery scene. You're going to see Charles Keene as he's pulled out of that river. He's covered with mud. You're going to see the officers and Dr. Crowell who was the initial medical examiner there on the shore of the Washita. He'll tell you . . . [t]hat Charles Keene had what appeared to be a larva type substance, maggots, larva coming out of his body.

[Tr: 362]

D. Penalty Phase

In the sentencing phase, the State sought a death penalty based on two alleged aggravating circumstances:

- (1) "The murder was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel"; and
- (2) "The existence of a probability that the defendant would commit criminal acts of violence that would constitute a continuing threat to society." [JA 12, R. 88]

1. Prosecutor's Use Of Photographs

In an opening statement during the penalty phase, the prosecuting attorney said that the State would rely upon evidence introduced during the guilt phase to show that the murder was especially heinous, atrocious and cruel. [Tr: 774-75] Thus, the color photographs of the victim's remains were also presented to the jury during the penalty phase of trial.

Since the jury had not requested to see the photographs while deliberating on guilt, the prosecutor complained in closing argument during the penalty phase:

[T]here is something in this case that I want to tell you in the very beginning, I did not show you the photographs, you did not ask that the photographs of Charles Keene, the physical evidence be produced to you upstairs in the jury room in the first phase of this trial. I didn't, but you've got to ask for these exhibits to have them brought up to that jury room.

[Tr: 848] Later, the prosecutor placed the photographs on the podium in front of the jury and for five or ten minutes waved them in front of the jurors. [Tr: 857] The judge overruled the defense counsel's objection, but warned the prosecutor to stop waving the pictures in front of the jury. After a detailed and graphic description of the crime with the aid of the inflammatory photographs, the prosecutor closed: "Its not the sixteen year old, folks, that can do that." [Tr: 865]

2. State's Evidence And Argument To Show Probability Of Future Acts Of Violence

In its attempt to show that the boy would commit more violent acts, the state relied on evidence of his reputation in the community, his arrest record, his failure in one juvenile rehabilitation program, and the opinion of Dr. Helen Klein, a clinical psychologist. After summarizing the boy's arrest record, Klein characterized him as "physically aggressive" and "a bully, an anti-social person." [Tr: 780] She expressed her view that the boy "will . . . become a hardened criminal" and "will become more violent" if he just goes to prison. [Tr: 783-84]⁵

A far different description of the boy had emerged from Dr. Klein's psychological report, which was apparently used by the District Court during certification proceedings. [JA 6, 7] The trial judge attached it to his sentencing report. [R. 487-91]

During the initial stage of the interview, he attempted to portray himself as macho, tough and cavalier. This facade

⁵ Apparently, Dr. Klein's pessimism was based, at least in part, on her assessment of Oklahoma prisons. On cross-examination, Dr. Klein responded to defense counsel's suggestion that "every modern prison" gives psychological help to inmates. She responded: "I'd have to know how you define a modern prison. I know that in the State of Oklahoma there is very little psychological services available, or psychiatric for that matter." [Tr: 781] tended to dissipate as his anxiety abated.

Wayne said he was in special education classes and had entered the 10th grade before dropping out of school in the fall of 1982. Wayne said he had sniffed paint for approximately seven months last year, but quit of his own volition.

Individuals who obtain MMPI [Minnesota Multiphasic Personality Inventory] profiles similar to Wayne's typically are described as hyperactive, restless and impulsive, and as persons who may keep people at a distance (emotional alienation) and show poor social judgment. A profile such as that obtained by Wayne must be interpreted with caution as it suggests the possible effect of a response set which may have led to exaggeration or distortion of his current status. Such a profile reveals the possible presence of a desire to appear independent of social ties and to "fake bad," i.e., to exaggerate symptomatology.

Rorschach test data support the MMPI data in that test results are indicative of a person whose entire focus is external. He is excitable, hostile, and is responsive to the external world to the extent he cannot organize his inner experience. He has a stereotypical, concrete view of the world and demonstrates little ability to organize or to conceptualize his experience beyond that. Wayne does not have enough ego to handle or to control his impulses and therefore tends to act them out.

[R. 487-91]

E. Jury Instructions

While deliberating over whether the defendant was guilty, the jury had sent the judge a note which asked: "Has the Defendant been certified as an adult?" The trial court answered "[y]es," without distinguishing between the question asked by the jury—whether the boy had "been certified as an adult"—and the actual certification order, which provided only that he should be held accountable "as if he were an adult." (Emphasis supplied) [JA 16]

In the penalty phase, after the jury was instructed that it could not fix the defendant's punishment at death unless it first found that one or more aggravating factors was present, [JA 22] the trial judge discussed mitigating circumstances. Instruction No. 7 stated:

Mitigating circumstances are those which, in fairness and mercy, may be considered as extenuating or reducing the degree of moral culpability or blame. The determination of what are mitigating circumstances is for you as jurors to resolve under the facts and circumstances of this case.

[JA 23] Instruction No. 8 then reminded the jury that "[e]vidence has been offered as to . . . [t]he existence of youthfulness of the defendant." [JA 24] The trial court's jury instructions during the penalty phase did not state that the defendant's age was a mitigating factor.

After the jury started deliberations in the penalty phase, it sent a question to the trial judge: "Please define mitigating." The answer of the judge was: "You have your instructions, please continue deliberation." [JA 28, Tr. 866] Later, the jury sent a second note asking whether defendant would be eligible for parole if sentenced to life imprisonment. The judge answered: "That is an executive decision, not judicial. You have your instructions." [JA 29, Tr. 866-67]

F. The Death Sentence

The jury fixed defendant's sentence at death on the basis of a single aggravating circumstance—that the crime was "especially heinous, atrocious or cruel." The jury was persuaded by the prosecutor's arguments that the boy could not be rehabilitated. It declined to accept the prosecutor's additional claim that the boy would commit violent criminal acts in the future. [JA 30, Tr. 870]

Order Of The Court Of Criminal Appeals Affirming Certification

The Court of Criminal Appeals affirmed the certification of this boy to stand trial as if he were an adult on January 13, over one month after his conviction and death sentence. [JA 32-33]

The Judgment Of The Court Of Criminal Appeals Of Oklahoma
The Court of Criminal Appeals affirmed the judgment and sentence. The admission of the "ghostly, color photographs with so little probative value" was found to be harmless error because evidence of the boy's guilt was "so strong." 724 P.2d at 782-83.

The Court of Criminal Appeals briefly addressed the defendant's argument "that the execution of William Wayne Thompson, who was fifteen at the time of the offense, would constitute cruel and/or unusual punishment." Id. at 784. The entirety of the appellate court's discussion of this important and complex issue is as follows:

The same arguments now made by appellant were made by appellate counsel in Eddings v. State, 616 P.2d 1159 (Okla. Cr. 1980). This Court, unanimously rejecting the arguments, found that imposition of the death penalty on a minor certified to stand trial as an adult constitutes neither cruel nor unusual punishment. . . .

The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari on the issue, . . . but then decided the case on another ground. Eddings v. Oklahoma.] Upon reconsideration of the issue, we reaffirm our previous holding that once a minor is certified to stand trial as an adult, he may also, without violating the Constitution, be punished as an adult.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I

Although the traditions of Anglo-American jurisprudence allow capital punishment in many cases, imposing the death sentence for a crime committed by a fifteen year old boy, a child under state law, violates the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments.

Condemning a child or adolescent to death serves no legitimate penological purpose. No evidence suggests that the remote prospect of a death sentence for a child or adolescent is a greater deterrent than long-term imprisonment. Even an improbable death penalty may attract a few self-destructive or death-defying juveniles to commit capital crimes. Furthermore, imprisonment is more than adequate retribution and incapacitation for the crime of a fifteen year old. Of course, a sentence of death also denies a child or adolescent the right to life, the chance to grow, and all possibility of rehabilitation.

The death penalty for a fifteen year old violates contemporary standards of decency. Juvenile executions have always been rare. In part, this fact reflects the long-standing view that children must be treated and judged differently. The explanations for this special treatment are many and persuasive. Children are less mature, more impulsive, and more self-destructive. The harshest punishments are not appropriate for transgressing children and adolescents, whose crimes are often the result of victimization, abuse, and neglect. And so, even criminal law reflects the understanding that "[c]hildren have a very special place in life." Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. 104, 116 n. 12 (1982) (quoting May v. Anderson, 345 U.S. 528, 536 (1953) (Frankfurter, J., concurring)). The law is tenacious in its belief that children and adolescents are less responsible for their actions and in its hope that offending children will be rehabilitated. This Court has held consistently that even youthful offenders who commit capital crimes deserve the special consideration required by this tradition.

An increasing number of states have established minimum ages for imposition of capital punishment. No state that has decided to establish an explicit minimum age by statute has selected an age younger than sixteen. Likewise, contemporary jury sentencing patterns reflect an extreme reluctance to sentence children to death, even when authorized by law. To paraphrase Justice Stewart, in this era death sentences for juveniles are cruel and unusual in the same way that being struck by lightning is cruel and unusual. Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238, 309 (1972) (Stewart, J., concurring).

The State of Oklahoma, however, is uncommonly reluctant to respect these principles when an adolescent is accused of an intentional homicide and a prosecuting attorney asks for the death penalty. Oklahoma neither prohibits the capital punishment of children below a certain age nor establishes procedures to assure that the "relevant mitigating factor" of youth, Eddings, 455 U.S. at 116, is carefully considered prior to a death sentence.

Oklahoma's disregard of children's "very special place" in a death penalty scheme is tragically evident in the instant case. First, the court certifying Wayne Thompson to stand trial as if he were an adult did not assess his moral guilt in light of the mitigating factor of age. The emphasis in the certification process was on the seriousness of the allegations, the boy's sanity, and the capabilities of Oklahoma's juvenile system, not the boy's character and personal culpability for the murder. Second, the reliability of the jury's decision to sentence the boy to die was undermined by illegitimate prosecutorial tactics designed to distract the jury from its duty to consider carefully the mitigating factor of youth, and by jury instructions that failed to inform the jury that youth was a mitigating factor of great weight. Indeed, the jury was instructed erroneously that the boy had been certified to be an adult and that the jurors were free to decide for themselves what might be considered as a mitigating factor.

In sum, this Court has consistently adhered to the principle that the age of the defendant "bear[s] directly on the fundamental justice of imposing capital punishment." Skipper v. South Carolina, — U.S. —, 106 S.Ct. 1669, 1676 (1986) (Powell, J., joined by Burger, C.J. and Rehnquist, J., concurring). Because Oklahoma continues to disregard this elemental principle of justice for the young, this Court must vacate the death sentence in this case.

II

By placing extraordinary emphasis upon gruesome photographs of the victim during the sentencing phase of the boy's trial, the prosecutor so riveted the jury's attention to the method of the murder and the effects of post-mortem decay that he effectively distracted the jury from giving fair, full consideration to the youth and the character of the boy. As a result, there is a great and intolerable danger that the death sentence was imposed without "constitutionally indispensable," "particularized consideration," Woodson v. North Carolina, 428 U.S. 280, 304 (1976), of the boy's youth, character and record.

Although the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals was required by statute to decide whether the death sentence was the result of passion or prejudice, the court did not even consider the effect of inflammatory, gruesome photographs of the murder victim's remains used repeatedly by the prosecutor during the sentencing phase. The appellate court condemned the prosecutor's actions and held that the trial court's decision to allow the inflammatory evidence was error. Still, the appellate court upheld the defendant's conviction and death sentence, without considering how the error clearly prejudiced the boy's right to a reliable sentencing determination.

III

As this case demonstrates, the tradition of special treatment of child offenders can be difficult to maintain. Juries influenced by emotion, improper prosecutorial conduct, and the intrinsically appalling nature of murder occasionally fail to give fair, full consideration to the mitigating factor of age. This Court must protect even children who have committed capital crimes from a death penalty all too easily and yet freakishly imposed.

ARGUMENT

I

THE EXECUTION OF A PERSON WHO WAS A CHILD OF FIFTEEN AT THE TIME OF THE CRIME IS CRUEL AND UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT.

Wayne Thompson's death sentence offends the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments because his execution would be cruel and unusual punishment. There are broad and narrow grounds for this conclusion, but the common feature of petitioner's Eighth Amendment arguments is his youth.

First, the death sentence was imposed for a crime committed when the boy was fifteen years of age. The death sentence is unconstitutional for this reason alone. As the Court has explained, a punishment is cruel and unusual if:

- (i) "[I]t . . . makes no measurable contribution to acceptable goals of punishment and hence is nothing more than the purposeless and needless imposition of pain and suffering," Coker v. Georgia, 433 U.S. 584, 592 (1977) (plurality opinion of White, J.); or
- (ii) The punishment "is grossly out of proportion to the severity of the crime," id., or the individual's personal, "moral guilt" for that crime, Emmund v. Florida, 458 U.S. 782, 800 (1982).

The application of the Eighth Amendment ultimately requires this Court to render its own judgment, id. at 797, but its decision "should be informed by objective factors to the maximum possible extent." Id. at 788 (quoting Coker, 433 U.S. at 592 (plurality opinion of White, J.)). Thus, when this Court examines whether a punishment is excessive or harsh in light of society's "evolving standards of decency," Trop v. Dulles, 356 U.S. 86, 101 (1958) (plurality opinion), it looks to such factors as history and precedent, legislative judgments, international opinion and juries' sentencing decisions. Emmund, 458 U.S. at 788.

Wayne Thompson's death sentence also offends the Eighth Amendment on narrower grounds. When examining whether punishment of a particular individual violates the Eighth Amendment, this Court insists that a death sentence be based on a careful assessment of moral guilt. "While the States generally have wide discretion in deciding how much retribution to exact in a given case, the death penalty, 'unique in its severity and irrevocability,' . . . requires the State to inquire into the relevant facets of 'the character and record of the individual offender.'" Tison v. Arizona, ___ U.S. ___, 55 U.S.L.W.

(Stevens, J., dissenting) (citing Enmund, 458 U.S. at 800-01). See also Tison v. Arizona, 55 U.S.L.W. at 4-199-50.

Although the execution of an adult for retribution is constitutionally permissible, this justification for the death penalty loses all legitimacy when the object of capital punishment is a child or adolescent. Juveniles do not "deserve" the harshest punishments in the same way that mature, responsible adults might. Those who kill are not held personally responsible for murder unless they are deemed to have the capacity to function as moral beings, who can evaluate their behavior in light of socially accepted values. Only those who are deemed to act out of a fully developed moral awareness, and who choose to act at odds with morality, are deemed "deserving" of the full measure of punishment allowed by law. See Enmund, 458 U.S. at 800-01.

Adolescents are not yet fully operational moral beings even though the capacity to form moral standards to guide behavior begins to emerge in adolescence. "[L]arge groups of moral concepts and ways of thought only attain meaning at successively advanced ages and require the extensive background of social experience and cognitive growth represented by the age factor." Kohlberg, The Development of Children's Orientations Toward a Moral Order, 6 Vita humana 11, 30 (1963). While struggling to establish their own identity, adolescents are still significantly dependent upon their parents for support and approval. E. Erickson, Childhood and Society 261-63 (2d ed. 1963). See generally E. Erickson, Identity: Youth and Crisis (1968); P. Mussen, J. Conger & J. Kagan, Child Development and Personality (5th ed. 1979). Like younger children, adolescents are so profoundly dependent upon their parents and families to define morally appropriate boundaries for their behavior, D. Offer & J. Offer, From teenage to young manhood: A psychological study (1975), that they cannot be regarded as morally culpable for homicidal behavior to the same degree as adults. Adolescents are also susceptible to the suggestions of others—particularly peers. E. Erickson, Childhood and Society 261-63 (2d ed. 1963). Adolescence is a 4496, 4499 (Apr. 21, 1987) (quoting Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 187 (1976) and Woodson v. North Carolina, 428 U.S. 280, 304 (1976)). Oklahoma did not fulfill this constitutional duty to assess carefully moral guilt in light of mitigating factors, particularly the boy's youth.

A. Condemnation Of Children Makes No Measurable Contribution to Legitimate Goals Of Punishment.

"There must be a valid penological reason for choosing from among the many criminal defendants the few who are sentenced to death." Spaziano v. Florida, 468 U.S. 447, 460 n.7 (1984). In general, the state may punish offenders to achieve one or more of four objectives:

(1) [T]o rehabilitate the offender; (2) to incapacitate him from committing offenses in the future; (3) to deter others from committing offenses; or (4) to assuage the victim's or the community's desire for revenge or retribution.

Spaziano v. Florida, 468 U.S. at 477-78 (Stevens, J., dissenting). See also, e.g., Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. at 183 (Stewart, J., plurality opinion).

1. Retribution Is Not A Valid Penological Goal For The Execution Of Children And Adolescents.

As this Court stated in Spaziano v. Florida, 468 U.S. 447, 462 (1984): "[R]etribution clearly plays a more prominent role in a capital case." Retribution is a legitimate goal of the state because there is a societal need for "particularly offensive conduct" to be met with the punishment that it "deserves." Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. at 183 (plurality opinion). "The instinct for retribution is part of the nature of man." Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238, 308 (1972) (Stewart, J., concurring). However, retribution justifies an execution only if a defendant's culpability is of the highest degree. "[I]n the final analysis, capital punishment rests on not a legal but an ethical judgment—an assessment of what we called in Enmund the 'moral guilt' of the defendant." Spaziano v. Florida, 468 U.S. at 481 period characterized by impulsive, thoughtless behavior often evoked by strong emotion. Indeed, the only psychological evidence in the record—prepared by the state's witness, Dr. Helen Kleit—portrays Wayne Thompson as "hyperactive," "restless," "[desir[ing] to appear independent of social ties and to 'fake bad,'" "responsive to the external world," unable "to organize his inner experience," and lacking "ego . . . to control his impulses." [R. 487-91] This portrait of a troubled boy could be that of many other adolescents. It is also far different than the image drawn by the prosecutor, who was so intent on denying the reality and meaning of Wayne Thompson's youth.

Thus, the emerging ability of adolescents to act out of a fully developed moral awareness is continually under assault. Adolescents' crimes are more often the products of powerful desires to please others or of sudden strong impulses; these crimes are less likely to be the result of coldly deliberate, thoughtful decisions to violate the known moral precepts of society.⁴ For these reasons, adolescents do not deserve death as punishment: They simply are not personally responsible for their homicidal behavior in the sense that Enmund and Tison require. Children and adolescents by their nature deserve understanding and treatment—or at least the chance to grow—rather than the revenge of an outraged society anxious to "kill them back."

2. The Remote Possibility Of Dying For A Crime Is Not Likely To Deter A Young Offender, If The More Likely Prospect Of Long Term Imprisonment Has Already Failed As A Deterrent.

As this Court indicated in Gregg v. Georgia, evidence that the prospect of capital punishment deters capital crimes is inconclusive. Writing for the plurality, Justice Stewart found "no convincing empirical evidence either supporting or refuting this view." 428 U.S. at 185. Nevertheless, he wrote:

We may . . . assume safely that there are murderers, such as those who act in passion, for whom the threat of death has little or no deterrent effect. But for many others, the death penalty undoubtedly is a significant deterrent. There are carefully contemplated murders, such as murder for hire, where the possible penalty of death may well enter into the cold calculus that precedes the decision to act.

Id. at 185-86 (Stewart, J., plurality opinion). Of course, deterrence is logical, but logic only works for those cold, calculating individuals who do not act out of passion or impulse. Adolescents are particularly unlikely to fit this category. They are going through "the period of great instability which the crisis of adolescence produces." Haley v. Ohio, 332 U.S. 596, 599 (1948) (plurality opinion). Juveniles "generally are less mature and responsible than adults." Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. at 115-16 (footnote omitted). Adolescents tend to "live for today" with little thought of the future consequences of their actions. See, e.g., Kastenbaum, "Time and Death in Adolescence," in The Meaning of Death 99 (H. Feifel ed. 1959). "[A]dolescents may have less capacity to control their conduct and to think in long range terms than adults." Eddings, 455 U.S. at 115 n. 11 (quoting Twentieth Century Fund Task Force on Sentencing Policy Toward Young Offenders, Confronting Youth Crime 7 (1978)). Adolescents are in a developmental stage when defiance of danger and death is often not controlled by a sense of mortality. The young are attracted to—not deterred from—flirtations with death because of an immature feeling of omnipotence. Fredlund, Children and Death from the School Setting Viewpoint, 47 J. School Health 533 (1977); Miller, "Adolescent Suicide: Etiology and Treatment," in 9 Adolescent Psychiatry 327 (S. Feinstein, J. Looney, A. Schwartzberg & A. Sojrosky eds. 1981). One of the problems with juvenile behavior is not that the juveniles are cold, calculating and careful in these judgments; it is that they have no judgment at all, Parham v. J.R., 442 U.S. 584, 603 (1979), at least in the sense of considering the consequence of their behavior and deciding to proceed nevertheless. Irwin & Millstein, Biopsychological Correlates of Risk-Taking Behaviors during Adolescence, 7 J. of Adolescent Health Care 82S (Nov. 1986 Supp.). This absence of judgment derives from the adolescents' limited experience and lack of ability to calculate future consequences. The results are often tragic: Alcohol and drug abuse; reckless driving, sexual experimentation, and other self-destructive conduct. Id. "[D]uring the formative years of childhood and adolescence, minors often lack the experience, perspective, and judgment to recognize and avoid choices that could be detrimental to them." Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622, 635 (1979) (plurality opinion).

This generally accepted view of typical adolescent behavior leads to the conclusion that juveniles do not commonly engage in any "cold calculus that precedes the decision to act." Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. at 186 (Stewart, J., plurality opinion). Thus, this Court's premises underlying an assumed general deterrence of the death penalty do not apply in any reasonable manner to adolescents.

3. The Capacity Of The Young For Change, Growth And Rehabilitation Makes The Death Penalty Particularly Harsh And Inappropriate.

The death penalty totally rejects the one sentencing goal normally thought most appropriate for young offenders—rehabilitation. See, e.g., People v. Hiemel, 49 A.D.2d 769, 770, 372 N.Y.S.2d 730, 731 (1975). Execution abandons and denies the promise of adolescence—that the impulsive, antisocial acts of teenagers will naturally moderate as they become adults. Killing children and adolescents for their crimes offends the fundamental premises of juvenile justice:

[I]ncorrigibility is inconsistent with youth; . . . it is impossible to make a judgment that a fourteen-year-old youth, no matter how bad, will remain incorrigible for the rest of his life.

Workman v. Commonwealth, 429 S.W.2d 374, 378 (Ky. 1968).

Likewise, the goal of incapacitation or specific deterrence does not justify capital punishment of juvenile offenders. Unlike deterrence and retribution, "incapacitation has never been embraced as a sufficient justification for the death penalty." Spaziano v. Florida, 468 U.S. at 461. Long-term imprisonment of young offenders affords society comparable protection against their possible future crimes.

Juvenile murderers tend to be model prisoners and have very low rates of recidivism when released. D. Hamperian, The Violent Few 52 (1978); T. Sellin, The Death Penalty 102-20 (1982). Cf. Vitello, Constitutional Safeguards for Juvenile Transfer Procedure: The Ten Years Since Kent v. United States, 26 DePaul L.Rev. 23, 32-34 (1976).

Moreover, as adolescents grow into adults, they generally leave behind criminality. F. Zimring, "Background Paper," in Twentieth Century Fund Task Force on Sentencing Policy Toward Young Offenders, Confronting Youth Crime 37 (1978). Crime statistics reveal that as people move from the turbulence of adolescence to the calmer period of the early twenties, they commit fewer crimes, whether or not they are apprehended or participated in a rehabilitation program. See Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, U.S. Department of Justice, Assessing the Relationship of Adult Criminal Careers to Juvenile Careers: A Summary 4 (1982); President's Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice, The Challenge of Crime in a Free Society 55-56 (1967). Cf. Federal Bureau of Investigation, U.S. Dept. of Justice, Crime in the United States: 1978 194-96 (1979); Zimring, "American Youth Violence: Issues and Trends" in Crime and Justice: An Annual Review of Research 67 (Morris & Tonry eds. 1979) (rates of many kinds of criminality peak in mid-adolescence).

The character development which continues to take place during adolescence, until eighteen years of age, can very well overcome features of an antisocial personality that appear during adolescence. For this reason, the diagnosis of Antisocial Personality Disorder cannot be made until a person has reached eighteen years of age.

Since [the typical childhood signs of Antisocial Personality Disorder] may terminate spontaneously . . . , a diagnosis of Antisocial Personality Disorder should not be made in children; it is reserved for adults (18 or over), who have had time to show the full longitudinal pattern.

American Psychiatric Association, Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders 319 (3d ed. 1980). See also Wilson & Herrnstein, Crime and Human Nature 144-45 (1985).

B. Coudemning Any Fifteen Year Old Child To Death Violates Contemporary Standards Of Decency.

The meaning of the Eighth Amendment's prohibition of cruel and unusual punishment must be drawn "from the evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society." Trop v. Dulles, 356 U.S. at 101 (plurality opinion). See also Robinson v. California, 370 U.S. 660, 666 (1962). The application of this test requires that the Court look to objective factors such as history, legislative judgments, international opinion, and juries' sentencing decisions. Enmund v. Florida, 458 U.S. at 788-89.

1. Special Treatment Of Children And Adolescents Is An Important Part Of American Traditions Of Justice.

"Children have a very special place in life which law should reflect." May v. Anderson, 345 U.S. 528, 536 (1953) (Frankfurter, J., concurring) quoted in Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. at 116 n. 12. Examples of society's decision to treat children differently include limitations on youths' right to vote, contract, sue or be sued, dispose of property by will, marry, accept employment, purchase liquor, and drive vehicles. F. Zimmerman, The Changing Legal World of Adolescence (1982).⁷

⁷ A collection of pertinent examples of Oklahoma statutes that disable juveniles from certain activities—including driving, purchasing cigarettes, resorting to pool halls or bingo parlors—is included in Appendix A to this brief.

The dominant traditions of American law provide that people generally are not fully responsible until age eighteen. This age is the most common age of majority established in American law for noncriminal purposes. For similar reasons, the Twenty-Sixth Amendment establishes the right to vote at age eighteen. It is an irony—or even an irrationality—that children and adolescents are universally considered too immature to judge the criminal responsibility of accused defendants, and thus cannot serve on juries, but they may be subjected to the supreme liability of death for their supposed "responsibility."

That juveniles are less mature and less responsible than adults is a fact that has historically been recognized by this Court. Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. at 635 (plurality opinion). "Children, by definition, are not assumed to have the capacity to take care of themselves." Schall v. Martin, 467 U.S. 253, 265 (1984). As a result, the actions of adolescents "cannot be judged by the more exacting standards of maturity." Haley v. Ohio, 332 U.S. at 599 (plurality opinion).

The development of separate juvenile justice systems in every state manifested a rejection of harsh, adult punishment for the unlawful acts of children. See Eddings, 455 U.S. at 116 n. 12; In Re Gault, 387 U.S. 1, 15-16 (1967). However, the perception that youths should not be subjected to the harshest punishments was an informal premise of Anglo-American criminal justice well before the development of separate juvenile justice systems. Although statutes did not always explicitly give younger offenders benefit of more lenient punishments, the young did receive de facto benefits, such as shorter sentences, special incarceration facilities, community-based sanctions or outright commutation of criminal sentences. See, e.g., Fox, Juvenile Justice Reform: An Historical Perspective, 22 Stan. L. Rev. 1187 (1970). All states now set the jurisdictional age limit for their juvenile courts no lower than age sixteen. S. Davis, Rights of Juveniles: The Juvenile Justice System app. B (2d ed. 1986).

This Court has explained the reasons for the law's lenient treatment of child offenders in Eddings.

[Y]outh is more than a chronological fact. It is a time and condition of life when a person may be most susceptible to influence and to psychological damage. Our history is replete with laws and judicial recognition that minors, especially in their earlier years, generally are less mature and responsible than adults.

* * * *

"Adolescents everywhere, from every walk of life, are often dangerous to themselves and to others." The President's Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice, Task Force Report: Juvenile Delinquency and Youth Crime 41 (1967) "[A]dolescents, particularly in the early and middle teen years, are more vulnerable, more impulsive, and less self-disciplined than adults. Crimes committed by youths may be just as harmful to victims as those committed by older persons, but they deserve less punishment because adolescents may have less capacity to control their conduct and to think in long-range terms than adults." . . . 455 U.S. at 115-16 & n. 11 (footnote omitted).

Special treatment of juvenile offenders is also a reflection of the belief that the young must have time and opportunity to grow—and to escape from the disadvantages, deprivations and abuse that may account for their behavior. This special treatment derives from a prevalent, compassionate and decent sense that government must be restrained from adding undue punishment to whatever pain and handicaps have already been inflicted by fate and circumstance. This sense of restraint parallels the "belief, long held by this society, that defendants who commit criminal acts that are attributable to a disadvantaged background, or to emotional and mental problems, may be less culpable than defendants who have no such excuse." California v. Brown, ___ U.S. ___, 107 S.Ct. 837, 841 (1987) (O'Connor, J., concurring). See also Eddings, 455 U.S. at 115 n. 11 ("[Y]outh crime as such is not exclusively the offender's fault.") 2. The Execution Of Juveniles Violates Contemporary Standards Of Decency As Reflected In Legislative Attitudes.

Protection for juveniles under death penalty statutes has increased dramatically in the past quarter century. A 1962 Associated Press survey of legal possibilities in criminal proceedings involving children showed a much harsher legal environment. New York Times, Jan. 7, 1962, at 81, col. 1. Of forty-one death penalty states at that time, the minimum age for the death penalty was age seven in sixteen states, age eight in three states, age ten in three states, and ages twelve to eighteen in nineteen states.

The situation today is quite different. Currently, fifteen of thirty-six states retaining the death penalty expressly exclude youths under sixteen, seventeen or eighteen from their death penalty statutes. (Appendix B) Of these fifteen, eleven states establish a minimum age of eighteen; three states set an age seventeen limit, while one state has selected sixteen years as a minimum. No state that expressly establishes a minimum age in death penalty statutes uses an age minimum below sixteen. (Appendix B)

Since 1981, seven states have legislated minimum ages specifically for their death penalty statutes—and all selected age eighteen: Ohio (1981), Nebraska (1982), Tennessee (1984), Colorado (1985), Oregon (1985), New Jersey (1986), and Maryland (1987). Currently, several other states are considering raising the minimum age. Should A Child Who Kills Be Killed?, Washington Post Nat'l. Ed., Apr. 13, 1987, at 31.

Twelve other states establish a minimum age limit through either their juvenile court waiver statutes or their statutes giving concurrent or exclusive jurisdiction to criminal court for capital murders committed by offenders of a certain age or older. (Appendix B) Only this year, the Indiana legislature decided to raise their minimum age from ten to sixteen. (Appendix B) The death penalty statutes in an additional six states expressly require the sentencing body to consider, as a mitigating factor, the youth of the offender. (Appendix B)

Another fifteen jurisdictions completely prohibit the death penalty for all offenders.

Thus, forty-eight of fifty-one jurisdictions either prohibit the death penalty for all offenders (including juveniles), establish a minimum age between 16 and 18, prohibit any criminal court jurisdiction over juveniles ages 12 to 16, or require by statute juries and judges to consider youth as a factor mitigating against the death penalty.

Only three states have no legislative provisions for either establishing a minimum age for the death penalty or requiring that youthful age be considered a mitigating factor in the death sentencing decision. Only one of these three states, Oklahoma, currently has any prisoners under a death sentence for a crime committed under age eighteen.

3. An Emerging Consensus Of International Law And Opinion Rejects Juvenile Executions.

Human rights treaties are the most authoritative source of customary international law on the question of juvenile executions. Three major human rights treaties explicitly prohibit juvenile death penalties. Article 6(5) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, Annex to G.A. Res. 2200, 21 U.N. GAOR Res. Supp. (No. 16) 53, U.N. Doc. A/6316 (1966); Article 4(5) of the American Convention on Human Rights, O.A.S. Official Records, OEA/Ser. L/XVI/1.1, Doc. 65 Rev. 1 Corr. 1 (1970); and Article 68 of the Geneva Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, August 12, 1949, 6 U.S.T. 3516, T.I.A.S. No. 3365, 75 U.N.T.S. 287. Each of these treaties prohibits the death penalty for crimes committed below the minimum age of eighteen. Hartman, "Unusual Punishment: The Domestic Effects of International Norms Restricting the Application of the Death Penalty," 52 Cin. L.Rev. 655 (1983) [hereinafter Hartman, International Norms].

The United States Government has ratified the Geneva Convention, and has signed but not yet ratified the other two conventions. However, a United Nations General Assembly Resolution recognized that Article 6 of the International Covenant constitutes a "minimum standard" for all Member States, not only ratifying states. Hartman, International Norms, supra at 681 n. 94. This resolution was supported by the United States Government. Id.

Further evidence of state practice appears in the national laws of over eighty nations, including almost all western European nations. These countries have either abolished the death penalty completely or have forbidden it for certain offenses and certain offenders, such as children and adolescents. Over forty nations which retain the death penalty have statutory provisions exempting youth from capital punishment. Hartman, International Norms, supra at 666 n. 44. See also Amnesty International, The Death Penalty (1979). Since 1979 there have been more than 11,000 executions in over eighty countries, but only eight executions (0.07%) were for crimes committed while under age eighteen. Amnesty International, The United States of America: The Death Penalty (Feb. 1987). Three were in the United States, two in Pakistan, and one each in Bangladesh, Rwanda and Barbados. Id. There were also undocumented reports of juvenile executions in Iran. Id.

Recently, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) for the Organization of American States (O.A.S.) condemned two juvenile executions in the United States in 1986. O.A.S. IACHR, Res. No. 3/87, Case No. 9647 (United States) (Mar. 27, 1987), OEA/Ser. L./V/II, 69, Doc. 17 (1987).

The Commission finds that in the member states of the O.A.S. there is recognized a norm of jus cogens which prohibits the State execution of children. This norm is accepted by all the States of the inter-American system, including the United States.

Id. at para 56. The IACHR agreed with the United States that "there does not now exist a norm of customary international law establishing 18 to be the minimum age for imposition of the death penalty," id. at para 60, but also stated:

[I]n light of the increasing numbers of States which are ratifying the American Convention on Human Rights and the United Nations Covenant on Political and Civil Rights, and modifying their domestic legislation in conformity with these instruments, the norm [of 18 years] is emerging.

4. Jury Sentencing Patterns Reflect Popular Reluctance To Sentence Juveniles To Death.

In the years 1982 to 1985, 1,103 death sentences were imposed by juries throughout the United States. Only twenty-nine (2.6%) of these death sentences were imposed on individuals for crimes committed while under the age of eighteen. Jury sentencing practices for fifteen year old offenders are even more striking. Of the 1,103 death sentences imposed from 1982 through 1985, only four (0.4%) have been for crimes committed when the convicted individual was age fifteen or younger. (Appendix G) During this same four year period, 1.8% (1,084 of 60,789) of adults arrested for criminal homicide in the United States received the death sentence, a small portion. A microscopically small portion, only 0.6% (29 out of 5,239), of juveniles (younger than eighteen) arrested for criminal homicide received the death penalty.

Moreover, while the number of juvenile death sentences appears to be declining in recent years, the number of adult death sentences has remained fairly constant at a rate of 250 to 300 per year. (Appendix G) The decline is revealed by the changing populations on death row. As Appendix E indicates, thirty-eight (2.9%) of the 1,289 persons on death row on December 31, 1983, were under juvenile death sentences. During the next three years and three months the total death row population increased by 585 persons but the number of juveniles actually decreased by six. On March 31, 1987, only thirty-two (1.7%) of the 1,874 persons on death row had committed their crimes while under age eighteen. (Appendix F) The drop from thirty-eight to thirty-two juveniles on death row is a 16% decrease in just over three years, a period in which there was a

47% increase (from 1,251 to 1,842) in the adult death row population.⁸

^a Jury sentencing patterns appear to reflect public opinion. According to a number of scientific surveys, public opinion opposes execution of juvenile offenders, although it quite strongly supports capital punishment in general. This pattern has existed for some time. In November 1936, a survey showed 61% in favor of capital punishment. 54% opposed the execution of offenders under the age of 21. H. Cantel, Public Opinion: 1935-1946 (1951). In February 1965, a similar pattern was found by the Gallup Poll: 45% favored capital punishment, but only 23% favored death sentences for persons under the age of twenty-one. Erskine, The Polls: Capital Punishment, 34 Pub. Opinion Q. 290 (1970), cited in Vidmar & Ellsworth, Public Opinion and the Death Penalty, 26 Stan. L. Rev. 1245, 1250 (1974).

A university research center conducted a telephone poll throughout Georgia in the fall of 1986. Of the 917 Georgians interviewed, 75% favored capital punishment, but only 26% favored death sentences for crimes committed under age eighteen. Thomas & Hutcheson, Georgia Residents' Attitudes Toward the Death Penalty, the Disposition of Juvenile Offenders, and Related Issues (December 1986) (unpublished report prepared for the Clearinghouse on Georgia Prisons and Jails by the Center for Public and Urban Research, Georgia State University).

A telephone survey of 509 respondents was conducted across the entire state of Connecticut in May, 1986, with similar results. While 68% favored capital punishment in general, only 31% favored it for crimes committed while under age eighteen. Tuckel & Greenberg, Capital Punishment in Connecticut (May 1986) (unpublished report prepared for the Archdiocese of Hartford by The Analysis Group, Inc., New Haven, Connecticut).

If public opinion is an objective indicator of society's standards of decency, then it is clear that the moral consensus supporting capital punishment in general does not extend to the execution of children and adolescents.

C. Execution Of This Person For A Crime Committed At Age Fifteen Would Be Cruel And Unusual Punishment Because The Oklahoma Courts Failed To Give Careful, Particularized Consideration To The Character And Background Of The Accused Boy.

Although the Constitution does not deny government the power to take the lives of those who have committed the most serious of crimes, the supreme law of the land does require care, restraint, fairness and decency in the infliction of the most severe of punishments. The death penalty is special and unique—qualitatively different from all other governmental powers. Spaziano v. Florida, 468 U.S. at 468-69 (Stevens, J., dissenting). It is irrevocable: Mistakes cannot be rectified. In a case upholding defendants' convictions and death sentences, Justice Robert Jackson alluded to the law's traditional reluctance and restraint:

When the penalty is death, we, like state court judges, are tempted to strain the evidence and even, in close cases, the law in order to give a doubtfully condemned man another chance.

Stein v. New York, 346 U.S. 156, 196 (1953). There is even greater reason for giving the condemned the benefit of all doubts when the condemned was a fifteen year old boy at the time of the crime.

Even if this Court rules that imposing a death sentence on an adolescent is not invariably cruel and unusual punishment, the execution of Wayne Thompson would still violate the Eighth Amendment on narrow grounds: The courts of Oklahoma failed to assess adequately the fundamental justice of the death penalty in this case because the courts did not give careful, particularized consideration to the boy's youth and moral culpability as required by the Constitution.

Throughout this case, the logic of the Oklahoma courts has been simple. The boy was certified to stand trial as if he were an adult. If he may be tried as if he were an adult, he may be punished as if he were an adult. If adults may be put to death, he may be put to death. This logic, of course, would be equally applicable to any child certified to stand trial as if he or she were an adult, whether the child was, for example, nine, twelve or, as the boy in this case, fifteen.

This abstract syllogism ignored the command of the Eighth Amendment that a death sentence must "reflect a reasoned moral response to the defendant's background, character and crime." California v. Brown, 107 S.Ct. at 841 (O'Connor, J., concurring); yet, it is the only articulated basis for the decision of the Court of Criminal Appeals that the execution of the defendant would not be cruel and unusual punishment. 724 P.2d at 784. Tragically, the appellate court's cursory analysis does illustrate how the trial court arrived at the decision to sentence the defendant to death. Oklahoma courts never reviewed this case in light of this Court's insistence that age bears directly on the fundamental justice of the death penalty. Skipper v. South Carolina, — U.S. —, 106 S.Ct. 1669, 1676 (1986) (Powell J., joined by Burger, C.J. and Rehnquist, J., concurring). See also Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. 104 (1982).

1. The Trial Court Decided To Hold Defendant Accountable Not Because He Was An Adult, But As If He Were An Adult. The Trial Court's Certification, However, Is Not Constitutionally Sufficient Consideration Of Age As A Mitigating Factor.

When the jury experienced some uncertainty or confusion about Wayne Thompson's youth, they asked: "Has the Defendant been certified as an adult?" The trial court answered simply, "yes." This answer was incorrect. It misled the jury into believing that the issue of the defendant's adulthood, his maturity, and his personal culpability had already been determined. Yet, as a matter of Oklahoma law, the defendant had not been adjudged to be an adult. He was "certified" to stand trial "as if he were an adult." 10 Okla. Stat. §1112(b).

More to the point, during certification proceedings, the boy had not been adjudged to be as responsible or as morally culpable as an adult. Instead, the trial court decided, first, that

2. The Trial Judge Failed To Instruct The Jury That It Must Consider Defendant's Youth As A Relevant Mitigating Factor Of Great Weight.

Despite the warning of this Court in Eddings v. Oklahoma that "[t]he chronological age of a minor is itself a relevant mitigating factor of great weight," 455 U.S. at 116, Oklahoma has not changed its statutes to include age as a mitigating factor. Moreover, it has not even developed the practice of requiring the jury to consider youth as a mitigating factor.

In this case, the trial court instructed the jury, erroneously, that the boy was an adult. The trial judge failed to instruct the jury that his youth must be considered in mitigation. Worse, the instructions indicated that the jury need not consider youth as mitigating: "The determination of what are mitigating circumstances is for you as jurors to resolve under the facts and circumstances of this case." [JA 23] (emphasis added)⁹

⁹ In addition, from the outset of the trial, the prosecutor, with the tacit approval of the trial judge, discouraged consideration of the boy's youth. Throughout the jury selection process the prosecutor treated the defendant's youth as a factor that should not be considered. He was not always careful to specify that age was irrelevant only to the issue of guilt. Repeatedly the prosecutor asked jurors about this issue: "I'm asking you to think right now about your objectivity in regard to Mr. Thompson's age if it's going to be something that is going to interfere with your deliberation in this case." [Tr. 63] Asking every juror the age of his or her children, the prosecutor sent a message that the jury should not be sympathetic to the boy, and that they might be if their children were as young as he. [Tr. 80] Over and over, in front of the whole venire, the prosecutor asked these questions and made these comments. See Tr. 88, 91-92, 100, 103, 106-07, 223-25, 234-35, 265-66, 277-78. At one point the judge actively joined in this questioning. See Tr. 205. Through this process, the jurors were conditioned to believe that they should not consider the youthfulness of Wayne Thompson. Even though defense counsel emphasized the boy's youth throughout the jury selection process and the trial, the defense did not disrupt this conditioning process. Defense counsel did not object to the prosecutor's voir dire. Under these circumstances the jury could reasonably have believed that the

he was old enough to appreciate the wrongfulness of his actions and, second, that the prospects for rehabilitation within the juvenile system were low. [JA 5-8] Indeed, the "amenability" inquiry required by 10 Okla. Stat. § 1112(b) is more a prediction about the capacities of Oklahoma's juvenile justice system than it is an assessment of the defendant's moral guilt. The trial judge who certified the defendant wrote:

The witnesses from the Department of Human Services could offer no possible placement within the Department with any services that hold out any reasonable prospect for rehabilitation of this juvenile. The best the Department could do for this juvenile would be to warehouse him until he was 18.

[JA 7] Although such considerations are relevant to a decision whether to waive juvenile court jurisdiction, as the Court of Criminal Appeals held in Eddings' case, In the Matter of M.E., 584 P.2d 1340, 1346 (Okla. Cr. 1978), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 921 (1978), such predictions do not bear directly on the fundamental justice of the death penalty.

The issues of his emotional maturity, his personal moral culpability for the murder, and the propriety of the death penalty were not before the court at the time of certification. Having determined that the boy passed Oklahoma's test of sanity and that the murder was premeditated, the certifying court did not examine the boy's personal culpability or "moral guilt," Ermund v. Florida, 458 U.S. at 801, for the murder of Charles Keene. The court explored none of the issues constitutionally relevant to the personal culpability of this fifteen year old child: What actions were attributable solely to the boy? Why did he participate in the killing? What influence did others, including co-perpetrators and family, have on his participation in the killing? And did he appreciate the wrongfulness of killing Charles Keene (rather than simply the wrongfulness of killing in general)? Plainly, the decision to try the boy in adult criminal court was not—and was not intended to be—a judgment on his moral culpability for purposes of inflicting the supreme penalty. See Tison v. Arizona, supra.

In effect, the jury was misinformed that it had complete discretion as to what factors are mitigating. The trial judge did state that evidence had been offered with regard to petitioner's youth as a mitigating factor. [JA 24] However, even with such a reminder, the trial court's instructions were poor compliance with the ruling of Eddings that youth is a relevant mitigating factor of great weight. In an apparent effort to resolve its confusion, the jury returned a question asking the judge to define "mitigating." The judge's response was short and unhelpful: "You have your instructions, please continue deliberation." Supplemental Instruction No. 12. [JA 28]

Having been told by the prosecutor, with the apparent approval of the court, that the boy's youth should not "interfere with [the jurors' deliberations] in this case," [Tr. 63] and having been told incorrectly by the court that the boy had been "certified as an adult," the jury reasonably could have believed under the court's instructions that it was their duty, in "determin[ing] . . . what are mitigating circumstances," to reject youth as a mitigating circumstance. Cf. Sandstrom v. Montana, 442 U.S. 510, 518 n. 7 (1979).

- 3: The Eighth Amendment Requires That A Sentencing Court Give Careful, Particularized Consideration To The Character And Background Of The Defendant In Order To Assess The Fundamental Justice Of The Death Penalty. This Principle Mandates That No Child Be Sentenced To Die Unless The Sentencing Court Finds That The Child Is Morally Culpable To The Same Degree As An Adult And That The Child Is Beyond All Hope Of Rehabilitation.

The unique characteristics of capital punishment demand procedural safeguards in the "particularized consideration of relevant aspects of the character and record of each convicted defendant." Woodson v. North Carolina, 428 U.S. at 303 (pluprosecutor's directions were those that must be followed. See Plunkett v. Estelle, 709 F.2d 1001, 1009-10 (5th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1007 (1984).

rality opinion). Ultimately, the infliction of death can only be understood as a community's judgment "that an individual has lost his moral entitlement to live." Spaziano, 468 U.S. at 469 (Stevens, J., dissenting). When applied to a child of fifteen years, a death sentence must be understood as a decision that the condemned has lost his moral entitlement to grow. The deliberate killing of a human being by the state "is unique in its rejection of rehabilitation of the convict as a basic purpose of criminal justice." Firman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. at 306 (Stewart, J., concurring).

Even the decisions of state courts that uphold juvenile executions, if due process is strictly observed, discuss the need for great care in reviewing such cases. This judicially-imposed restraint prevails because, in the words of the Mississippi Supreme Court, it is "deeply disturbing that the life of a youth should be taken in punishment for his crime." Tokman v. State, 435 So.2d 664, 672 (Miss. 1983), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1256 (1984) (youth's death sentence upheld because of several aggravating circumstances and no mitigating circumstances in addition to age).

The factor of youth must trigger a heightened scrutiny of both the sentencing process and the fundamental justice of the penalty in a particular case. Oklahoma is almost alone in its insistence that there is nothing special about a capital case in which a juvenile is certified to stand trial as though he were an adult.

In Commonwealth v. Greer, 151 A.2d 241 (Pa. 1959), the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania held that age alone did not justify life imprisonment rather than a death sentence. However, in language that is most instructive in evaluating Oklahoma's treatment of the defendant in this case, the court also stated:

[The defendant's] age [of fifteen] is an important factor in determining the appropriateness of [a death penalty imposed for murder] and should impose upon the sentencing court the duty to be ultra-vigilant in its inquiry into the make-up of the convicted murderer. That youthful age is an important factor is graphically illustrated by the fact, that so far as our research can ascertain, no person under the age of 16 years and only one person under the age of 19 years has ever suffered the death penalty in this Commonwealth.

* * *

To what extent, if any did the court below measure the understanding and judgment of this 15 year old boy? . . . Beyond his age, the manner of the crime and his I.Q. rating the court below—unless the record contains grave omissions—knew nothing and made no inquiries to determine the background of this boy or what made him "tick." To the possible argument that [the defendant] could have but did not present such evidence, the answer is clear: when a court sits in judgment to determine whether a 15 year old boy who has committed an atrocious crime shall die in the electric chair it is the duty of the court to inquire and to exhaust every avenue of information that would inform it of the type of individual represented by that boy. Both the criminal act and the criminal himself must be thoroughly, completely and exhaustively examined before a court can exercise a sound discretion in determining the appropriate penalty.

* * *

It is manifest from this record that two factors only led to the imposition of the death penalty—the manner of the murder and the placation of . . . the public plaintiff. The court below in determining the appropriate penalty considered the criminal act, but not the criminal himself and in so doing committed an abuse of discretion.

151 A.2d at 2-16-17 (emphasis deleted).

In the case at bar, as in Green, and despite Eddings, the state seeks to inflict death on a boy for a crime committed at age fifteen, even though: (i) there is utterly nothing in the record to suggest that the death sentence is based on the individual characteristics and background of the defendant; (ii) the sole basis for the death sentence appears to be the jury's horror at the manner of the killing (without regard to extenuating motives); and, most important, (iii) the verdict and judgments of the Oklahoma courts in this case reflect a will to inflict death just as if the crime had been committed by an adult, without any meaningful assurance that jury, trial court or appellate court looked at this child defendant in a way different than an adult accused of murder. The collective judgment of the Oklahoma courts does not come to grips with two basic principles: First, youth bears directly on the fundamental justice of the death penalty, Skipper v. South Carolina, 106 S.Ct. at 1676 (Powell, J., concurring); and second, that the youth of the defendant requires more careful and sensitive consideration of the defendant's prospects for rehabilitation.¹⁰

This Court should insist that no child or adolescent should be sentenced to die unless a jury finds—beyond reasonable doubt—that the child is "both culpable and responsible in the superlative degree," Ridge v. State, 229 P. 649, 650 (Okla. Cr. 1924), "absolutely incorrigible," State v. Telfee, 425 So.2d 1251, 1258 (La. 1983), and a continuing threat to society.¹¹ This test would make it clear that, in such cases as this, the sentence of death cannot rest merely on the nature of the crime—however brutal. It must also fit the character and "moral guilt" of the ¹⁰ Cf. State v. Valencia, 132 Ariz. 248, 645 P.2d 239, 242 (1982) ("the age of the defendant, 16 at the time of both crimes, is 'sufficiently substantial' to call for life imprisonment instead of death."); State v. Maloney, 105 Ariz. 348, 461 P.2d 793, 803 (1970) ("[W]e feel compelled . . . because defendant was only 15 years of age at the time he killed, to also carefully examine the propriety of the ultimate penalty here. . . ."), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 841 (1970); State v. Stewart, 197 Neb. 497, 250 N.W.2d 849 (1977) (sixteen year old's death sentence reduced to life because of his age and background); People v. Davis, 29 Cal.3d 814, 633 P.2d 186 (1981) (life imprisonment without parole should not be imposed on offenders below the age of eighteen); State v. Telfee, 425 So.2d 1251, 1258 (La. 1983) (forty year imprisonment for rape was unconstitutionally excessive, absent a finding that a seventeen year old was "absolutely incorrigible").

defendant as carefully assessed through an indisputably reliable sentencing proceeding. See Zant v. Stephens, 462 U.S. 862, 883 (1983); Woodson v. North Carolina, supra.

This is an offense by a juvenile—acting with three adults, including an older brother—who wrongly believed that he should take the law into his own hands by murdering the man who had been beating his sister.¹²

As the prosecuting attorney argued without irony or appreciation of Eddings' nearly identical language, the defendant on trial "was not a normal sixteen year old." Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. at 116; compare id. with the prosecutor's closing argument at Ty: 865. Like Eddings, Thompson was a juvenile who experienced serious emotional and behavioral problems. Even Dr. Klein's handwritten psychological report refers to the defendant's history of substance abuse and to past beatings of the defendant perpetrated by the victim-to-be. Dr. Klein's report also provides a good description of the defendant's immaturity as reflected in the fact that "Wayne does not have enough ego to handle or to control his impulses. . . ." [R. 491]

Like Eddings, Thompson was abused. Indeed, in this case, the defendant suffered from a habit of paint sniffing induced by the man the defendant later killed, from beatings at the hands of the same man, and from the emotional turmoil of violent family conflict caused in part by the same man. When assessing the fundamental justice of the death sentence, it must not be forgotten that the defendant's crime was against a family member in a dispute arising from extended, tragic, violent family conflict.¹³

¹² The record reflects the likelihood that the Thompson-Mann family's anger played an important role in the murder. A child or adolescent who kills a family member may be responding, consciously or unconsciously, to perceived family wishes. Sargent, Children Who Kill: A Family Conspiracy, 7 Social Work 35 (1962).

The state of Oklahoma used evidence of defendant's background—and particularly the psychological report—only to conclude that he knew the difference between right and wrong—or that he should have known. On this basis, the state court concluded that the defendant should be tried as if he were an adult. The state then bootstrapped from this decision to waive juvenile jurisdiction to the conclusion that he ought to die for the crime of murder. 724 P.2d at 784. This conclusion denies the relevance of age and the youth's vulnerability to these circumstances, and thus ignores the weight of precedent, tradition, and considerations of justice. It virtually repeats Oklahoma's error in Eddings, in which the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals "considered only that evidence to be mitigating which would tend to support a legal excuse from criminal liability." 455 U.S. at 113.

The imposition of the death penalty cannot, on the facts of this case, be allowed to stand. Even if the Court does not decide that imposition of the death penalty against a person who was fifteen years old at the time of his offense is unconstitutional per se, this particular death sentence must be struck down as a violation of the Eighth Amendment.

¹³ Thompson was guilty of murder in the first degree, but his crime was not of the type that has prompted recent national concern about juvenile violence. See, e.g., Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. at 116, citing National Advisory Committee on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals, Task Force Report on Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention 3 (1976). The record is clear that Thompson's crime was not of "the most reprehensible classes of homicide known to the law," as defined in Ridge v. State, 229 P.2d at 650, when "one takes the life of another against whom he has no grievance, for the purpose of robbery, rape, or personal gain." And yet the jury, influenced by gruesome photographs that a zealous prosecutor used skillfully, condemned Thompson to death on the basis of one finding—that the crime was especially heinous, cruel or atrocious.

THE RELIABILITY OF THE SENTENCING PROCESS IN THIS CASE WAS UNDERMINED BY THE ADMISSION OF HIGHLY INFLAMMATORY EVIDENCE THAT PREJUDICED THE DEFENDANT'S RIGHT TO FAIR, FULL JURY CONSIDERATION OF ALL MITIGATING CIRCUMSTANCES, INCLUDING AGE.

A. The Prosecution Deliberately Used Inflammatory Evidence And Arguments To Convince The Jury Not To Weigh Defendant's Age As A Mitigating Circumstance.

In this case, the trial court admitted evidence described by the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals as "gruesome," "ghastly," and "of little probative value." 724 P.2d at 782-83. The evidence at issue, admitted over the objection of trial counsel, consisted of two color photographs of the victim's body. The photographs were taken after the recovery of the body from the Washita River, where it had been for almost one month. 724 P.2d at 782. The appellate court had particularly harsh words for the prosecutor who offered the evidence: "We do not understand why an experienced prosecutor would risk reversal of the whole case by introducing such ghastly, color photographs with so little probative value." Id. Of course, the Court of Criminal Appeals did understand that "[a]dmitting them into evidence served no purpose other than to inflame the jury." Id. Nevertheless, the court upheld the judgment and sentence. The admission of the prejudicial evidence was deemed harmless error because evidence of the boy's guilt was strong. Id. at 783.

The appellate court did not state specifically that it would have been error to admit the photographs in the penalty phase of the trial, but such a conclusion is clearly warranted. Under Oklahoma law, the same rules apply to the admissibility of evidence in the sentencing phase of a trial as in the guilt phase. 12 Okla. Stat. §2103. "In cases where the photographs in question depict a gruesome scene, the trial court must consider whether the probative value of the particular photograph outweighs the prejudice potentially accompanying its admission

... " Cooper v. State, 661 P.2d 905, 907 (Okla. Cr. 1983). The court already made an extremely strong finding as to prejudice and found little probative value with regard to guilt.

This unequivocal finding of prejudice must carry over to the penalty phase. Furthermore, the balance between probativeness and prejudice should remain the same. Admittedly, certain information may be probative for the penalty phase that would not be probative in the guilt phase. In particular, since one of Oklahoma's statutory aggravating circumstances for invoking the death penalty is that "[t]he murder was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel," evidence speaking to that factor would be probative in the penalty phase. In this case, however, there was already evidence, in the form of defendant's statements to two witnesses and the medical examiner's report, that fully addressed the question of the manner of the killing. See State v. Poe, 441 P.2d 512 (Utah 1968) (abuse of discretion to admit color slides of autopsy when all facts already presented by medical and lay testimony). Even if the photographs of the victim's remains were minimally probative, they were merely cumulative. "[W]hen the photos are merely cumulative . . ." that fact must enter into the probative/prejudice balance." Tobler v. State, 688 P.2d 350, 356 (Okla. Cr. 1984).

The admission of the photographs, even in the penalty phase, was error. Indeed, these gruesome, inflammatory photographs were even more prejudicial in relation to capital sentencing procedure. These gruesome photographs concentrated the attention of the jury on the effects of post-mortem decomposition rather than the circumstances of the murder. Here, the photographs depicted not only the effect of the killing but also the effect of almost one month's immersion in the Washita River. No juror could help but have his or her attention diverted from the real issue of the defendant's moral guilt.

The error was compounded by the prosecutor's remarks during the penalty phase. His conduct and tactics were not subtle. In closing argument, the prosecutor used the inflammatory evidence to distract the jury from what he described as "the problem": "[W]hat to do with a guilty person who has killed somebody else that is sixteen years old." [Tr. 849] The admission of the prejudicial evidence and the repeated emphasis on that evidence, coupled with the prosecutor's remarks, made it extremely unlikely that the jury treated petitioner's youth as a mitigating factor of great weight. Not only were the gruesome photographs likely to distract the jury's attention from any mitigating circumstances, the prosecutor specifically used the photographs in an attempt to prevent the jury from considering petitioner's youth in mitigation. The prosecutor repeatedly tried to deny the defendant's youth by arguing that he was an adolescent only in years. Id. After using the inflammatory photographs, photographs that "served no purpose other than to inflame the jury," 724 P.2d at 782, during a detailed and graphic description of the crime, the prosecutor climaxed his argument: "Its not the sixteen year old, folks, that can do that." [Tr. 865]

The prosecutor's comments were an obvious and successful attempt to subvert this Court's command that the age "of a minor is itself a relevant mitigating factor of great weight." Eddings, 455 U.S. at 116. The jury recommended the death sentence on the sole basis of one statutory aggravating factor—that the murder was especially heinous, cruel and atrocious. [Tr. 870] The admission of the photographs "served no purpose other than to inflame the jury." 724 P.2d at 782. Thus, it was far more likely that the jury would decide to inflict death despite defendant's age. Moreover, even with this inflammatory evidence, the jury had great difficulty in reaching its conclusion that the aggravating circumstance was present, as shown by the jury's request for further instruction on mitigation and on the availability of parole if the death penalty were not imposed. See Supplemental Instructions Nos. 12 and 13. [JA at 28-29] In this context, while any error with regard to guilt or innocence may have been harmless, the error in the penalty phase was not harmless.

B. Trial Court Errors Prejudicing Jury Deliberations Over The Death Penalty Are Constitutional Errors. They Cannot Be Disregarded As Merely Harmless.

Imposition of the death penalty is excessive, severe, cruel and unusual if it is not based on a careful moral inquiry into the culpability of the accused. The punishment must not only fit the crime, it must fit the accused. See Lockett v. Ohio, 438 U.S. 586 (1978); Woodson v. North Carolina, supra; Robert's v. Louisiana, 431 U.S. 633, 637 (1977). The jury's role in assessing the fairness of the most severe of penalties requires full, fair, careful consideration of all mitigating circumstances—without passion or prejudice.

[E]vidence about the defendant's background and character is relevant because of the belief, long held by this society, that defendants who commit criminal acts that are attributable to a disadvantaged background, or to emotional and mental problems, may be less culpable than defendants who have no such excuse. This emphasis on culpability in sentencing decisions has long been reflected in Anglo-American jurisprudence. As this Court observed in Eddings, the common law has struggled with the problem of developing a capital punishment system that is "sensible to the uniqueness of the individual." . . . Lockett and Eddings reflect the belief that punishment should be directly related to the personal culpability of the criminal defendant. Thus, the sentence imposed at the penalty stage should reflect a reasoned moral response to the defendant's background, character, and crime rather than mere sympathy or emotion.

California v. Brown, 107 S.Ct. at 841 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (emphasis added). This Court has stressed that the "qualitative difference between death and other penalties calls for a greater degree of reliability when the death sentence is imposed." Zant v. Stephens, 462 U.S. at 888 (quoting Lockett v. Ohio, 438 U.S. at 604 (plurality opinion of Burger, C.J.)).

This Court must not rely on some speculative possibility that the jury might still have decided to sentence a fifteen year old defendant to die without the prejudicial evidence. Such a conclusion would be particularly unwarranted in this case, where the jury had difficulty in imposing the death penalty despite the prejudicial evidence.

If this Court views this case as a whole, the totality of the trial court's constitutional errors in this case—its improper jury instructions, its tolerance of the prosecutor's warning to jurors not to let the boy's youth "interfere" with deliberations, its admission of inflammatory evidence, and its tolerance for the prosecutor's use of the photographs—undermined the reliability of the sentencing procedure. Caldwell v. Mississippi, 472 U.S. ____ , 105 S.Ct. 2633 (1985). Though these errors rendered the sentencing phase of the trial fundamentally unfair, contrary to the state's brief in opposition to the writ of certiorari, the proper test is not "fundamental unfairness." Caldwell demonstrates the significance—and the constitutional character—of the errors in this case. Indeed, Caldwell is applicable here for the same reasons articulated by this Court when it distinguished the case from Darden v. Wright, ____ U.S. ____ , 106 S.Ct. 2464 (1986).

The constitutional errors in this case, like the prosecutor's comments in Caldwell, involved evidence, arguments and instructions that created an "intolerable danger" that the jury would misconceive its duty and the law. Caldwell, 106 S.Ct. at 2641. Especially in light of the trial court's responsibility for the errors, the prejudicial evidence as used by the prosecutor combined with the erroneous instructions greatly increased the chance that these errors would affect sentencing. Finally, the trial judge's erroneous instruction during the guilt phase of trial that defendant was certified as an adult naturally misled the jury not only as to the facts, but also into believing that its role was far less important than it was. After all, if the defendant was a bona fide, "certified" adult by prior state decision and the jury could decide for itself "what is mitigating," the jury could not help but believe that its responsibility for weighing age in a more careful and sensitive way was reduced—even preempted by a prior certification. Compare Caldwell, 105 S.Ct. 2641-42 with Darden, 106 S.Ct. at 2473 n. 15.

As this Court stated in Zant v. Stephens:

"It is of vital importance to the defendant and to the community that any decision to impose the death sentence be, and appear to be, based on reason rather than caprice or emotion." Gardner v. Florida, 430 U.S. 349, 358 (1977). Thus, although not every imperfection in the deliberative process is sufficient, even in a capital case, to set aside a state-court judgment, the severity of the sentence mandates careful scrutiny in the review of any colorable claim of error.

462 U.S. at 885. In this case, the deliberations of the Court of Criminal Appeals did nothing to ensure the reliability of the sentencing procedure. The appellate court was required to decide "whether the sentence of death was imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice or any other arbitrary factor." 21 Okla. Stat. §701.13. Though the court did discuss the manner in which the defendant committed this murder, on this critical issue of prejudice and passion, the court did not even consider the effect of the photographs which it had already described as inflammatory and prejudicial.¹⁴

The cry for retribution against Wayne Thompson was the result of inflamed passions, not a careful assessment of moral guilt. However, the proud tradition of this nation and this Court is to resist excessive passion and to pursue a more reasoned justice under law. Moreover, this tradition is deeply rooted in the framers' hopes for the Bill of Rights. In a letter to Jefferson in Paris, Madison expressed doubts whether the "parchment barriers" of declared rights would be effective in a republic. Jefferson replied that Madison overlooked the legal check that a bill of rights would place in an independent judiciary, which, Jefferson continued, would be unaffected by "the 'trivium ardor prava jubentium'—a phrase from Horace, 'the frenzy of . . . fellow citizens bidding what is wrong.'" Letter from Thomas Jefferson to James Madison (Mar. 15, 1789), reprinted in Thomas Jefferson: Writings 942, 943 (M. Petersen ed. 1984); Horace, Odes III, 3:1 (C. Bennett trans. 1939). No phrase could better illuminate the need for the judiciary to restrain inflamed cries for the execution of children and adolescents.

¹⁴ At a minimum, the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals must be required to rule on the error involved in the admission of the photographs with regard to the penalty phase. While that court held that the error was harmless with regard to the determination of guilt, it made no holding on the harm caused with regard to the imposition of the death penalty.

III.

TO VINDICATE AMERICAN TRADITIONS OF SPECIAL TREATMENT OF JUVENILE OFFENDERS, THIS COURT MUST PREVENT THE EXECUTION OF PERSONS FOR CRIMES COMMITTED BELOW A SPECIFIED AGE.

Plainly, the issues respecting the admission of prejudicial evidence, along with the other constitutional errors, such as the jury instructions, provide this Court with narrow grounds for reversing the judgment below. However, these facts also illustrate the inadequacy of current protections for juveniles in capital cases.

The case at bar is an excellent example of how the youth of an offender can be lost in the complex, emotional sentencing stage of a capital case. Despite this Court's requirement that chronological age be given great weight as a mitigating factor, present procedures provide no assurance that the state courts will respect this requirement. To justify a retributive death sentence, the prosecution must provoke rage. Although the Court has insisted that careful considerations must be given to youth as a mitigating factor, see Eddings, rage, by its nature, makes rational, sensitive, careful assessment of extenuating and mitigating factors difficult if not impossible. "[W]hen a life is at stake, emotionalism often infects the conduct of the trial itself." State v. Maloney, 105 Ariz. 348, 461 P.2d 793, 803 (1970) (reversing death sentence of fifteen year old convicted of murder.)

At a minimum, this Court should reaffirm and clarify Eddings to insist that juries be clearly instructed that youth is a mitigating factor of great weight and that an adolescent shall not be condemned to death unless aggravating circumstances plainly outweigh the undeniable, critical mitigating factor of youth. And yet, mere reaffirmation of Eddings seems an inadequate response to Oklahoma's continuing disregard for the principles of Eddings that the young must be judged more carefully and perhaps punished less harshly than adults. This case illuminates the need for a better standard to protect this nation's traditions of decent restraint in the punishment of the young.

The only effective means of preventing juvenile executions that are prompted by a prosecutor-induced rage and inadequate state appellate court review—in defiance of this Court's rulings—is an enforceable principle of restraint, such as a minimum age. See, e.g., Greenberg, Capital Punishment as a System, 91 Yale L.J. 908 (1982); Note, The Decency of Capital Punishment for Minors: Contemporary Standards and the Dignity of Juveniles, 61 Ind. L.J. 757 (1986).

When fundamental values such as those secured by the Bill of Rights are at stake, one of the principal challenges of constitutional interpretation is to develop rules that do not "leave the utmost latitude for evasion." The Federalist No. 84 at 580 (A. Hamilton) (J. Cooke ed. 1961). Although the judicial role is limited by the principles of federalism and democracy, Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 174-76 (1976) (opinion of Stewart, Powell and Stevens, J.J.), there is special need and justification for judicial intervention in a case such as this.

First, the prohibition against cruel and unusual punishments cannot be interpreted without careful regard for this nation's traditions and sense of decency. A principle restricting the execution of children and adolescents is rooted in this nation's traditions of juvenile justice and its traditions of decent restraint in the assessment of moral guilt of children. Similar humane traditions accounted for the Eighth Amendment in the first place. See generally Comment, The Eighth Amendment, Beccaria, and the Enlightenment: An Historical Justification for the Weems v. United States Excessive Punishment Doctrine, 24 Buff. L. Rev. 783 (1975). The Eighth Amendment is one of a few constitutional provisions that seem explicitly to mandate an ongoing search for evolving principles of humanity and decency. Weems v. United States, 217 U.S. 349, 378 (1910); Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. at 173 (plurality opinion of Stewart, Powell, and Stevens, J.J.); J. Ely, Democracy and Distrust 13-14 (1980). The framers adopted the provision over objections that it was "too indefinite," although even opponents admitted that "the clause expressed a great deal of humanity." 7 Annals of Cong. 75-1 (1789) (remarks of Representatives Smith and Livermore), discussed in Weems v. United States, 217 U.S. at 368-69 and Fierman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. at 243-45, 262-63.

Second, the search for principles of humanity and decency to illuminate the meaning of the Eighth Amendment must be, at least in part, a judicial search. When the Eighth Amendment was proposed as part of the Bill of Rights, it was hoped that "independent tribunals of justice [would] consider themselves in a peculiar manner the guardians of those rights." Address of James Madison to the U.S. House of Representatives (June 8, 1789), reprinted in 5 The Writings of James Madison 385 (G. Hunt ed. 1904). This nation maintains a distinctive tradition that our courts have special responsibility for reviewing the procedures by which government uses criminal process and legal punishments to enforce the law.

Finally, this special judicial role is designed to protect the role of reason and integrity in government's use of criminal process to enforce law. The courts' "essential quality is detachment, founded on independence." Gregg v. Georgia, 423 U.S. at 175 (opinion of Stewart, Powell and Stevens, J.J.) (quoting Dennis v. United States, 341 U.S. 494, 525 (1951) (Frankfurter, J., concurring)). This truth not only restrains the courts; it must guide them.

The ban on cruel and unusual punishments implicates not only legislative policy; it is a rule of procedure limiting the means by which government may enforce the law. If our traditions justify special protections for children, they justify effective special protections. In this context, a principle of decent restraint—a minimum age for the application of the death penalty—is not merely a matter of policy. It is a fundamental matter of justice to the individual as defined by our traditions and our sense of humanity.

It took no violent stretching of democratic theory to suppose an expectation on the part of the people that, in employing the criminal sanction, the political branches would abide the judge's sense of what was mete and decent in the way of procedure, just as they abided the discretion of the jury. And, if the supposition concerning popular expectations should prove wrong, then the justification of that judicial function was that criminal procedure . . . raised questions of elemental justice to the individual, not of social policy.

A. Bickel, The Supreme Court and the Idea of Progress 32 (1970).

Tragically, past efforts of this Court to ensure respect for the nation's traditions in regard to youthful offenders, Eddings, have been disregarded by at least one "state[s] courts . . . charged with the front-line responsibility for the enforcement of constitutional rights." Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 351 (1963) (Harlan, J., concurring). Such disregard "in the long run will do disservice to the federal system." Id. Indeed, executions of children and adolescents in the absence of any moral consensus favoring such punishment will erode respect for law and for the retributive goals of capital punishment. "Civilized societies will not tolerate the spectacle of execution of children." American Law Institute, Model Penal Code §210.6 commentary at 133 (Official Draft and Revised Comments 1980). In this case, a principle of decent restraint will protect our children and adolescents from tragic mistakes caused by the unpredictable effects of rage. It will also protect the nation's traditions of justice for the young.

CONCLUSION

Petitioner respectfully requests that this Court reverse the judgment of the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals insofar as it affirmed the death sentence in this case, vacate the death sentence, and grant such other relief as it deems appropriate.

APPENDIX A

Pertinent Oklahoma Statutes Respecting Definition of "Child" And Trial Of Children As Adults

10 Okla. Stat. § 1101

When used in this title, unless the context otherwise requires:

1. "Child" means any person under eighteen (18) years of age, except for any person sixteen (16) or seventeen (17) years of age who is charged with murder, kidnapping for purposes of extortion, robbery with a dangerous weapon, rape in the first degree, use of a firearm or other offensive weapon while committing a felony, arson in the first degree, burglary with explosives, shooting with intent to kill, manslaughter in the first degree, or nonconsensual sodomy.

Amended by Laws 1982, c. 312, § 13, operative Oct. 1, 1982; Laws 1984, c. 129, § 1, emerg. eff. April 10, 1984.

10 Okla. Stat. § 1101.2

A. Any person sixteen (16) or seventeen (17) years of age who is charged with murder, kidnapping for purposes of extortion, robbery with a dangerous weapon, rape in the second degree, use of firearm or other offensive weapon while committing a felony, arson in the first degree, burglary with explosives, shooting with intent to kill, manslaughter in the first degree, or nonconsensual sodomy, shall be considered as an adult. Upon the arrest and detention, such sixteen- or seventeen-year-old accused shall have all the statutory and constitutional rights and protections of an adult accused of a crime, but shall be detained in a jail cell or ward entirely separate from prisoners who are eighteen (18) years of age or over.

B. Upon the filing of an information against such accused person, a warrant shall be issued which shall set forth the rights of the accused person, and the rights of the parents, guardian or next friend of the accused person to be present at the preliminary hearing, to have an attorney present and to make application for certification of such accused person as a child to the juvenile division of the district court. The warrant shall be personally served together with a certified copy of the information on the accused person and on the parents, guardian or next friend of the accused person.

C. The accused person shall file a motion for certification as a child before the start of the criminal preliminary hearing. Upon the filing of such motion, the complete juvenile record of the accused shall be made available to the district attorney and the accused person.

At the conclusion of the state's case at the criminal preliminary hearing, the accused person may offer evidence to support the motion for certification as a child.

The court shall rule on the certification motion of the accused person before ruling on whether to bind the accused over for trial. When ruling on the certification motion of the accused person, the court shall give consideration to the following guidelines, listed in order of importance:

1. Whether the alleged offense was committed in an aggressive, violent, premeditated or willful manner;
2. Whether the offense was against persons or property, greater weight being given for retaining the accused person within the adult criminal system for offenses against persons, especially if personal injury resulted;
3. The record and past history of the accused person, including previous contacts with law enforcement agencies and juvenile or criminal courts, prior periods of probation and commitments to juvenile institutions; and
4. The prospects for adequate protection of the public if the accused person is processed through the juvenile system.

The court, in its decision on the certification motion of the accused person, need not detail responses to each of the above considerations, but shall state that the court has considered each of the guidelines in reaching its decision.

D. Upon completion of the criminal preliminary hearing, if the accused person is certified as a child to the juvenile division of the district court, then all adult court records relative to the accused person and this charge shall be expunged and any mention of the accused person shall be removed from public record.

Laws 1978, c. 231, § 1, eff. Oct. 1, 1978; Laws 1979, c. 257, § 2. [Subsequently Amended by Laws 1985, c. 278, § 1, eff. Nov. 1, 1985; Laws 1986, c. 179, § 2, eff. Nov. 1, 1986]

10 Oldia. Stat. § 1112

(a) Except as otherwise provided, a child who is charged with having violated any state statute or municipal ordinance other than those enumerated in Section 1101.2 of this title, shall not be tried in a criminal action but in a juvenile proceeding. If, during the pendency of a criminal or quasi-criminal charge against any person, it shall be ascertained that the person was a child at the time of committing the alleged offense, the district court or municipal court shall transfer the case, together with all the papers, documents and testimony connected therewith, to the juvenile division of the district court. The division making such transfer shall order the child to be taken forthwith to the place of detention designated by the juvenile division, to that division itself, or release such child to the custody of some suitable person to be brought before the juvenile division. However, nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the exercise of concurrent jurisdiction by another division of the district court or by municipal courts in cases involving children wherein the child is charged with the violation of a state or municipal traffic law or ordinance.

(b) Except as otherwise provided by law, if a child is charged with delinquency as a result of an offense which would be a felony if committed by an adult, the court on its own motion or at the request of the district attorney shall conduct a preliminary hearing to determine whether or not there is prosecutive merit to the complaint. If the court finds that prosecutive merit exists, it shall continue the hearing for a sufficient period of time to conduct an investigation and further hearing to determine the prospects for reasonable rehabilitation of the child if he should be found to have committed the alleged act or omission.

Consideration shall be given to:

1. The seriousness of the alleged offense to the community, and whether the alleged offense was committed in an aggressive, violent, premeditated or willful manner;
2. Whether the offense was against persons or property, greater weight being given to offenses against persons especially if personal injury resulted;
3. The sophistication and maturity of the juvenile and his capability of distinguishing right from wrong as determined by consideration of his psychological evaluation, home, environmental situation, emotional attitude and pattern of living;
4. The record and previous history of the juvenile, including previous contacts with community agencies, law enforcement agencies, schools, juvenile courts and other jurisdictions, prior periods of probation or prior commitments to juvenile institutions;
5. The prospects for adequate protection of the public and the likelihood of reasonable rehabilitation of the juvenile if he is found to have committed the alleged offense, by the use of procedures and facilities currently available to the juvenile court; and
6. Whether the offense occurred while the juvenile was escaping or in an escape status from an institution for delinquent children.

After such investigation and hearing, the court may in its discretion proceed with the juvenile proceeding, or it shall state its reasons in writing and shall certify that such child shall be held accountable for its acts as if he were an adult and shall be held for proper criminal proceedings for the specific offense charged, by any other division of the court which would have trial jurisdiction of such offense if committed by an adult. The juvenile proceeding shall not be dismissed until the criminal proceeding has commenced and if no criminal proceeding has commenced within thirty (30) days of the date of such certification, unless stayed pending appeal, the court shall proceed with the juvenile proceeding and the certification shall lapse.

If not included in the original summons, notice of a hearing to consider whether a child should be certified for trial as an adult shall be given to all persons who are required to be served with a summons at the commencement of a juvenile proceeding, but publication in a newspaper when the address of a person is unknown is not required. The purpose of the hearing shall be clearly stated in the notice.

(c) Prior to the entry of any order of adjudication, any child in custody shall have the same right to be released upon bail as would an adult under the same circumstances.

(d) Any child who has been certified to stand trial as an adult pursuant to any certification procedure provided by law and is subsequently convicted of the alleged offense or against whom the imposition of judgment and sentencing has been deferred shall be tried as an adult in all subsequent criminal prosecutions, and shall not be subject to the jurisdiction of the juvenile court in any further proceedings.

(e) An order either certifying a person as a child pursuant to subsection (b) of this section or denying such certification shall be a final order, appealable when entered.

Laws 1968, c. 282, § 112, eff. Jan. 13, 1969; Laws 1973, c. 227, § 1, emerg. eff. May 24, 1973; Laws 1974, c. 35, § 1; Laws 1974, c. 272, § 2, emerg. eff. May 29, 1974; Laws 1977, c. 79, § 2; Laws 1978, c. 231, § 2, eff. Oct. 1, 1978; Laws 1979, c. 257, § 4; Laws 1981, c. 141, § 1.

PERTINENT OKLAHOMA STATUTES RESPECTING FIRST DEGREE MURDER AND DEATH PENALTY

21 Okla. Stat. § 701.7

A. A person commits murder in the first degree when he unlawfully and with malice aforethought causes the death of another human being. Malice is that deliberate intention unlawfully to take away the life of a human being, which is manifested by external circumstances capable of proof.

B. A person also commits the crime of murder in the first degree when he takes the life of a human being, regardless of malice, in the commission of forcible rape, robbery with a dangerous weapon, kidnapping, escape from lawful custody, first degree burglary or first degree arson.

C. A person commits murder in the first degree when the death of a child results from the injuring, torturing, maiming or using of unreasonable force by said person upon the child pursuant to Section 843 of this title.

Amended by Laws 1982, c. 279, § 1, operative Oct. 1, 1982. Approved May 21, 1982. Emergency. Section 2 of Laws 1982, c. 279 provides for an operative date.

21 Okla. Stat. § 701.9

A. A person who is convicted of or pleads guilty or nolo contendere to murder in the first degree shall be punished by death or by imprisonment for life.

Laws 1976, 1st Ex.Sess., c. 1, § 3, eff. July 24, 1976.

21 Okla. Stat. § 701.10

Upon conviction or adjudication of guilt of a defendant of murder in the first degree, the court shall conduct a separate sentencing proceeding to determine whether the defendant should be sentenced to death or life imprisonment. The proceeding shall be conducted by the trial judge before the trial jury as soon as practicable without presentence investigation.

If the trial jury has been waived by the defendant and the state, or if the defendant pleaded guilty or nolo contendere, the sentencing proceeding shall be conducted before the court. In the sentencing proceeding, evidence may be presented as to any mitigating circumstances or as to any of the aggravating circumstances enumerated in this act. Only such evidence in aggravation as the state has made known to the defendant prior to his trial shall be admissible. However, this section shall not be construed to authorize the introduction of any evidence secured in violation of the Constitutions of the United States or of the State of Oklahoma. The state and the defendant or his counsel shall be permitted to present argument for or against sentence of death.

Laws 1976, 1st Ex.Sess., c. 1, § 4, eff. July 24, 1976.

21 Okla. Stat. § 701.11

In the sentencing proceeding, the statutory instructions as determined by the trial judge to be warranted by the evidence shall be given in the charge and in writing to the jury for its deliberation. The jury, if its verdict be a unanimous recommendation of death, shall designate in writing, signed by the foreman of the jury, the statutory aggravating circumstance or circumstances which it unanimously found beyond a reasonable doubt. In nonjury cases the judge shall make such designation. Unless at least one of the statutory aggravating circumstances enumerated in this act is so found or if it is found that any such aggravating circumstance is outweighed by the finding on one or more mitigating circumstances, the death penalty shall not be imposed. If the jury cannot, within a reasonable time, agree as to punishment, the judge shall dismiss the jury and impose a sentence of imprisonment for life.

Laws 1976, 1st Ex.Sess., c. 1, § 5, eff. July 24, 1976.

D. Both the defendant and the state shall have the right to submit briefs within the time provided by the court, and to present oral argument to the court. The defendant shall have one hundred twenty (120) days from the date of receipt by the court of the record, transcript notice, and report provided for in subsection A of this section, in which to submit a brief. The state shall have sixty (60) days from the date of filing of the defendant's brief to file a reply brief. The defendant may file a reply brief within a time period established by the court, however the receipt of the reply brief, the hearing of oral arguments, and the rendering of a decision by the court all shall be concluded within one (1) year after the date of the filing of the reply brief. If the defendant or the state fails to submit their respective briefs within the period prescribed by law, the defendant or the state shall transmit a written statement of explanation to the Presiding Judge of the Court of Criminal Appeals who shall have the authority to grant an extension of the time to submit briefs, based upon a showing of just cause. Reply Brief of Petitioner

Introduction

The traditions of American jurisprudence that children and adolescents are to be judged more carefully and treated less harshly than adults are ignored by the Brief of Respondent Oklahoma almost as completely as by the trial and appellate courts in proceedings below.¹ Over sixty percent of American jurisdictions-- thirty-three jurisdictions encompassing over 70% of the American population-- refuse to countenance the execution of anyone for a crime committed at age fifteen or younger.² No State that has decided to adopt an express statutory minimum age for imposing a death penalty has ever selected an age below sixteen years.³ No State has executed any person for a crime committed at age fifteen or younger in almost forty years.⁴

The basic power of the States to execute convicted murderers

¹Certainly, the arguments of Oklahoma reflect the attitude of the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals, which devoted all of two short paragraphs to the issue of the boy's youth. Only one sentence of the appellate court's opinion in this case was devoted to a "reconsideration" of whether a death sentence imposed on a juvenile violated the Eighth Amendment. Thompson v. State, 724 P.2d 780, 784 [J.A. 36, 41].

²As of 1985, the eighteen jurisdictions that prohibit a death sentence for anyone younger than eighteen, seventeen or sixteen (See Appendices A and B to this Brief) and the fifteen jurisdictions that do not have any death penalty included an estimated 71.9% of the total United States population. Bureau of the Census, U.S. Dep't of Commerce, Statistical Abstract of the United States 22 (1987).

³See Appendix A to this Brief.

⁴The last execution of a person for a crime committed at age fifteen was on January 9, 1948 when Louisiana executed Irvin Mattio. V. Streib, Death Penalty for Juveniles 197 (1987).

is not at stake in this case. This case focuses on a small category of death penalty cases and only one aspect of the death penalty issue: State execution of children and adolescents is freakishly rare and inconsistent with the dominant traditions of America's criminal and juvenile jurisprudence. To divert attention from these facts, the State of Oklahoma contends that Petitioner's claims under the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments would deprive the States of their general responsibility for defining substantive standards of criminal law. Brief of Respondent Oklahoma at 52-65. Unless the presence of any constitutional limitation on the death penalty process is a similar interference with the whole of the States' legitimate, broad powers in this area, Oklahoma's argument is false.

Citing Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307 (1979), Oklahoma argues in favor of a rule it believes to be pertinent: A state court's finding that a person is criminally responsible should be upheld, unless, under applicable state law and upon review of the record in a light most favorable to the prosecution, a rational fact finder could not have found the defendant guilty beyond reasonable doubt. Brief of Respondent Oklahoma at 64. Oklahoma emphasizes that its procedures were constitutionally adequate to conclude that the boy ought to be punished for his intentional act of murder. Brief of Respondent Oklahoma at 58. Oklahoma's argument is that the State has applied a proper rule of criminal responsibility-- whether the accused had mental capacity to distinguish between right and wrong. Id. at 60.

Petitioner concedes all this: Petitioner does not challenge Oklahoma's decision to hold him accountable under the State's criminal laws as if he were an adult. This case presents no question about whether Oklahoma was correct in its decision that the boy was guilty. The issue is not whether the boy will be held accountable for his crime. If this Court holds in favor of Petitioner's claims, there is no doubt that the boy will be punished-- and punished severely-- with a life imprisonment sentence. The question is whether he should suffer the extreme penalty of death. See Amici Curiae Brief of Child Welfare League of America et. al. at 33-41. Oklahoma's defense of judicial deference to state court judgments regarding criminal responsibility has virtually nothing to do with the issues of this case.

If Oklahoma meant to go one step further and to argue that standards for reviewing a death sentence ought to be identical to standards for reviewing a State's finding of criminal accountability, Oklahoma ignores fundamental constitutional limitations on the death penalty process.

Oklahoma is repeating its argument, expressed and rejected in Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. 104 (1982), that the only factors that could justify reducing a sentence of death-- as a matter of constitutional law-- are those "which would tend to support a legal excuse from criminal liability." Id. at 113. In other words, in Respondent's view, if a defendant is guilty of intentional murder, and if that defendant knows the difference between right and wrong, the death penalty is constitutionally appropriate in the absence of some legal excuse. Brief of Respondent Oklahoma at 64-65.

If this is Oklahoma's position, it is extreme. It concedes little to the well-established principle that

[B]ecause there is a qualitative difference between death and any other form of punishment, "there is a corresponding difference in the need for reliability in the determination that death is the appropriate punishment in a specific case."

Zant v. Stephens, 462 U.S. 862, 884 (1983), quoting Woodson v. North Carolina, 428 U.S. 280, 305 (1976). Oklahoma's analysis concedes nothing to the legal fact that the boy was a child under the laws of Oklahoma, and it concedes little to the special difficulties of a case in which the State seeks to decide whether a child "has lost his moral entitlement to live." Spaziano v. Florida, 468 U.S. 447, 469 (1984) (Stevens, J., dissenting).

I. Oklahoma's argument before this Court would, if adopted, undermine well-established traditions that youth bears on the fundamental justice of the death penalty.

Despite this Court's affirmation that youth is a "relevant mitigating factor of great weight," Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. at 116, Oklahoma's brief before this Court makes virtually no effort to demonstrate that the boy's youth was carefully and sensitively considered by jury, trial judge or appellate court. Oklahoma's argument before this Court mirrors the reality that Oklahoma courts never reviewed this case in light of this Court's insistence that youth bears directly on the fundamental justice of the death penalty. Skipper v. South Carolina, ___ U.S. ___, 106 S.Ct. 1669, 1676 (1986) (concurring opinion of Powell, J., Burger, C.J., and Rehnquist, J.). The State's arguments before this Court are only an attempt to rationalize Oklahoma's uncommon willingness to impose a death penalty despite the youth of the offender.

- A. Oklahoma's argument, if adopted, would undermine Eddings v. Oklahoma by legitimating unbridled jury discretion without adequate guidance that "youth is a relevant mitigating factor of great weight."

Oklahoma makes only one begrudging concession to the tradition that youthful offenders might not deserve to be treated in the same way as adults. It recognizes the "procedural requirement of allowing a murderer to introduce evidence of his or her age as a mitigating factor." Brief of Respondent Oklahoma at 34. In Oklahoma's view, as long as the accused is not foreclosed from introducing evidence and argument regarding age and other mitigating circumstances, the jury and the state courts have virtually unrestricted discretion to sentence a child to death. Id. at 35.

Oklahoma's toleration of unrestricted jury choice violates constitutional principles that limit the death penalty process. "[A] jury's discretion to impose the death sentence must be suitably directed and limited so as to minimize the risk of wholly arbitrary and capricious action." Booth v. Maryland, ___ U.S. ___, 107 S.Ct. 2529, 2532 (1987) quoting Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 189 (1976) (opinion of Stewart, J., Powell, J., and Stevens, J.). States who seek to put criminals to death "must channel the sentencer's discretion by 'clear and objective standards' that provide 'specific and detailed guidance,' to the jury. Godfrey v. Georgia, 446 U.S. 420, 428 (1980) (plurality opinion of Stewart, J., Blackmun, J., Powell, J. and Stevens, J) (citations omitted). The need for precision and objectivity "is particularly acute" when the responsibility of a child or adolescent is at issue. Burger v. Kemp, ___ U.S. ___, 107 S.Ct. 3114, 3141 (1987) (Powell, J., dissenting).⁵ "The Constitution requires that a capital sentencing system reflect this difference in criminal responsibility between children and adults." Id.

When responding to the prospect of a minimum death penalty age, Oklahoma says that it favors a case-by-case assessment of youth as a mitigating circumstance. Yet the State offers virtually no assurance that consideration of this "relevant mitigating circumstance" was meaningful, adequate or reliable as the jury deliberated in this matter of the boy's life and death.

Respondent Oklahoma makes no effort to deny: (i) The trial court failed to explain to the jury that youth is a relevant mitigating factor of great weight; (ii) The trial court misled the jury as to the boy's status as a child under the laws of Oklahoma; (iii) The prosecutor tried to condition the jury into believing that the boy's youth should not "interfere" with its deliberations; (iv) The trial court did nothing to require the jury to weigh the boy's youth against aggravating factors, and instructed the jury instead that "the determination of what are mitigating circumstances is for you as jurors to resolve"; and (v) The jury exhibited confusion about the meaning of "mitigating" circumstances.

Oklahoma's inability to show how the boy's age affected the proceedings below in any way is significant. In this case, the jury had no "substantive guidelines [to] allow[] the sentencer to make rational, objective distinctions between the egocentric homicidal conduct of a juvenile murder, and the homicidal conduct of an adult murderer." Ellison, "State Execution of Juveniles: Defining 'Youth' as a Mitigating Factor for Imposing a Sentence of Less Than Death," 11 Law and Psych. Rev. 1, 36-37 (1987).

If the factor of youth is to be given proper weight in capital sentencing decisions, the jury (or other sentencing authority) must be, first, informed of the importance of youth as a mitigating circumstance, and, second, directed to give the youth factor great weight in sentencing deliberations. Only such safeguards in a young offender's case can meet the "corresponding[ly]... [greater] need for reliability in the determination that death is the appropriate punishment in a specific case." Woodson v. North Carolina, 428 U.S. at 305.

- B. A minimum chronological age would protect the tradition that young offenders must be judged differently and treated less harshly than adults who commit the same offenses.

Oklahoma contends that the justice of the death penalty must be assessed on a case-by-case basis, without any minimum chronological limit. Such a minimum age would, in Respondent's view, prevent the states from making careful, individualized judgments. Oklahoma argues that young offenders as a group are too diverse in their levels of emotional and moral maturity to permit an age-based line to be drawn between those who should be exempt from the death penalty and those who should not.

Oklahoma ignores crucial facts known and consistently accepted by this Court about young people. While human beings are still adolescents, they share common emotional and intellectual features which distinguish them as a class from adults. Because children and adolescents are fundamentally different than adults, American jurisprudential traditions treat the young differently-- as a class.⁶ Unless these traditions are to be ignored, the well-known, widely-accepted differences between adolescents and adults compel the conclusion that the death penalty is a cruel and unusual punishment for youthful offenders.⁷

⁶As the American Bar Association as Amicus Curiae wrote:

Our society recognizes that minors are less mature, less experienced, less able to exercise good judgment and self-restraint, more susceptible to environmental influence (both positive and negative), and as a result, less responsible and less culpable in a moral sense than adults.

Brief of Amicus Curiae American Bar Association at 3. See also Brief of American Society for Adolescent Psychiatry and American Orthopsychiatric Association As Amici Curiae at 3-8; Brief of Child Welfare League of America et. al. as Amici Curiae at 28-32 and 43-53; Brief of National Legal Aid and Defender Association et. al as Amici Curiae at 5-21.

Of course, it is true that young people grow in different ways and at different rates. Still, Oklahoma is not really arguing that it seeks the death of only the most mature and the most responsible of youthful offenders. On the contrary, in the case at bar, Oklahoma takes a position consistent with its argument in Eddings v. Oklahoma, in which Counsel for Respondent ⁷Respondent and its Amici suggest that drawing an age-based line is "wholly arbitrary," despite the fact that half of the death penalty states have drawn minimum lines that bar death sentences for fifteen-year-olds. See Appendices A and B to this brief.

An age-based line would not be arbitrary. A minimum chronological age, such as eighteen years, would serve a purpose. An age limit would protect the explicit constitutional value against cruel and unusual punishment. This value must be understood and interpreted in light of this nation's traditions, which, in this case, require a decent restraint in the judgments and punishments of the young.

This Court has found it proper to draw lines to protect constitutional values in other contexts. For example, in the first amendment context, the federal courts searched for "qualitative formula[e], hard, difficult to evade" in defense of expressive liberty. Letter from Learned Hand to Zechariah Chafee, Jr., (Jan. 2, 1921), reprinted in Gunther, Learned Hand and the Origins of Modern First Amendment Doctrine: Some Fragments of History, 27 Stan. L. Rev. 719, 769 app. (1975). See also, e.g., Ballew v. Georgia, 435 U.S. 223 (1978) (line drawn between five-person and six-person juries for purposes of unanimity requirement); Baldwin v. New York, 399 U.S. 66 (1970) (line drawn between imprisonment for more than six months and imprisonment for less than six months in determining right to jury trial); Bloom v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 194 (1968) (drawing line between criminal contempts which must be tried to jury and those when need not be so tried, based on states' line drawing for similarly punished crimes).

explicitly defended the position that emotional maturity is not essential to warrant certification of a juvenile to stand trial as an adult and that a State "should [not] be required to show that a killer is emotionally mature, because probably he is not going to be." Transcript of Oral Argument, Eddings v. Oklahoma, supra, at 41. Rather, Oklahoma argues, the horrifying nature of a crime is enough to justify a death sentence imposed on any adolescent who knew the difference between right and wrong. Brief of Respondent Oklahoma at 65-67. Oklahoma's insistence that some brutal crimes can only be punished by death, id. at 67, belies the State's plea that it now wants the freedom to administer a system "sensible to the uniqueness of the individual." Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. at 110.

It is undeniably true, as the Respondent contends, "that this class of [young murderers is] capable of committing horrifying crimes." Brief of Respondent Oklahoma at 65. Without any question, "young murderers are capable of acts of incredible viciousness and cruelty." Id. at 66.

Yet, despite these truths, it must be denied-- again and again-- that these facts amount to a complete and adequate justification for the death penalty in any particular case or class of cases. The brutality of a crime-- even extreme brutality-- is not a sufficient index to moral guilt. The horrible character of all-too-many murders obscures the reality that those "who commit criminal acts that are attributable to a disadvantaged background, or to emotional and mental problems, may be less culpable than defendants who have no such excuse." California v. Brown, ___ U.S. ___, 107 S.Ct. 837, 841 (1987) (O'Connor, J., concurring). This Court requires that juries or other sentencing authorities must give attention not only to the manner of the crime, but also to the responsibility of the criminal. See, e.g. Sumner v. Shuman, ___ U.S. ___, 107 S.Ct. 2716, 2722-23 & n. 5 (1987). When analysis does focus on the moral responsibility of adolescents-- even those guilty of the most brutal crimes-- the retributive justice of a death sentence against a child or adolescent is almost impossible to see.

Adolescents who commit murder typically suffer from a variety of serious disturbances which inhibit their natural growth and development. [T]hese disturbances, acting in combination, exacerbate the already existing vulnerabilities of youth and place an adolescent at extreme risk for seriously violent behavior.

Brief of American Society for Adolescent Psychiatry and the American Orthopsychiatric Association as Amicus Curiae at 9. Careful study of those young men and women condemned to death while still children or adolescents reveals the tragic patterns that led to their individual fates. These tragic factors tend to lessen moral guilt. These condemned human beings are not innocents, but before the brutal nature of their crimes is used to obscure their humanity, this Court must remember that they are also victims: They are victims of chaotic family backgrounds; they have suffered extreme physical and sexual abuse; they have been witnesses to or victims of "sustained, repetitive" and extraordinarily brutal intrafamily violence; some suffered express or implicit family pressure to kill; often they were afflicted with severe cognitive limitations, physiological damage increasing impulsivity and volatility, and psychiatric disorders. Id. Under such circumstances, despite Oklahoma's arguments to the contrary, state judicial systems are not justified in believing that the brutality of the crimes "are themselves so grievous... that the only adequate response may be the penalty of death." Brief of Respondent Oklahoma at 67, quoting Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. at 184.

Even when horrifyingly brutal crimes are the focus for inquiry, Respondent Oklahoma assumes a burden of proof it cannot carry. While it is true that Petitioner cannot rely on clear-cut precedents to justify a minimum chronological age, Oklahoma cannot rely on any precedent to argue-- as it does-- that in this undefined class of particularly brutal murders, youth, chronological age and emotional immaturity are of no special relevance to the fundamental questions of moral guilt, personal responsibility and retributive justice.⁸ As Justice Powell ⁸Oklahoma cites Rumbaugh v. Procunier, 753 F.2d 395 (5th Cir. 1983), cert. denied sub. nom. Rumbaugh v. McCotter, 473 U.S. 919 (1985) for the proposition that "a seventeen-year-old person... did not lack the requisite mental competence to waive his right to further judicial review of his [death] sentence." The State infers from Rumbaugh that "[i]f a young person can be found to be able ... to choose to stop further appeals of his death sentence..., certainly a state judicial system should be able to find that certain juveniles should... receive the death sentence...." Brief of Respondent Oklahoma at 43-44.

Oklahoma misstates the Rumbaugh decision. The condemned man, Rumbaugh, was approximately twenty-five years old at the time he waived further appeals rights, although he had been seventeen years and ten months old at the time of his crime. V.

wrote:

Where a capital defendant's chronological immaturity is compounded by "serious emotional problems, ... a neglectful, sometimes even violent, family background, ... [and] mental and emotional development ... at a level several years below his chronological age," ... the relevance of this information to the defendant's culpability and thus to the sentencing body, is particularly acute. The Constitution requires that a capital sentencing system reflect this difference in criminal responsibility between children and adults.

Burger v. Kemp, 107 S.Ct. at 3140 (Powell, J., dissenting).

Yet, in some cases, the brutal nature of the crime-- or perhaps the inflammatory nature of the evidence-- will often be enough to prevent "a reasoned moral response to the defendant's background, character and crime," Sumner v. Shuman, 107 S.Ct. at 2723 n. 5; California v. Brown, 107 S.Ct. at 841 (O'Connor, J., concurring). In such tragic cases, "mere sympathy or emotion," id., will all too frequently govern the outcome of the sentencing proceeding. When the facts respecting moral guilt of condemned children and adolescents are collected, as they have been by Amici American Society for Adolescent Psychiatry and American Orthopsychiatric Association, there is good reason to condemn the sensitivity, the objectivity, the fairness and the justice of a case-by-case assessment of youth as mitigating circumstance-- particularly when the crimes are the most horrifying. When a murder is particularly brutal, the reality is that the undeniable tradition of more careful, more sensitive consideration of Streib, Death Penalty for Juveniles 121-25 (1987).

youthful offenders⁹ cannot be vindicated except by means of a minimum chronological age.¹⁰

⁹The Brief Amici Curiae of Kentucky et. al. argues that the Petitioner's statistics do not sustain the contention that state criminal courts are reluctant to condemn the young to death.

It is true that Petitioner's statistics are not refined in some of the respects identified by Respondent's Amici. However, they are completely adequate to verify the reluctance of the criminal system to impose death sentences on the young. Many of the factors that were not measured in petitioner's statistics still reflect the criminal justice system's reluctance to impose death sentences on children and adolescents: If an adolescent murderer escapes a death sentence because state courts refused to waive juvenile jurisdiction or because the prosecutor never requested a capital sentence or because a prosecutor accepted a plea bargain or even because a state refuses to inflict a penalty of death on anyone, the important point is that the adolescent murderer was not sentenced to die. Thus, Amici cannot deny the reality that criminal justice systems only rarely condemn the young to death.

Kentucky's Amici Brief provides no numbers at all to refute the statistics of petitioner. Indeed, when Kentucky asserts the existence of a contrary trend-- that there is an increasing trend towards more juvenile executions-- it provides no data whatever.

¹⁰The Amici Curiae Brief of Kentucky et. al. condemns the rigidity of any "bright line" chronological age limit on the States' ability to condemn adolescents to death. However, there is not even a consensus on this point among the nineteen states signing the Amici brief.

(1) Only one of the nineteen states joining the brief currently has anyone under a sentence of death for a crime committed at age fifteen or younger. That one state, North Carolina, recently amended its death penalty statute to prohibit the death penalty for crimes committed by individuals under age seventeen (with minor exceptions). See Appendix A.

(2) Two other states joining the Amici Brief (Connecticut and New Mexico) have minimum ages of eighteen in their statutes.

(3) The primary author of the Amici Brief, the state of Kentucky, has recently enacted a minimum age of sixteen.

(4) The state of Kansas has no death penalty at all.

Thus, it is plain that the personal opinions of the

II. The reliability of the death sentencing process was undermined by the admission of prejudicial, inflammatory photographs.

The Respondent failed to notify this Court of Jones v. State, 738 P.2d 525 (Okla. Cr. 1987), a case involving the same murder that led to Petitioner's death sentence.¹¹ In Jones, the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals overturned the conviction and death sentence of one of the Petitioner's adult co-defendants. The appellate court also reaffirmed its strong condemnation of the trial court's admission of gruesome color photographs depicting the victim's decomposing remains.

Despite the clear findings of the Court of Criminal Appeals in the opinion below in the case at bar and in its opinion in Jones, the State insists that the color photographs of the victim's decomposing body had probative value and were not inflammatory so that their admission at trial did not render the trial fundamentally unfair. Brief of Respondent Oklahoma at 90-91, 94-95. In reality, the State asks this Court to substitute its own judgment on state evidentiary questions for the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeals, which reaffirmed its judgment in Jones.

A trial court abuses its discretion when it admits

Attorneys General for these five states are not shared by the legislatures of their states or by the people of their States.

¹¹The opinion was decided on May 22, 1987. It was not published until the June 6, 1987 issue of the Oklahoma Bar Journal, 58 O.B.J. 1592, after filing of the Petitioner's Brief, but two months before Respondent's Brief was filed.

gruesome photographs, and the probative value of such photographs is substantially outweighed by potential prejudice to the accused.

Our examination of these two color photographs leads us to conclude that their minimal probative force, in light of their cumulative nature, was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice.... The two photographs depicted the body of Keene, which had been submerged for nearly a month, and was obviously in a state of decomposition. In State's Exhibit 10, the body is shown covered with algae and slime, a factor which added to its gruesomeness, and lessened its probative value as the algae partially covered the wounds. State's Exhibit No. 11, which also revealed Keene's algae covered body, depicted the body in an advanced state of decomposition as evidenced by the condition of the skin and hair, portions of which were missing. These two photographs added virtually nothing to the State's submission of proof, and served no other purpose than to inflame the jury. See Thompson v. State, 724 P.2d 780, 782 (Okla. Cr. 1986).

738 P.2d 528 (citations omitted).¹²

In light of the appellate court's discussion of the photographs' admission in Thompson and Jones, the constitutional issue in the instant case is clarified. Petitioner need not-- and does not-- ask this Court to begin the difficult task of establishing constitutional standards for deciding what evidence is too gruesome and what evidence is not. When state courts find that inflammatory evidence has been erroneously admitted, state courts are obligated to recognize and remedy not only prejudice to guilt-innocence deliberations, but also the prejudice to an accused's federal rights to a fair and reliable death sentencing procedure. Thus, the mistakes of the trial court may have related to state evidentiary problems initially, but they proved to be fundamental and constitutional in their effect in this case.

¹²The Court also found that the trial prosecutor in the Jones and Thompson cases, who appeared personally before the Court of Criminal Appeals to argue Jones, engaged in various forms of serious and prejudicial prosecutorial misconduct. Jones, 738 P.2d at 528-531. "[A] prosecutor is strictly prohibited from using arguments calculated to inflame the passions and prejudices of the jury." Id. at 529.

Oklahoma insists that the erroneous introduction of the photographs is harmless, because "evidence in this case was strong." Brief of Respondent Oklahoma at 94 (quoting Thompson v. State, 724 P.2d 780, 783 (Okla. Crim. App. 1986)).

Unlike the argument of Respondent's Brief before this Court, the Court of Criminal Appeals was focusing on whether the photographs affected deliberations over guilt and innocence. Respondent's Brief now asserts that the inflammatory photos did not prejudice the jury's determination that the murder was "especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel"-- although the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals did not consider this point.

In other words, Oklahoma offers a new analysis that was not offered by the Court of Appeals: Because there is substantial evidence of serious physical abuse, the existence of a statutory aggravating circumstance is clear and the boy could be sentenced to death.

Respondent's analysis misses a step. Even assuming that the jury would have found an aggravating circumstance without the photographs,¹³ the jury is also required by Oklahoma's death penalty statutes to weigh the aggravating circumstances against the mitigating circumstances. 21 Okla.Stat. §§701.10, 701.11. Cartwright v. Maynard, 822 F.2d 1477, 1480 (10th Cir. 1987) (in Oklahoma, "the sentencer must balance all... statutory aggravating circumstances with all... mitigating circumstances.")

Oklahoma's analysis fails to come to grips with the fact that the inflammatory evidence could-- and probably did-- affect ¹³Even this assumption is mistaken.

The boy's eligibility for a death sentence is supported by only one aggravating circumstance-- that the murder was "especially heinous, atrocious or cruel." The jury's reactions to the crime, not to the boy, are the only articulated basis of the sentence.

The introduction of these inflammatory photographs calculated to inflame the jury, Thompson v. State, 724 P.2d at 782, along with the prosecutor's repeated, improper use of those photographs, injected powerfully emotional but legally irrelevant considerations into the jury's deliberations over the character of the killing. By riveting the jury's attention on the effects of the crime-- the decomposing remains-- the prosecutor distracted the jury from its real function of deciding whether the manner of this particular crime was "especially heinous, atrocious or cruel." The jury's physical and emotional revulsion at the spectacle of decomposing remains may have led the jury to apply the statutory standard improperly. Cf. Godfrey v. Georgia, 446 U.S. 420 (1980) (jury's deliberations must be channeled by clear and objective standards); Cartwright v. Maynard, 822 F.2d 1477 (10th Cir. 1987) (Oklahoma's use of "especially heinous, atrocious or cruel" aggravating standard is unconstitutionally overbroad, because objective standards to guide jury did not exist).

In short, Respondent's theories notwithstanding, if the photographs had not been misused, the jury might have decided that the killing was not so "especially heinous, atrocious or cruel" as to establish this aggravating circumstance beyond reasonable doubt. Even if a finding of this aggravating circumstance was theoretically possible, it was not logically inevitable or legally mandatory-- in light of all circumstances.

the jury's weighting of the single aggravating circumstance and all mitigating circumstances. The prosecutor deliberately used these inflammatory photographs to alter the jury's "balancing" of the aggravating and mitigating factors. Despite defense counsel's objections, the trial court allowed the prosecutor's inflammatory tactics, except for a mild warning not to wave the photographs in front of the jury. Under these circumstances, the emotional impact of the photographs on the jury's "balancing" and on its ultimate decision must be presumed.¹⁴

This Court cannot affirm the death sentence in this case without turning its back on established principle that "the sentence imposed... should reflect a reasoned, moral response to the defendant's background, character and crime rather than mere sympathy or emotion." California v. Brown, 107 S.Ct. at 841

¹⁴Respondent tries to minimize the impact of the photographs on the sentencing process by citing the jury's refusal to find that the boy would probably commit violent criminal acts again. Respondent claims that this aspect of the jury's verdict shows that it was not acting "irresponsibly." Brief of Respondent Oklahoma at 95.

The prosecutor introduced the photographs because he wanted the jurors to confront the spectacle of decomposing remains. The prosecutor wanted the jury to be revolted at the sight of the photographs. And he wanted that revulsion to drive the jury toward one, and perhaps two aggravating circumstances and a death sentence. That he was only partially successful-- the jury cited only one aggravating circumstance and returned a death sentence--does not negate the presence of unconstitutional emotion and prejudice.

Indeed, the split verdict on the prosecution's bill of particulars suggests that the inflammatory photographs had great impact when the jury placed such overriding significance on the presence of the single aggravating circumstance in its final decision to impose a sentence of death.

(O'Connor, J., concurring). See also, e.g., Sumner v. Shuman, 107 S.Ct. 2723 n. 5; Gardner v. Florida, 430 U.S. 349, 358 (1977) (Any death sentence must "be, and appear to be, based on reason rather than caprice or emotion."); Booth v. Maryland, ___ U.S. ___, 107 S.Ct. 2529, 2536 (1987) (same); Zant v. Stephens, 462 U.S. at 885 (same). The photographs-- and the prosecutors' use of the photographs-- posed a clearer, more serious danger to the fairness and reliability of the sentencing process than the victim impact statements which the Court found to be unconstitutionally admitted for jury consideration in Booth v. Maryland. Oklahoma's attempt to put a boy to death for a crime committed while he was still a child of fifteen years makes the following principles all the more pertinent:

[A] jury must make an "individualized determination" of whether the defendant in question should be executed, based on "the character of the individual and the circumstances of the crime."... [E]vidence [considered during sentencing must have] some bearing on the defendant's "personal responsibility and moral guilt." To do otherwise would create the risk that a death sentence will be based on considerations that are "constitutionally impermissible or totally irrelevant to the sentencing process."

107 S.Ct. at 2533.

Moreover, these victim impact photographs were more serious violations of the accused's rights to a fair sentencing proceeding than Maryland's victim impact statements in Booth for reasons suggested by Justice White and Justice Scalia, dissenting. Justice White emphasized that Maryland's legislature made a specific judgment "the jury should have the testimony of the victim's family in order to assist it in weighing the degree of harm that the defendant has caused and the corresponding degree of punishment that should be inflicted." This legislative decision, Justice White argued, "was entitled to particular deference." 107 S.Ct. at 2539. In this case, by contrast, Oklahoma's legislative and judicial judgments clearly indicate that the jury should not have had the inflammatory photographs of decomposing remains before them. Respondent cannot argue that this Court should defer to Oklahoma's judgments about sentencing process, because Oklahoma's procedural and evidence law was violated, as held by the Court of Criminal Appeals.

Moreover, Respondent Oklahoma does not and cannot claim that jury examination of these photographs was pertinent to the jury's duty to assess the boy's "personal responsibility." 107 S.Ct. 2542 (Scalia, J., dissenting). The emotional and physical reaction to viewing decomposing remains cannot be reasonably compared to Maryland's deliberate effort "to lay before the sentencing authority the full reality of human suffering" caused by a murder. Id.

The Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals has already found that the photographs "added virtually nothing to the State's submission of proof," Jones, supra, 738 P.2d at 528, and that "[a]dmitting them into evidence served no purpose other than to inflame the jury." Thompson v. State, 724 P.2d at 782. Thus, it is hard to imagine how Oklahoma can now evade the lessons of Booth v. Maryland. By deliberately riveting the jury's attention on a decomposing body, the prosecutor-- aided by the decisions of the trial court-- created an "intolerable danger," Caldwell v. Mississippi, ___ U.S. ___, 105 S.Ct. 2633, 2641 (1985), that the jury would be "distract[ed] from its constitutionally required task-- determining whether the death penalty is appropriate in light of the background and record of the accused and the particular circumstances of the crime." Booth, 107 S.Ct. at 2535.

Conclusion

Petitioner respectfully requests that this Court reverse the judgment of the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals insofar as it affirmed the death sentence in this case, vacate the death sentence and grant such other relief as it deems appropriate.

Statute citations were compiled in Appendix B of the Brief of Petitioner previously filed in this case. The following notes correct and update Appendix B of the Brief of Petitioner:

¹Ind. Code Ann. §31-6-2-4 (H.B. 1022 1987) (minimum age sixteen for general criminal court jurisdiction, but legislative debate centered on the proper minimum age for imposing death sentences).

NOTE: Since the death penalty cannot be imposed by juvenile courts, a statute with an express minimum age for adult court jurisdiction has the effect of setting a minimum chronological age for capital punishment. It is clear from the legislative history of many of these statutes that the effect on the death penalty was not explicitly considered when these statutes were enacted. V. Streib, Death Penalty for Juveniles 43-45 (1987). As noted, Indiana is an exception to this generalization.

BRIEF OF THE NATIONAL LEGAL AID AND DEFENDER ASSOCIATION,
THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF CRIMINAL DEFENSE LAWYERS, AND THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE
AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

INTEREST OF *AMICI CURIAE*¹

The National Legal Aid and Defender Association (NLADA) is a non-profit organization with a membership of approximately 4,700 attorneys and organizations. NLADA's primary purpose is to assist in providing effective legal services to persons unable to retain counsel in criminal and civil proceedings.

The National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers (NACDL) is a non-profit corporation with a nation-wide membership of over 4,000 lawyers. It is concerned with the protection of individual rights and the improvement of criminal law practice and procedures.

The American Jewish Committee (AJC) is an organization of some 50,000 members which was founded in 1906, primarily to protect the civil and religious rights of Jews. AJC, however, has also been deeply committed to assuring liberty and justice for all Americans.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Amici begin with the assumption—accepted by the State of Oklahoma in Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. 104 (1982)—that there is some age below which execution becomes cruel and unusual punishment. This brief addresses the question invited by such an assumption: At what age does our culture set the line? Amici's answer is age 18. Throughout our legal system, we recognize age 18 as the dividing line between adult responsibilities and childhood. That is the only principled line here as well.

In most states and for most purposes, minority status—defined as lower than age 18—confers a host of legal disabilities. Minors are treated differently because minors are different: The diverse legal disabilities are bottomed on the common sense and empirically supportable notion that minors lack maturity, judgment, impulse control and experience. Finally, exemption of minors from capital punishment will not detract from the penological justifications for the death penalty. Exclusion of minors from the death penalty would not abate the deterrent force of the penalty for other minors, since adolescents are less likely to commit the sort of coldly calculated crimes that the death penalty may be expected to deter. Exemption of minors from execution would not dilute deterrence for adults, because adults would most likely not identify with condemned minors. Juvenile executions also are so rare that preclusion of such executions can have little impact on the deterrence of the population at large. Jury behavior demonstrates that execution of minors would not materially advance the interest in retribution: Juries, the representatives of the community whose outrage is being expressed by death sentences, seldom vote to condemn minors.

ARGUMENT

THE EXECUTION OF A YOUTH WHO WAS UNDER THE AGE OF EIGHTEEN AT THE TIME OF THE OFFENSE WOULD VIOLATE EVOLVING STANDARDS OF DECENCY

The cruel and unusual punishments clause of the eighth amendment, made binding upon the states through the fourteenth amendment, prohibits punishments that violate "the evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society," Trop v. Dulles, 356 U.S. 86, 101 (1958), as those standards are revealed by history and tradition, legislative enactments, and actual jury verdicts. Tison v. Arizona, 55 U.S.L.W. 4496, 4499 (U.S. April 21, 1987); Enmund v. Florida, 458 U.S. 782 (1982); Coker v. Georgia, 433 U.S. 584, 592 (1977). The execution of a youth for an offense committed when he was under age 18 violates contemporary norms and is therefore unconstitutional.

When it last argued to the Court that minors may be put to death, the State of Oklahoma conceded that "it would be cruel and unusual punishment to impose the death penalty on an individual who was ten years old [T]hat by itself would be enough to convince anybody, including this Court, that a ten-year-old person under no circumstances should receive the death penalty." Transcript of Oral Argument (November 2, 1981) at 28, Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. 104 (1982). The age of ten was not hypothetical. The youngest children known to have been executed in the United States were two ten-year-olds: A Black child, whose name has been lost to history and who was hanged in Louisiana in 1855, and

Today, we intuitively recoil at the thought of putting a ten-year-old child to death. This reaction reflects a century-old evolution both in the law and in the culture within which the law evolves, an evolution towards recognition of a special concern for young people. The vexing question then becomes: At what age does this special concern for young people give way to an insistence that they pay the ultimate price for their acts?

This question was presented in Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. 105 (1982), but the Court did not reach the constitutionality of inflicting the death penalty on juveniles. Id. at 110 n.5. Instead, the Court remanded Eddings' death sentence to the Oklahoma courts with instructions to "consider all relevant mitigating evidence and weigh it against the evidence of the aggravating circumstances." Id. at 117. Eddings held that "youth must be considered a relevant mitigating factor." Id. at 115. Amici submit that the individualized consideration of the defendant's age required by Eddings is insufficient to prevent the imposition of death sentences which are cruel and unusual under contemporary standards.³ The facts of the case before the Court starkly illustrate the need to draw a line between childhood and adulthood that reflects our shared notions of responsibility and culpability.

² Streib, Death Penalty for Children: The American Experience With Capital Punishment for Crimes Committed While Under Age Eighteen, 36 Okla. L. Rev. 613, 619-20 (1983). Estimates of the youngest person put to death in this century vary. One commentator opined that "since 1900, the youngest has been 13-year-old Fortune Ferguson, Jr., electrocuted at the Florida State Prison on April 27, 1927." Id. at 620. Another writer argued that George Stinney, executed at age 14 by South Carolina in 1944, was the youngest person put to death in this century. ³ In Eddings, the death sentence was reinstated by the trial judge following remand from this Court. Eddings v. State, 688 P.2d 342, 343 (Okla. Crim. App. 1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1051 (1985). The Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals modified the sentence to life imprisonment. Id.

Amici will demonstrate that the eighth and fourteenth amendments require that a person be eighteen years or older at the time of the offense to be subject to the death penalty.⁴ Drawing the line at any given age should be "informed by objective factors to the maximum possible extent." Coker v. Georgia, 433 U.S. 584, 592 (1977). In this case the line is easier to identify than most: Throughout our legal system, we recognize age eighteen as the dividing line between adult responsibility and childhood.

A. In Most States and for Most Purposes, Age Eighteen Marks the Boundary Between Childhood and Adult Responsibilities

The "law has generally regarded minors as having a lesser capability for making important decisions," Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678, 693 n.15 (1977), and "recognizes a host of distinctions between the rights and duties of children and those of adults." New Jersey v. T.L.O., 469 U.S. 325, 350 n.2 (1985) (Powell, J., concurring). Because of these distinctions, the Court has "sustained legislation aimed at protecting the physical and emotional well-being of youth even when the laws have operated in the sensitive area of constitutionally protected rights." New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747, 757 (1982). The "State's interest in the welfare of its young citizens justifies a variety of protective measures. Because he may not foresee the consequences of his decision, a minor may not make an enforceable bargain. He may not lawfully work or travel where he pleases, or even attend exhibitions of constitutionally protected adult motion pictures. Persons below a certain age may not marry without parental consent." H. L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398, 421-22 (1981) (Stevens, J., concurring) (quoting Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 102 (1976) (Stevens, J., dissenting)); see also Danforth, 428 U.S. at 95 & n.2 (White, J., dissenting). The "experience of mankind, as well as the long history of our law, recogniz[es] that there are differences which must be accommodated in determining the rights and duties of children as compared with those of adults. Examples of this distinction abound in our law: in contracts, in torts, in criminal law and procedure, in criminal sanctions and rehabilitation, and in the right to vote and to hold office." Goss v. Lopez, 419 U.S. 565, 590-91 (1975) (Powell, J., dissenting) (emphasis in original).

L.J. 757, 775-80 (1986); United States Department of Health and Human Services, The Legal Status of Adolescents 1980 (1981). These legal disabilities are not without exceptions. The "emancipation" of a minor—by, for example, marriage or enlistment in the armed services—may free him from the legal disabilities prior to the actual date of his majority. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Code Ann. § 62 (West 1954 & Supp. 1986); Utah Code Ann. § 15-2-1 (Supp. 1986). However, parental consent is required for minors to marry, see Appendix C, or to enlist in the military. 50 U.S.C. § 454 app. (c) (1981). The "mature minor" notion also permits a child to consent to medical treatment if he is capable of appreciating its nature and consequences. See, e.g., Ark. Stat. Ann. § 82-363(g) (1976 & Supp. 1986). Few jurisdictions recognize this concept, however.

hearings,²⁰ both state and federal legislatures agreed to give constitutional significance to age 18 as the time when young people should first be permitted to participate in the most basic civic responsibility of adults in our democracy. Eighteen also is the minimum age at which a citizen may be drafted into the armed services as well as the minimum age at which a person may enlist without parental consent. 50 U.S.C. app. § 454(a), (c) (1981).

In most states and for most purposes, a "minor" means one below age 18:

- Forty-four jurisdictions set age 18 as the age of majority; two jurisdictions set the age at 21, three at 19, and two do not set a uniform age of majority. See Appendix A.
- Forty-three jurisdictions require jurors to be 18 years or older, while three require jurors to be at least 19 years and five require jurors to be at least 21. See Appendix B.
- In fifty jurisdictions, both parties must be at least 18 years old to marry without parental consent. In one jurisdiction, both parties must be at least 21 years old. See Appendix C.
- Thirty-seven jurisdictions establish 18 (unless the minor is emancipated) as the age of consent for all forms of non-emergency medical treatment; one jurisdiction puts the age at 17, one jurisdiction puts the age at 16, one sets the age at 15, one jurisdiction puts the age at 14, two permit treatment if the minor is able to understand the decision, and eight jurisdictions have no legislation in this area. See Appendix D.

- Thirty-three jurisdictions require a person to be 18 to receive a driver's license without parental consent; four jurisdictions set the age at 17, while fourteen set it at 16. See Appendix E.
- In forty jurisdictions, a person must be at least 18 to purchase pornographic materials; six jurisdictions set the age at 17, two jurisdictions set it at 16, one sets it at 19, one has simply outlawed obscenity by statute, and one jurisdiction has no legislation in this area. See Appendix F.
- Of the thirty-nine jurisdictions which permit gambling, thirty-one set the minimum age at 18, four set it at 21, one sets it at 19, one at 17, and two at 16. See Appendix G.
- Of the twenty-three jurisdictions which set a minimum age for admission to pool halls, nineteen jurisdictions put the age at 18, two set the age at 16, while one jurisdiction puts the age at 21, and one puts it at 19. See Appendix H.
- Of the thirty-one jurisdictions which set a minimum age for the right to pawn property, or to sell to junk or precious metals dealers, twenty-eight set the age at 18, while three set the age at 16. See Appendix I.
- In twenty-five jurisdictions, a person must be at least 18 years old to work in a hazardous occupation. One jurisdiction puts the age at 17, twenty-two jurisdictions set the age at 16, and three put it at 14. See Appendix J.

Note, Curfew Ordinances and the Control of Nocturnal Juvenile Crime, 107 U. Pa. L. Rev. 66, 66-68 & n.5 (1958). Contemporary attitudes toward minors are reflected further in the development of juvenile justice systems. "Juvenile courts exist because Americans admit to a fundamental difference between children and adults." Institute of Judicial Administration/American Bar Association, Juvenile Justice Standards, Standards Relating to Transfer Between Courts 1 (1980). Every state has a comprehensive juvenile court system, Kent v. United States, 383 U.S. 541, 554 n.19 (1966), the principal purpose of which is to rehabilitate²² and the premise of which is that minors are not fully responsible for their offenses and therefore should be treated more benignly than their adult counterparts. See McKeiver v. Pennsylvania, 403 U.S. 528, 551-52 (1971) (White, J., concurring); Institute of Judicial Administration/American Bar Association, Juvenile Standards, Standards Relating to Transfer nance; the proposed D.C. law would set the age at 18. LaFraniere, Minors' Entertainment Curfew Sought in D.C., Washington Post, May 6, 1987, at C1.

²² To be sure, the "fond and idealistic hopes of the juvenile court proponents and early reformers of three generations ago have not been realized." McKeiver v. Pennsylvania, 403 U.S. 528, 543-44 (1971); see also In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358 (1970). But the disappointments have turned more on "the availability of resources, on the interest and commitment of the public, on the willingness to learn, and on understanding as to cause and effect," McKeiver, 403 U.S. at 547, rather than on fundamental flaws in the juvenile court philosophy. The Court's cases, such as McKeiver and Winship, confirm that virtually none of "[t]he serious critics of the juvenile court experiment . . . question the initial decision that adolescents ought to be handled in a legal process separate from adults. The battle is over the treatment of adolescents within the separate process." Handler, The Juvenile Court and the Adversary System: Problems of Function and Form, 1965 Wis. L. Rev. 7, 8; see also President's Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice, Task Force Report: Juvenile Delinquency and Youth Crime 9 (1967) (quoted in *McKeiver v. Between Courts 1 (1980); The Juvenile Court and Serious Offenders, 35 Juv. & Family Ct. J. (Preamble) (Summer 1984). In particular, the legislation establishing juvenile court jurisdiction supports the proposition that age 18 is the relevant cut-off point between childhood and adult responsibilities. Thirty-seven states and the District of Columbia designate 18 years as the appropriate maximum age for juvenile court jurisdiction; one state sets the age at 19, eight set the age at 17, and four set the age at 16. S. Davis, Rights of Juveniles: The Juvenile Justice System, App. B (1986); accord National Institute for Juvenile Justice and Delinquency, U.S. Department of Justice, Major Issues in Juvenile Justice Information and Training, Youth in Adult Courts: Between Two Worlds 44, 86 n.2 (1982). Most model standards reflect the judgment of the vast majority of jurisdictions which set age 18 as the boundary of juvenile courts.²³ The Institute of Judicial Administration and the American Bar Association, for example, proposed that the "eighteenth birthday should define an adult for the purposes of court jurisdiction" because the "eighteenth birthday signals the achievement of majority for many legal purposes. The twenty-sixth amendment to the United States Constitution establishes a constitutional right to vote in federal elections at that age. This near consensus among the states and the federal government argues compellingly that juvenile court jurisdiction should end at eighteen." Standards Relating to Transfer Between Courts, supra, Commentary to Standard 1.1A.²⁴

The limitation of eligibility for the death penalty to those eighteen years or older at the time of the offense is supported by the American Bar Association, the American Law Institute's Model Penal Code and the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws. The ABA passed a resolution in 1983 opposing "the imposi-

²⁴ We recognize that while every state and the District of Columbia has a juvenile justice system, most jurisdictions also have mechanisms permitting transfer of otherwise juvenile cases into the adult criminal justice system. At least three states—New York, Nebraska and Arkansas—do not provide for waiver of jurisdiction. S. Davis, supra at 4-1. Moreover, the broad consensus of the 38 jurisdictions that recognize age 18 as the general limit to juvenile court jurisdiction demonstrates that our society recognizes age 18 as a crucial watershed in an individual's development. Whatever courts may be chosen to try a juvenile under 18 charged with murder by operation of transfer provisions, our evolving standards of decency forbid execution of such an offender.

This conclusion is consistent with the rationale underlying transfer provisions: namely, there are certain juveniles who will require punishment or treatment beyond the age of eighteen, the jurisdictional limitations for most juvenile courts. By permitting transfer of these juveniles to the adult system, these courts gain jurisdiction to ensure that the penal system will have sufficient time both to exact the necessary punishment and to attempt rehabilitation. Furthermore, the decision to transfer a juvenile into the adult court system does not turn on questions of individualization and criminal responsibility, both constitutionally indispensable in deciding whether to impose the death penalty. Transfer and capital sentencing simply ask different questions. Comment, Capital Punishment for Minors: An Eighth Amendment Analysis, 74 J. Crim. L. & Criminology 1471, 1499-1501 (1983).

tion of capital punishment upon any person for any offense committed while under the age of eighteen." See American Bar Association Report No. 117A, approved August 1983; see also Streib, The Eighth Amendment and Capital Punishment of Juveniles, 34 Clev. St. L. Rev. 363, 388 (1987). This resolution is especially significant because it is the first time in its history that the ABA has taken a formal position on any aspect of capital punishment. The American Law Institute's Model Penal Code has, since 1962, contained a recommendation that the death penalty not be imposed on offenders below age eighteen. See American Law Institute, Model Penal Code § 210.6(1)(d) (Proposed Official Draft 1962). This view was reaffirmed by revisers of the Code in 1980, despite suggestions that the age be lowered or that youth merely be considered as a mitigating circumstance. See American Law Institute, Model Penal Code § 210.6, Comment at 133 (Official Draft and Revised Comments 1980). The National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws also took the position that 18 ought to be the minimum age. See National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws, Final Report of the New Federal Code § 3603 (1971).

The domestic legislative evidence that age 18 is the appropriate boundary between juvenile and adult responsibility coincides with international law. Although incomplete, "[t]he available evidence of contemporary state practice in the application of the death penalty seems to establish a remarkably consistent adherence to the prohibition on execution of juvenile offenders in all regions and political systems." Hartman, Unusual Punishment: The Domestic Effects of International Norms Restricting the Application of the Death Penalty, 52 U. Cin. L. Rev. 655, 666 (1983). Of the 164 countries for which data were available, 122 imposed the death penalty. Significantly, of these 122 countries, 45 had statutory provisions recognizing youth as exempt from the death penalty: 29 nations set the minimum age at 18, one sets the age at 21, three at 20, five at 16, and five prohibited the execution of "minors" while two others prohibited the execution of "young people." Id. at 666-67 n.44. The significance of these figures is not so much that nations set a minimum age, but that two-thirds of those which did set the age at 18. Equally significant, of 81 nations which were reported to have actually executed persons in the period between 1973 and 1982, only two states officially reported executions of juveniles. Id. Out of the thousands of executions recorded by Amnesty International throughout the world between January 1980 and May 1986, only eight in four countries were reported to have been of persons who were under age 18 at the time of the crime; three of these eight executions occurred in the United States. See Amnesty International, United States of America: The Death Penalty 74 (1987).²⁵ An earlier study in 1965 found that out of 95 countries reporting, 61 set age 18 as the minimum age for capital punishment. See Patrick, The Status of Capital Punishment: A World Perspective, 56 J. Crim. L., Criminology, & P.S. 397, 398-404 (1965). Reports of the Secretary General of the United Nations confirm that "the great majority of Member States report never condemning to death persons under 18 years of age." See United Nations, Economic and Social Council, Report of the Secretary General, Capital Punishment 17 (1973). It is telling that the 36 condemned juveniles on America's death row could not have been sentenced to death if they had been convicted in the Soviet Union, China, Iran, Iraq, or South Africa.

The policy of the United States has also reflected these international norms. In 1977, the United States became a signatory to two international human rights treaties that prohibit execution for crimes committed before age 18. The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which has been ratified by 81 nations and signed by another nine nations, provides that death "shall not be imposed for crimes committed by persons below eighteen years." See Multilateral Treaties Deposited With the Secretary General of the U.N., at 124, U.N. Doc. ST/LEG/Ser.E/3 (1985). Similarly, the American Convention on Human Rights, ratified by 19 American nations and signed by an additional three countries, provides that capital punishment "shall not be imposed upon persons who, at the time the crime was committed, were under 18 years of age." See Handbook of Existing Rules Pertaining to Human Rights in the Inter-American System, OEA/Ser.L/V/11.65, Doc. 6, at 63 (July 1, 1985). President Carter signed both treaties in 1977. The Senate has not yet ratified either covenant. Based on the policies embedded in these treaties and other materials, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights recently found an emerging—although not yet extant—norm of customary international law establishing 18 to be the minimum age for imposition of the death penalty. See Resolution N, Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, Organization of American States, OEA/Ser.L/V/11.69, Doc. 17, at 38 (March 27, 1987).

The laws and policies discussed in this section reflect an almost universal judgment that adolescents ought to be treated differently than adults. There generally are no exceptions to that judgment. Public officials do not consider requests by especially mature adolescents to allow them to vote, serve as jurors, or drink alcoholic beverages. As a society, we treat those under age 18 as categorically different from adults.²⁶ These lines reflect clear distinctions between children and adults, distinctions that require this Court to draw the line at age 18 for the imposition of the death penalty.

²⁶ If there is any other arguable contender to age 18, it must be age 21. In 1984 Congress overwhelmingly passed the National Minimum Drinking Age Act withholding federal highway funds

B. The Reasons for the Boundary Line: Adolescents Lack the Maturity, Experience, Moral Judgment and Sophistication of Adults

The various legal disabilities discussed above are bot-tomed on the common sense and empirically supportable assumption that minors lack the maturity, experience, sophistication and judgment necessary to make im-portant decisions. Hafen, Children's Liberation and the New Egalitarianism: Some Reservations About Aban-doning Youth to Their "Rights," 1976 B.Y.U. L. Rev. 605, 644-50. That assumption is what these legal dis-abilities are all about: "Children, by definition, are not

We recognize that the constitutionality of this legislation is a matter presently under plenary consideration by the Court in South Dakota v. Dole, 107 S. Ct. 869 (1987) (order granting certiorari). The outcome of Dole will not affect our point here: The ultimate validity or invalidity of the statute does not minimize the impor-tance of the congressional recognition that teenagers are particu-larly vulnerable to exercising poor judgment and need special pro-tections. Further, no party to the Dole litigation seems to dispute that teenagers need special protections. assumed to have the capacity to take care of themselves." Schall v. Martin, 467 U.S. 253, 265 (1984). For example, in Oregon v. Mitchell, the states sought to "justify exclusion of 18- to 21-year-olds from the voting rolls solely on the basis of the states' interests in promoting intelligent and responsible exercise of the franchise." 400 U.S. 112, 243 (1970) (Brennan, White & Marshall, JJ., dissenting).

The Court has long "assume[d] that juvenile offenders constitutionally may be treated differently from adults," Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622, 635 (1979), and has long recognized that "[c]hildren have a very special place in life which law should reflect. Legal theories and their phrasing in other cases readily lead to fallacious reasoning if uncritically transferred to determination of a State's duty towards children." Eddings, 455 U.S. at 116 n.12 (quoting May v. Anderson, 345 U.S. 528, 536 (1953) (Frankfurter, J., concurring)). The Court has often expressed the rationale underlying this distinction, explaining that "during the formative years of childhood and adolescence, minors often lack the experience, perspective, and judgment to recognize and avoid choices that could be detrimental to them." Bellotti, 443 U.S. at 635; see also H. L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398, 409-11 (1981).

[Y]outh is more than a chronological fact. It is a time and condition of life when a person may be most susceptible to influence and to psychological damage. Our history is replete with laws and judicial recognition that minors, especially in their earlier years, generally are less mature and responsible than adults.

Eddings, 455 U.S. at 115-16 (footnote omitted); see also Skipper v. South Carolina, 106 S. Ct. 1669, 1675 (1986) (Powell, J., concurring); New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. at 776 (Brennan & Marshall, JJ., concurring) (noting "the particular vulnerability of children"); Parham v. J.R., 442 U.S. 584, 603 (1979) ("Most children, even in adolescence, simply are not able to make sound judgments concerning many decisions"); Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S. 629, 649-50 (1968) (Stewart, J., concurring) ("a child . . . is not possessed of that full capacity for individual choice which is the presupposition of First Amendment guarantees") (footnote omitted).

[A]dolescents, particularly in the early and middle teen years, are more vulnerable, more impulsive, and less self-disciplined than adults. Crimes committed by youths may be just as harmful to victims as those committed by older persons, but they deserve less punishment because adolescents may have less capacity to control their conduct and to think in long-range terms than adults. Moreover, youth crime as such is not exclusively the offender's fault; offenses by the young also represent a failure of family, school, and the social system, which share responsibility for the development of America's youth.

Eddings, 455 U.S. at 116 n.11 (quoting Twentieth Century Fund Task Force on Sentencing Policy Toward Young Offenders, Confronting Youth Crime 7 (1978)); see also Skipper v. South Carolina, 106 S. Ct. at 1675 (Powell, J., concurring); Haley v. Ohio, 332 U.S. 596, 599 (1948); Gallegos v. Colorado, 370 U.S. 49, 54 (1962).

"[A]s any parent knows, children at certain ages are inclined to test the outer boundaries of acceptable conduct . . ." T.L.O., 469 U.S. at 352 (Blackmun, J., concurring). The Court has recognized the "period of great instability which the crisis of adolescence produces." Haley, 332 U.S. at 599.

During the "crisis of adolescence" noted in Haley, minors are less mature in their ability to make sound judgments and are less able to control their conduct and to recognize the consequences of their acts. Adolescence is a time²⁷ when young persons frequently are struggling to arrive at a definition of their own identity; adolescents are particularly likely to rebel against adult authority and to seek affirmation by their peers. E. Erickson, Childhood and Society 261-63 (2d ed. 1963). The teen years are "a period of experiment, risktaking and bravado. Some criminal activity is part of the patterns of almost all youth subcultures." Twentieth Century Fund Task Force, supra, at 3. The adolescent's intellectual capability to consider and to choose from the realm of possibilities in a comprehensive fashion emerges only in late adolescence and early adulthood. E. Peel, The Nature of Adolescent Judgment 153 (1971). Moral character is to a large degree a product of the maturation process. Kohlberg, Development of Moral Character and Moral Ideology, in Review of Child Development Research 383, 409 (M. Hoffman & L. Hoffman eds. 1964); Rest, Davison & Robbins, Age Trends in Judging Moral Issues, 49 Child Development 263 (1978). The ability to make moral judgments depends, at least in part, on broader factors of social experience. Most adolescents simply do not have the breadth and depth of experience which are essential to making sound judgments and to understanding the long-range consequences of their decisions.

Many adolescents possess a "profound conviction of their own omnipotence and immortality. Thus many adolescents may appear to be attempting suicide, but they do not really believe that death will occur." Miller, Adolescent Suicide: Etiology and Treatment, in Adolescent Psychiatry 327, 329 (S. Feinstein, J. Looney, A. Schwartzberg & A. Sorosky eds. 1981); see also Hostler, The Develop- ment of the Child's Concept of Death, in The Child and Death 19 (O. Sahler ed. 1978).²⁸

For this reason, threatening a child with death does not have the same impact as threatening an adult with death. "[I]mmature minors often lack the ability to make fully informed choices that take account of both immediate and long-range consequences" Bellotti, 443 U.S. at 640-41. Adolescents live for the moment, for "an intense present," with little thought of the future consequences of their actions. Kasterbaum, Time and Death in Adolescence, in The Meaning of Death 99, 104 (H. Feifel ed. 1959). The defiant attitudes and risk-taking behaviors of some adolescents are related to their "developmental state of defiance about danger and death." Fredlund, Children and Death from the School Setting, 47 J. School Health 533, 535 (1977). They typically have not learned to accept the finality of death. Hostler, The Development of the Child's Concept of Death, in The Child and Death (O. Sahler ed. 1978). Adolescents tend to view death as a remote possibility; old people die, not teenagers. "Risk-taking with body safety is common in the adolescent years, through sky diving, car racing, excessive use of drugs and alcoholic beverages." Gordon, supra, at 27. Such "chance games" are played by adolescents "out of their own sense of omnipotence." Miller, supra, at 329.

Further, most adolescents grow up. "For most adolescents, age alone is the cure of criminality." F. Zimring, Background Paper, in Twentieth Century Fund Task Force on Sentencing Policy Toward Young Offenders, supra, at 37; J. Wilson & R. Herrnstein, Crime and ²⁸ This may help explain a recent rash of teenage suicides that has focused national attention on the issue. See, e.g., 2 Illinois Suicides Similar to New Jersey Teen-Agers, Washington Post, March 14, 1987, at A3. Suicide is the third leading cause of death among teenagers. Adler & Dolcini, Psychological Issues and Abortion for Adolescents, in Adolescent Abortion 84 (G. Melton ed. 1986).

Human Nature 144 (1985). Youth is a "time of intense and unfulfilled passions, leading to crimes for goods and pleasures that older people either crave less or can enjoy legally." Id. at 145. Simply stated, an adult is likely to have a lower propensity for crime than a youngster because the adult is older. "Age, like gender, resists explanation because it is so robust a variable. None of the correlates of age, such as employment, peers, or family circumstances, explains crime as well as age itself." Id. (footnotes and reference omitted) (emphasis added).²⁹

The legislative judgment, nearly universal among the states, that society should treat adolescents and adults differently, and the developmental differences upon which that judgment is based, compel the conclusion that adolescents should be spared from the death penalty, at least until they reach age 18.

C. The Reasons for Treating Children Differently From Adults Apply With Special Force Here: The Developmental Differences Between Adolescents and Adults Diminish the State's Interest in Inflicting the Death Penalty on Minors

²⁹ Statistics suggest that as people move from the turbulence of adolescence to the calmer period of the early twenties, they commit fewer crimes, whether or not they were apprehended or participated in a rehabilitation program. See Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, U.S. Dept. of Justice, Assessing the Relationship of Adult Criminal Careers to Juvenile Careers: A Summary 4 (1982); cf. Federal Bureau of Investigation, U.S. Dept. of Justice, Crime in the United States: 1978, 194-96 (1979); Zimring, American Youth Violence: Issues and Trends, in Crime and Justice: An Annual Review of Research 67 (N. informed by the twin penological justifications for the death penalty: general deterrence and retribution. Tison v. Arizona, 55 U.S.L.W. at 4499-500; Skipper v. South Carolina, 106 S. Ct. at 1675-76 (Powell, J., concurring); Enmund, 458 U.S. at 798-99; Gregg, 428 U.S. at 183-87. Preclusion of juvenile executions would undermine neither of these goals.

1. General Deterrence

The "death penalty has little deterrent force against defendants who have reduced capacity for considered choice." Skipper, 106 S. Ct. at 1675 (Powell, J., concurring). The death penalty may be expected to deter only those who engage in a "cold calculus that precedes the decision to act," those who "carefully contemplate[]" their crimes. Gregg, 428 U.S. at 186; see also Fisher v. United States, 328 U.S. 463, 484 (1946) (Frankfurter, J., dissenting); W. Bowers, Legal Homicide 272 (1984). "The socialization processes, which include the internalization of a society's moral norms and prohibitions, undoubtedly play a role in general deterrence." Gale, Retribution, Punishment, and Death, 18 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 973, 995 (1985) (footnote omitted).

Amici have demonstrated above that with adolescents the socialization process is as yet incomplete; for this reason, capital punishment will not likely deter other minors from committing crimes. Adolescents are less likely than adults to calculate rationally; this, indeed, is the premise underlying the states' guardianship and protection of minors. It is unlikely that cold, rational calculation is involved when juveniles commit crimes. See C. Bartollas, Juvenile Delinquency 102 (1985). Our culture assumes for countless other purposes that minors, prior to acting, do not engage in the sort of responsible risk-benefit analysis that lies at the core of the deterrence theory. And when adolescents do calculate, the fear of death will not be given its fair measure. Adolescents have not learned to accept death's finality.

Moreover, execution of minors will fail to deter the general population from committing crimes. Potential murderers are most likely to be deterred by the execution of one with whom the potential killer can identify; put another way, execution of a person who is particularly distinguishable from the general population will not serve to deter members of the general population. Cf. A. Goldstein, The Insanity Defense 13 (1967); Liebman & Shephard, Guiding Capital Sentencing Discretion Beyond the "Boiler Plate": Mental Disorder as a Mitigating Factor, 66 Geo. L.J. 757, 813-17 (1978). Nor will exclusion of minors from execution abate the deterrent force of the death penalty for adults. Finally, because juvenile executions are so rare, their preclusion would have little impact on the deterrence of the population at large. See generally Comment, Capital Punishment for Minors: An Eighth Amendment Analysis, 74 J. Crim. L. & Criminology 1471, 1510-13 (1983).

2. Retribution

In addition to deterrence, the Court has said that retribution—the expression of society's outrage at particularly offensive conduct—remains a legitimate penological goal of capital punishment. Spaziano v. Florida, 468 U.S. 447, 461-62 (1984); Enmund, 458 U.S. at 800-01; Gregg, 428 U.S. at 183. But such outrage is tempered when the defendant is an adolescent: Juries, the representatives of the community whose outrage is being expressed by death sentences, seldom vote to condemn teenagers.

The actual practice of sentencing minors to die, and of actually executing them, has declined to a remarkably low level. As of December, 1983, only thirty-eight (2.9%) of the 1,289 persons on death row were under age eighteen at the time of their crimes.³⁰ By July of 1986, the number had dropped from thirty-eight to thirty-two, while the population of death row had increased by 500. Streib, supra, 34 Clev. St. L. Rev. at 384. Thus, while the death row population grew by 42% (from 1,250 to 1,770), the juvenile death-row population decreased by 16%.

Even more strikingly, only seven new juveniles were added to the death row population from December 1983 to March 1986. Approximately 700 total death sentences were imposed during this period. Id. Accordingly, juveniles accounted for only 1% of the death sentences meted out during this two and one-half year period.

Review of intentional homicide data dramatically underscores the fact that juries impose capital sentences on juveniles at a significantly lower rate than on adults. Approximately 9.2% of intentional homicides from 1973 through 1983 were committed by persons under eighteen. *Id.*³¹ In stark contrast to this 9.2% commission rate, only 2% to 3% of all capital sentences imposed over this period were imposed on juveniles. Id. at 387.

Most importantly, data compiled through March of 1987 establish that the juvenile capital-sentencing rate has leveled off at a dramatically low level. Over the last five years, those under age eighteen have been sentenced to death as follows: 1982—11; 1983—9; 1984—6; 1985—3; 1986—7. During this same period, the annual death-sentencing rate for adults has been approximately

U.S. at 463-64 n.9, none of these states contributed to the present population of juvenile death row. The three states permitting judges to impose death notwithstanding a jury's recommendation of life imprisonment—Alabama, Florida and Indiana—account for seven juvenile death sentences. It is not known whether the juries in these cases recommended life or death.

³¹ However, it is the 18 to 24 "age group—beyond the jurisdiction of almost all juvenile courts—that has the highest arrest rate for crimes of violence." President's Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice, The Challenge of Crime in a Free Society 56 (1967).

300 per year.³² Juvenile death sentences are so rare that they are cruel and unusual "in the same way that being struck by lightning is cruel and unusual." Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238, 309 (1972) (Stewart, J., concurring).

Some courts, upholding the constitutionality of executing minors, have focused upon legislative enactments in concluding that such executions do not offend our society's evolving standards of decency.³³ However, statutes

³² Few death sentences translates into still fewer actual executions. A 20-year national moratorium on executing minors ended when Charles Rumbaugh was executed in 1985. Rumbaugh was 17 years old at the time of the crime. Rumbaugh, however, as an adult and after a full evidentiary hearing on his competency to waive further legal action to save his life, volunteered for execution. Rumbaugh v. Procunier, 753 F.2d 395 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 473 U.S. 919 (1985). Early in 1986, Terry Roach became the first nonconsensual execution of a juvenile since 1964; Roach, however, did not allege in his first federal habeas corpus proceeding that execution of a juvenile per se violates the Constitution. Roach v. Martin, 757 F.2d 1463 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 106 S. Ct. 185 (1985). Similarly, Jay Pinkerton, executed later in 1986, apparently raised the claim in a successor habeas petition. Thus, of the 70 people executed in the post-Furman era, only three were under the age of 18 at the time of their crime, and one of the three volunteered for execution. Further, Rumbaugh and Pinkerton—who were seventeen years old at the time of their offenses—were executed in Texas, where the maximum juvenile court age is 17. Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 8.07(d) (Vernon Supp. 1987).

³³ See, e.g., Prejean v. Blackburn, 743 F.2d 1091, 1098-99 (5th Cir. 1984), modified on other grounds, 765 F.2d 482 (5th Cir. 1985), petition for cert. filed, No. 85-5609; Trimble v. State, 300 Md. 387, 478 A.2d 1143, 1158-64 (Md. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1230 (1985). In fact, legislative responses support age 18 as the minimum age for execution eligibility. As discussed infra, legislation places a variety of limitations upon minors, restrictions which evince a consensus that minors are less mature and responsible than adults.

As to capital punishment specifically, the legislative message is more mixed but still supportive of the notion that if an age must be chosen—and surely it must—then eighteen is the only principled are not determinative, particularly since they have led to only a miniscule number of death sentences or executions. Death penalty legislation alone cannot reveal society's evolving standards of decency.

In the decade and a half since Furman v. Georgia, almost every current Justice has written or joined in opinions that look to the pattern of jury verdicts in sup-line. Of the fifteen states that establish a minimum age for capital punishment, eleven set it at eighteen, three set it at seventeen, and one sets it at sixteen.

Further, the most recent legislative activity has been in the direction of setting 18 as the minimum age. Nebraska in 1982 set 18 as its minimum age for execution; Colorado and Oregon did so in 1985; New Jersey did so in 1986. Neb. Rev. Stat. § 28-105.01 (1985); Colo. Rev. Stat. § 16-11-103 (1986); Or. Rev. Stat. § 161-620 (1985); N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2C: 11-3f (West 1986) (L. 1985, ch. 478, § 1, approved Jan. 17, 1986). In April 1987, Maryland became the latest state to set 18 as the minimum age for capital punishment. Barnes & Schmidt, Schaefer Praises Session As "Unusually Successful," Washington Post, April 14, 1987, at A7. The Governor was "struck by the fact that the decisive Senate votes came not from the newly-elected members of that Chamber, but from Senate veterans who had opposed an exemption for minors in previous years." Letter from William Schaefer to Clayton Mitchell, Speaker, Maryland House of Delegates, April 7, 1987, at 1 (reproduced at Appendix K). The Maryland House of Delegates, in putting the age at 18, reversed the Maryland Judiciary Committee, which had set the age at 16. Barnes, Death Penalty Exemption Advances, Washington Post, April 11, 1987, at B4. The 1987 session of the Georgia General Assembly considered such a measure. Shipp, Restricting Use of Death Penalty is Long Overdue, Atlanta Journal—Constitution, January 4, 1987, at 1D. The New Hampshire legislature recently re-codified and therefore reaffirmed its exemption of minors from capital punishment. HB 106, Laws 1986, ch. 82:1 (effective Jan. 1, 1987) (codified as N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 630:5 (IX) to (XIII) (1986 Supp.)).

Finally, the recently proposed federal death penalty legislation was amended to provide that a sentence of death may not be imposed upon a person who was less than 18 years old at the time of the offense. Establishing Constitutional Procedures for the Imposition of Capital Punishment: Report of the Committee on the Judiciary, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. 30 (1986).

port of a conclusion about the death penalty's constitutionality, either generally or for particular crimes.³⁴

³⁴ Members of the Court have reasoned that the "jury . . . is a significant and reliable objective index of contemporary values because it is so directly involved," Enmund, 458 U.S. at 795 (White, Brennan, Marshall, Blackmun & Stevens, JJ.) (quoting Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 181 (1976) (Stewart, Powell & Stevens, JJ.)); that "it is thus important to look at the sentencing decisions that juries have made in the course of assessing whether capital punishment is an appropriate penalty for the crime being tried." Coker, 433 U.S. at 596 (White, Stewart, Blackmun & Stevens, JJ.). In Woodson v. North Carolina, 428 U.S. 280, 293 (1976), a plurality consisting of Justices Stewart, Powell and Stevens cited jury refusal to convict in mandatory capital cases to support its conclusion that the mandatory statutes did not reflect evolving standards of decency. In Lockett v. Ohio, 438 U.S. 586, 625 (1978), Justice White wrote, in concurrence, that the death penalty could not be used if the defendant did not intend the death of the victim, even though at the time "approximately half of the states [had] not legislatively foreclosed the possibility of imposing the death penalty upon those who did not intend to cause death"; the reasoning of Justice White's concurrence in Lockett was endorsed by the Court in Enmund v. Florida, with both the majority, see 458 U.S. at 795, and the dissent, see id. at 818-20 (O'Connor, J., joined by Burger, C.J., Powell & Rehnquist, JJ.), analyzing the behavior of capital juries. The majority in Enmund relied on statistics showing that despite these statutes, defendants in this category rarely were executed. Justice Brennan, in Furman, also relied on the gap between legislative authorization of capital punishment and the number of death penalties actually inflicted:

When an unusually severe punishment is authorized for wide-scale application but not, because of society's refusal, inflicted save in a few instances, the inference is compelling that there is a deep-seated reluctance to inflict it.

Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238, 300 (1972) (Brennan, J., concurring). In Coker v. Georgia, 433 U.S. at 596, a plurality consisting of Justices Stewart, White, Blackmun and Stevens cited Gregg's observation that the "jury . . . is a significant and reliable objective index of contemporary values because it is so directly involved." Justice Powell concurred in this reasoning insofar as it supported "the view that ordinarily death is a disproportionate punishment for the crime of raping an adult woman." Coker, 433 U.S. at 601.

Thus, the Court, while considering legislative judgments as one measure of society's evolving standards of decency, still looks beyond those judgments to learn whether they are accurate. There is a good reason to do so:

Each lawmaker confronts capital punishment abstractly. No life depends on her vote. Legislative response tells us the degree to which we are willing to have laws permitting execution, but sentencing and execution tell us the degree to which we are willing to carry them out. A statute, furthermore, is static. It remains until changed. As public opinion shifts, older statutes become less reliable indicators of current values. Forces influence legislators that do not affect jurors. A legislator may believe, for example, that death penalty proponents in his constituency are more likely than its opponents to be single-issue voters or are more likely to organize against him, if he opposes capital punishment, than will opponents if he supports it. A constituency's willingness to vote based on a single issue and its degree of organization likely influence a lawmaker's decision and may skew the degree to which the pattern of legislation reflects community sentiment. Of course, legislative action may accurately reflect community sentiment on the acceptability of the death penalty, either generally or in classes of cases. But without a pattern of jury response, we cannot know whether this is true or whether, instead, various political factors have combined to obscure the community view. The jury, "because it is so directly involved," is needed to avoid guessing wrong.

Gillers, Deciding Who Dies, 129 U. Pa. L. Rev. 1, 72-73 (1980) (footnotes omitted).

It is no accident that even in an era in which the public perceives a significant increase in juvenile crime, juries almost never vote to execute teenagers. Lay jurors, given the task of expressing the common sense judgment of the community, recognize that adolescents are developmentally distinct from adults, that adolescents grow up, and that young people are uniquely rehabilitable. Juries recognize that it is unrealistic and inhumane to treat young offenders as if they have fully mature judgment and control.

Or perhaps juries intuit that the philosophical premises of retribution fail when applied to minors. The morality of the anger that fuels the desire for retribution is based on the killer's violation of the social compact. Society has entrusted its citizens with rights, one of which is freedom, and the murderer has grossly abused that freedom. W. Berns, For Capital Punishment 155 (1979). The fallacy of this retributive argument as it applies to minors is precisely that we do not entrust minors with such freedom.³⁵ As discussed above, states do not trust their minors to vote, sit on juries or engage in a wide variety of adult activities.

The inequity of the death penalty for minors is perhaps best captured by a vignette described in S. Gettinger, Sentenced to Die (1979). The mother of a condemned 15-year-old was asked by prison officials for parental consent to emergency treatment for her son, should he need it. The mother observed: "Now, isn't that ironic? . . . He's old enough to be put to death, but he's not old enough to get an aspirin without our consent." Id. at 150.

³⁵ John Stuart Mill's On Liberty set forth, in 1859, the classic antipaternalist position. J.S. Mill, On Liberty (Penguin Classics 2d ed. 1986). Mill's logic is utilitarian and argues for the absolute prohibition of state paternalism. Yet Mill found it "hardly necessary to say that [his] doctrine is meant to apply only to human beings in the maturity of their faculties. We are not speaking of children or of young persons below the age which the law may fix as that of manhood or womanhood." Id. at 69.

CONCLUSION

The Court should hold that execution of those who were younger than age 18 at the time of their offense violates the eighth and fourteenth amendments.

APPENDIX K

STATE OF MARYLAND
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR

[SEAL]

WILLIAM DONALD SCHAEFER IN REPLY REFER TO: GO-02
GOVERNOR

April 7, 1987

Honorable R. Clayton Mitchell, Speaker
Maryland House of Delegates
Room 101, State House
Annapolis, Maryland 21401

Dear Speaker Mitchell:

The matter of exempting minors from the death penalty will come before you in the form of Senate Bill 598. When it does, I hope you will treat it favorably.

The measure bears impressive credentials. It is the first bill of its kind to pass the Senate. I was struck by the fact that the decisive Senate votes came not from newly-elected members of that Chamber, but from Senate veterans who had opposed an exemption for minors in previous years.

The bill also has the support of the principal spokespeople of all of the State's major religious faiths. This impressive coming together of our State's religious leadership may be unprecedented.

I believe it is for the good of the children of our State to establish a minimum age for the imposition of the death penalty, indeed, as have most other states and most other nations. Maryland law itself currently recognizes that age can be considered a mitigating factor at the sentencing phase of a capital trial.

I must, however, express my concern with the Amendments placed on the bill by the Judiciary Committee.

2k

These Amendments would change the application of the death penalty exemption from under 18 to under 16. Eighteen years of age is recognized by international agreements to which the United States is signatory as the appropriate age for which the death penalty for capital crimes should be considered. Indeed, nine other states in our country set a minimum of 18 for the imposition of the death penalty. This is a significantly larger number of states than those which recognize any other minimum age cutoff.

As a State, we also distinguish the actions of children from the actions of adults. In the area of contracts, motor vehicles and voting, we recognize that juveniles are not fully responsible for their actions. Society as a whole shares responsibility for the actions of its children.

I have not come to this position quickly or lightly. Families and friends of murder victims have intense and legitimate needs, most often overlooked by the criminal justice process. Although we have made tremendous efforts as a State to help victims to no longer be dominated by their tragic loss, much more needs to be done. However, I do not believe that the execution of convicted juveniles can contribute to us fulfilling our obligation to crime's victims.

It is my sincere hope that you will work to return Senate Bill 598 to the same posture as it was first read in the House of Delegates, and act favorably on our legislation.

Thank you very much for allowing me to express my views to you on this important issue. I know that this issue is an important personal decision for all of us to make.

Sincerely,

/s/ Don Schaefer
Governor

House of Delegates

INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE

The American Society for Adolescent Psychiatry and the American Orthopsychiatric Association file this brief as amici curiae in support of petitioner by written consent of all parties, pursuant to Rule 36.2 of the Rules of this Court. The parties' letters of consent are on file with the Clerk.

The American Society for Adolescent Psychiatry ("ASAP") (Doris S. Soghor, M.D., President) was founded in 1967 and today has approximately 1400 members. ASAP provides a national forum for adolescent psychiatry and promotes the exchange of psychiatric knowledge about adolescents. Since its founding, ASAP has supported research on the normal development, as well as the psychopathology and treatment, of adolescents, helped to broaden knowledge and understanding of the various factors that may influence adolescent development and substantially improved the psychiatric community's ability to recognize and diagnose psychiatric problems common in adolescents. One half of ASAP's members are child psychiatrists, while the remaining number are general psychiatrists and psychoanalysts who maintain an active professional interest in adolescents. Its members work with adolescents in hospitals, schools and psychiatric clinics around the country as well as within the nation's juvenile court system.

The American Orthopsychiatric Association ("Ortho") (Bert Pepper, M.D., President) was established in 1924 and has traditionally been concerned with the problems, causes, treatment and prevention of psychiatric disturbances. It is an organization comprised of more than 10,000 members representing a variety of mental health-related professions — psychiatry, psychology, psychiatric nursing, social work, education and the law — including experts in adolescent development. With its broad-based membership, Ortho has consistently helped to shape public policy in the mental health and human development field from varying professional perspectives.

Amici sponsor a wide array of educational programs for their members and other mental health professionals. In addition each amici publishes a scientific journal.

Amici are organizations with extensive background and expertise in adolescent development. This brief is intended to provide the Court with relevant data that will enable it to judge the critical issue herein effectively, fairly and with greater knowledge of adolescents' developmental capabilities. Adolescents are developmentally different from adults. Accordingly, amici strongly urge the Court to spare adolescents the imposition of capital punishment.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The law has historically recognized that adolescents differ intellectually and emotionally from adults, and therefore deserve to be judged and treated differently. This view is confirmed by a vast body of clinical research and literature. Psychiatrists and psychologists have demonstrated that adolescents have not yet developed many of the psychological, cognitive, and emotional characteristics of mature adults. Adolescents tend to be less mature, more impulsive, and less capable of controlling their conduct and thinking in terms of long-range consequences. Adolescence is a stage of human development in which one's character and moral judgment are incomplete and still undergoing formation. An adolescent's character structure is more flexible than an adult's and remains open to major modifications. (Point I)

Adolescents who commit capital offenses typically suffer from a variety of serious disturbances which inhibit their natural development. They come from chaotic families, have been exposed to extreme violence, suffer severe cognitive limitations, and frequently have long-standing psychiatric problems. These factors tend to exacerbate the existing vulnerabilities of youth and place an adolescent at extreme risk for seriously violent behavior. The findings of a recently completed study of persons on death row who committed capital offenses in their adolescence are consistent with this general understanding about youthful offenders. William Wayne Thompson, petitioner herein, who was one of the subjects of that study, exhibited the characteristics typical of this distinct subgroup. (Point II)

The Eighth Amendment forbids the infliction of cruel and unusual punishment. Punishment is inherently cruel if it is excessive. It is excessive if it is disproportionate or fails to make any measurable contribution to acceptable goals of punishment. As applied to adolescents, capital punishment is both disproportionate and makes no measurable contribution to acceptable goals of punishment. It is disproportionate as applied to youthful offenders because youths are less culpable than adults for their offensive acts given their incomplete psychological and emotional development. The death penalty is also contrary to the only legitimate aims of punishing the young: rehabilitation and treatment. Finally, in light of contemporary human understanding about adolescents generally and adolescents who commit capital offenses in particular, the death penalty as applied to adolescents is contrary to contemporary standards of decency. Execution of adolescents is therefore inherently cruel in violation of the Eighth Amendment. (Point III)

ARGUMENT

I

PSYCHIATRISTS, PSYCHOLOGISTS AND OTHER CHILD DEVELOPMENT EXPERTS RECOGNIZE THAT ADOLESCENCE IS A TRANSITIONAL PERIOD BETWEEN CHILDHOOD AND ADULTHOOD IN WHICH YOUNG PEOPLE ARE STILL DEVELOPING THE COGNITIVE ABILITY, JUDGMENT AND FULLY FORMED IDENTITY OR CHARACTER OF ADULTS

The law has always recognized that adolescents differ intellectually and emotionally from adults, and therefore deserve to be judged and treated differently.¹ As this Court said:

[Y]outh is more than a chronological fact. It is a time and condition of life when a person may be most susceptible to influence and to psychological damage. Our history is replete with laws and judicial recognition that minors, especially in their earlier years, generally are less mature and responsible than adults. Particularly 'during the formative years of childhood and adolescence, minors often lack the experience, perspective, and judgment' expected of adults.

¹ Examples of this different treatment include limitations on youths' right to vote, contract, serve as jurors, purchase liquor, marry, drive motor vehicles, enlist in the armed services, or accept employment. See generally F. Zimring, The Changing Legal World of Adolescence (1982).

Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. 104, 115-16 (1982), quoting Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622, 635 (1979). This view is confirmed by a vast body of clinical research and literature.²

Psychiatrists, psychologists and other child development experts have demonstrated that adolescents are at a stage of development in which they lack the cognitive ability,³ judgment and fully-formed identity or character of adults. "[A]dolescence is the transitional period between childhood and adulthood. It begins with the biological events of puberty and continues through a complex series of psychological and sociocultural events and influences to the establishment of an independently functioning person."⁴

An adolescent's intellectual growth is incomplete and his or her reasoning skills and logic are immature. From a cognitive perspective, adolescents are in the process of moving from "concrete operational thought" to "formal operational thought."⁵ An adolescent begins to consider the possible as well as the actual.⁶ These new cognitive skills develop continuously and "most adolescents cannot be shown to have reached the stage of formal reasoning by the end of high school."⁷ Formal, abstract reasoning is a complex ability that is influenced by training and experience.⁸ Therefore, although adolescents begin to acquire a broader awareness, they lack the judgment necessary to choose carefully among various possibilities and to appreciate the future consequences of their actions.

Behaviorally, the effects of an adolescent's developing cognitive ability include increased impulsiveness, experimentation, and risk-taking. An adolescent's newly forming capacity to reason abstractly, coupled with his or her "fascination with the possible," results in a desire to explore various behaviors.⁹ However, because of an adolescent's limited experience and lack of ability to assess future consequences, he or she is unable to conceptualize realistically the potential negative outcomes of certain actions. This difficulty contributes to a young person's feelings of invulnerability to personal risk.¹⁰ Hence adolescents often engage in alcohol and drug use/abuse, sexual experimentation, reckless use of motor vehicles, and other potentially destructive behaviors.¹¹

Furthermore, researchers studying adolescent suicide have documented that adolescents tend not to appreciate fully the possibility, and finality, of death.¹² If they consider death at all, it is viewed as something that happens to elderly people, not teenagers. Many adolescents who attempt suicide may not really believe that death will occur. In fact, they may view a suicide attempt as nothing more than a form of running away, without any consideration of their own mortality.¹³

Adolescent cognitive development is also characterized by a high degree of egocentrism. An adolescent "assumes that other people are as obsessed with his behavior and appearance as he is himself. It is this belief that others are preoccupied with his appearance and behavior that constitutes the egocentrism of the adolescent."¹⁴

Moreover, adolescents come to regard themselves, and their own feelings, as particularly special and unique. This belief further contributes to an adolescent's lack of understanding regarding death. An adolescent's sense of specialness becomes a conviction of his or her immortality.¹⁵ Adolescent egocentrism thus results in a general impairment of adolescent judgment.

Adolescence is also a period during which youths struggle to develop a certain measure of independence and personal identity or character.¹⁶ An adolescent engages in this developmental task in a number of ways," such as trying out various roles, separating from his or her parents, and seeking affirmation from a peer group. Throughout this process, adolescents remain emotionally dependent on other people.¹⁷ They are vulnerable to influences from both parents and peers, and are less capable of independent, self-directed action than adults. The character structure of adolescents, though developing, remains in flux and does not represent the final level of maturity found in adults. Adolescents are by nature capable of significant and spontaneous change.¹⁸

Normal adolescence is no longer considered necessarily a time of extreme emotional turmoil.¹⁹ Adolescence is, however, generally characterized by emotionality rather than rationality.

¹⁷ It is understandable that many adolescents must struggle to develop a personal identity. In addition to the changes adolescents experience in how they think, they also undergo vast physiological and hormonal changes. Adolescents are faced with rapid increases in height, changing bodily dimensions, and physical and psychological changes related to sexual maturation. All of these changes threaten an adolescent's sense of self. See M. Lewis, supra, note 2, at 263-66.

¹⁸ "The transition from childhood into adolescence is marked more by a trading of dependency on parents for dependency on peers rather than straightforward and unidimensional growth in autonomy." Steinberg & Silverberg, The Vicissitudes of Autonomy in Early Adolescence, 57 Child Development 841, 848 (1986).

¹⁹ For example, young people can later overcome features of an antisocial personality that appear during adolescence. For this reason the diagnosis of Antisocial Personality cannot be applied until an individual has reached 18 years of age. See American Psychiatric Association, Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders 319 (3d ed. 1980).

²⁰ See, e.g., M. Rutter, supra note 2, at 235-38; Rutter, Graham, Chadwick & Yule, Adolescent Turmoil: Fact or Fiction?, 17 J. Child Psychology & Psychiatry 35 (1976); D. Offer & J. Offer, From teenage to young manhood: a psychological study (1975).

Daniel Offer's work has suggested that adolescents who experience the greatest inner turmoil are of lower socioeconomic status, and come from families with overt marital conflicts and a history of mental illness. See D. Offer, The Psychological World of the Teenager (1969).

Adolescents tend to show a special intensity of feeling and tend to seek out emotional experience. Moreover, it has been demonstrated consistently that "adolescents experience a greater fluctuation of mood than adults."²¹

Finally, adolescents lack the capacity for mature, principled moral judgment which is characteristic of normal adult thought. Moral judgment emerges through the maturation process as a result of cognitive and emotional growth and an adolescent's interaction with his or her environment. An adolescent lacks a fully formed value system against which to evaluate his or her behavior and decisions. "[L]arge groups of moral concepts and ways of thought only attain meaning at successively advanced ages and require the extensive background of social experience and cognitive growth. . . ."²²

Adolescents must undergo an array of significant changes prior to adulthood. Before these many developmental tasks are achieved, adolescents are vulnerable in a variety of ways. They have difficulty appreciating the future consequences of their acts, generally lack mature judgment, are easily influenced by family members and peers and often engage in experimentation and risk-taking. Adolescents tend to be guided by emotions rather than reason. Furthermore, adolescents lack a fully formed identity or character, and generally do not have the capacity for principled moral judgment.

Adolescence is a critical developmental stage through which young persons must pass prior to entering adulthood. The clinical literature confirms what we all generally know and what the law has always recognized — adolescents are not adults. Adolescents are less capable and less responsible than adults, and more in need of protection and support.

ADOLESCENTS WHO COMMIT MURDER SUFFER FROM SERIOUS PSYCHOLOGICAL AND FAMILY DISTURBANCES WHICH EXACERBATE THE ALREADY EXISTING VULNERABILITIES OF YOUTH

Adolescents who commit murder typically suffer from a variety of serious disturbances which inhibit their natural growth and development. It is well established that these disturbances, acting in combination, exacerbate the already existing vulnerabilities of youth and place an adolescent at extreme risk for seriously violent behavior.²³

Psychiatrists and psychologists have learned that adolescents who commit murder frequently come from families that are extremely chaotic and fail to provide the necessary support and direction for their children.²⁴ Under some circumstances, especially those in which an adolescent kills family members, he or she may actually be responding to family pressure or implicit messages to do so.²⁵ Furthermore, adolescents who commit murder almost invariably have a family background that includes extreme physical abuse and intrafamily violence. Many homicidal adolescents have also been sexually abused.²⁶

²³ See generally Cornell, Benedek & Benedek, Characteristics of Adolescents Charged with Homicide: Review of 72 Cases, Behavioral Sciences & the Law Vol. 5, No. 1, at 11 (1987); Cornell, Benedek & Benedek, Juvenile Homicide: Prior Adjustment and a Proposed Typology (paper presented at the American Psychiatric Association Annual Meeting, Washington, D.C.) These young people then are often victims of, and witnesses to, significant violence during their childhood and adolescence. The violence is often sustained, repetitive, and characterized by extraordinary brutality and sadism.²⁷ Their family environment is one in which violence is portrayed as the ultimate problem-solver. The use of physical aggression is considered an acceptable way of dealing with others.²⁸

This systematic exposure to violence affects a young person in a number of ways. First, violence becomes a style of behavior against which a child or adolescent is apt to model his or her own behavior. Second, the persistent abuse engenders deep-seated feelings of rage which are often acted upon against other people.²⁹ Finally, a child who is physically battered can suffer significant trauma to the brain which results in increased impulsivity and volatility.³⁰

Adolescents who commit murder also frequently have severe cognitive limitations. They tend to be intellectually immature and educationally deficient. These adolescents have significant impairments in judgment and are unable to perceive the consequences of their actions. These cognitive limitations are often linked to learning disabilities and neurological damage. Homicidal aggression in adolescents is also strongly associated with psychiatric problems.³¹

Together, these factors — exposure to violence, cognitive limitations, and psychiatric problems — exacerbate the already existing vulnerabilities of normal adolescence. Added to a normal adolescent's generally limited ability to appreciate the consequences of his or her actions and to take into account societal values in choosing a course of action, an adolescent who kills is handicapped further by impairment in cognitive ability. Added to a normal adolescent's susceptibility to the influence of family members and peers, an adolescent who kills is surrounded by an atmosphere of violence, in which the norm not only tolerates but encourages violence and trivializes its consequences. And finally, added to the emotionality and egocentrism of adolescence, an adolescent who kills is often afflicted with neuropsychiatric disorders which further heighten already intensified emotions and which can create serious misperceptions concerning the relationship between himself or herself and the external world.

A. A Study of Juveniles on Death Row Confirms Their Seriously Impaired Development

In the only clinical study of individuals on death row in the United States who committed capital offenses when they were under the age of 18, researchers have found that as a group these persons suffer from the neuropsychiatric, psychoeducational and family disturbances generally characteristic of adolescents who commit homicide (the "Study").³²

(Appendix) (References followed by "A" are to the Appendix).

(Footnote Continued)

The 14 subjects of this interdisciplinary study consisted of all adolescents sentenced to death in four states. They were selected for the study solely on the basis of their age at the time of the capital offense. They are therefore reasonably believed to be representative of the adolescent offender death row population as a whole. (3A)

The subjects were given comprehensive psychiatric, psychological, neurological, educational and electroencephalographic examinations. The psychiatric examination consisted of a thorough interview covering topics such as medical history, history of neuropsychiatric symptoms, and family and social history, including history of physical and sexual abuse. Careful mental status examinations²¹ were performed. Detailed neurological histories were obtained by a psychiatrist and a neurologist. These histories included difficulties surrounding birth, head injury, illnesses or drug overdoses known to affect the central nervous system, loss of consciousness, fainting, blackouts or other lapses, seizures, and symptoms suggestive of psychomotor epilepsy. Additionally, any historical evidence of central nervous system trauma was corroborated through physical examinations, record reviews, and specialized tests such as the electroencephalogram. Finally, a standard neurological examination was conducted and a battery of psychological, neuropsychological, and educational tests was administered. (3A-6A)

The Study found serious and wide-ranging disturbances in all of the subjects. All 14 suffered head injuries during childhood, nine of which were severe enough to result in hospitalization, indentation of the cranium, or loss of consciousness. Furthermore, the neurological and electroencephalographic data revealed that nine had serious neurological abnormalities, including evidence of localized brain injury, a history of grand mal seizures,²² major neurological abnormalities such as abnormal head circumference, and symptoms or electroencephalographic findings suggestive of a previously undiagnosed seizure disorder. (6A)

The Study also found that seven of the subjects were psychotic at the time of their evaluations and/or had been so diagnosed in earlier childhood. An additional four subjects displayed histories consistent with severe mood disorders. The three remaining subjects suffered from disturbed thinking, characterized by periodic paranoia. Thus, all 14 exhibited psychiatric disturbances. Seven suffered from psychiatric disturbances that first appeared in early or middle childhood. In all cases, psychopathology²³ antedated the crimes for which the subjects were sentenced to death. (6A-7A)

The psychoeducational testing done in this Study further indicates that at least nine of the subjects experienced significant brain impairment and lacked the ability to formulate abstract concepts. Moreover, 12 subjects had I.Q. scores below 90.²⁴ The Study concludes that the majority of these individuals have serious deficiencies in abstract reasoning and function well below the expected levels for their ages. (7A)

The Study reveals that these adolescents offenders had been repeatedly and brutally physically and sexually abused, often by more than one family member. Furthermore, alcoholism, drug abuse, psychiatric treatment and psychiatric hospitalization were prevalent in the histories of their parents. (8A)

The Study concludes that individuals condemned to death in the United States for crimes committed in their youth are multi-handicapped. They generally have suffered serious central nervous system injuries, have suffered since early childhood from psychotic symptoms, and have been physically and sexually abused. These significant disturbances inhibit natural development, exacerbate the existing vulnerabilities of youth, and contribute to the violent behavior demonstrated by these adolescents. (8A)

The central nervous system injuries that these adolescents have experienced may contribute to their emotional instability, impulsivity, and difficulty in controlling aggressive behavior. Also, this type of brain injury may make these adolescents more vulnerable to the disorganizing effects of alcohol and drugs. The Study concludes that the severe cognitive impairment characteristic of these adolescents further compromises their ability to make mature judgments and to act in accordance with them. (8A-9A)

Furthermore, the physical and sexual abuse experienced by these adolescents contributes to their crimes. First, the multiple batterings suffered by these adolescents sometimes actually caused brain injury which would result in increased impulsivity. Second, the severe parental violence that they experienced functions as a model for their behavior. Third, the extreme, irrational brutality to which these adolescents are exposed engenders rage which is displaced onto other individuals in their environment. (9A)

Finally, the Study suggests that the multiple disturbances which contributed to the violent behavior that these adolescents displayed also contributed to the harshness of the sentences they received. According to the Study, these adolescents uniformly try to hide evidence of their cognitive deficits and psychotic symptomatology. (9A-10A) Similarly, they try to conceal or minimize their parents' brutality towards them, due to feelings of shame. (10A) It is ironic that the very factors which could function as mitigating circumstances instead remain hidden at the time of the sentencing. It is noteworthy that much of the clinical information revealed in this Study had apparently not been previously uncovered during the course of each individual adolescent's case.

The Study reports that of these 14 subjects "in only 5 cases were pretrial psychiatric or psychological examinations of any kind performed." (8A) "These 5 evaluations tended to be perfunctory and gave inaccurate and inadequate portrayals of the adolescents' neuropsychiatric and cognitive status." (10A) Only once was significant neuropsychiatric impairment reported. (8A) The Study states that the data obtained was only revealed in the course of lengthy, detailed, and comprehensive medical and psychological evaluations of the kind that simply are unavailable to adolescents charged with offenses punishable by death. (10A)

B. Petitioner Was a Subject of the Study and Exhibited the Same Serious Disabilities

Petitioner William Wayne Thompson was one of the subjects of the Study. He is typical in many ways of other homicidal adolescents, and exemplifies the psychological, educational and family disturbances found in the adolescents on death row as a group.

The only psychiatric or psychological evidence presented at petitioner's trial came from a clinical psychologist, Helen Klein, who was hired by the prosecution. Dr. Klein met with petitioner twice and produced a four and one-half page handwritten report. She then testified at the sentencing phase of petitioner's trial. Dr. Klein's testimony was cursory and speculative, and not tied to the information in her report. The gist of her testimony was that petitioner is an uncaring person who is incapable of change. She described petitioner as "an antisocial personality." (Tr. at 793.)¹⁷ As noted earlier, the standard diagnostic tool for mental disorders used by psychiatrists and psychologists requires that the diagnosis of Antisocial Personality Disorder should not be made for individuals under the age of 18.¹⁸

Even Dr. Klein's limited report refers to serious disturbances in petitioner's background and makeup. Her repeated statements that petitioner "cannot organize his inner experience," that "[h]e has a stereotypical, concrete view of the world and demonstrates little ability to organize or to conceptualize his experience," that "his inner experience is barren and disorganized," and that his drawings are "primitive and undifferentiated" are suggestive of cognitive limitations and other difficulties in thinking. (R. at 490-91, 489.) In addition, Dr. Klein states both in her report and in testimony that petitioner is educationally well below average. (R. at 489; Tr. at 789.) She concludes that the results of the psychological tests "indicate a person with limited capabilities." (Tr. at 789.) Furthermore, Dr. Klein's report provides a description of petitioner's general immaturity in its references to his restlessness, difficulty in controlling his impulses, and lack of social judgment. (R. at 490-91.) Finally, Dr. Klein's report briefly mentions that petitioner had abused drugs ("sniffed paint") and that he had been beaten by his brother-in-law, Charles Keene. (R. at 488.) There is no evidence in the record that Dr. Klein followed up in these critical areas. The record, however, contains testimony from Vicky Lynn Keene, Charles Keene's ex-wife, describing Charles' extreme brutality toward her, petitioner, and others. (Tr. at 611-16.) Also, Ms. Keene's testimony points out that Charles Keene introduced petitioner to drug abuse. (Tr. at 612.)

Thus, petitioner has been exposed to a constellation of psychological and environmental disturbances which have impeded his natural growth and development. He suffers from serious cognitive and intellectual limitations, educational deficiencies, and immature judgment. Furthermore, petitioner has been a victim of and witness to extreme abuse, which included his brother-in-law's brutality. He is thus typical of the subgroup of adolescents who commit capital offenses.

III

THE EXECUTION OF AN INDIVIDUAL WHO WAS AN ADOLESCENT AT THE TIME OF THE CAPITAL OFFENSE IS EXCESSIVE IN VIOLATION OF THE EIGHTH AMENDMENT

The Eighth Amendment, which applies to the states through the Fourteenth Amendment, forbids the infliction of "cruel and unusual punishments." U.S. Const. amend. VIII. A punishment is "cruel and unusual" if it is excessive. It is excessive if it is disproportionate to the crime or if it makes no measurable contribution to acceptable goals of punishment. Coker v. Georgia, 433 U.S. 584, 592 (1977) (plurality opinion); Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 173 (1976). A punishment is also impermissible if it offends society's "evolving standards of decency." Trop v. Dulles, 356 U.S. 86, 101 (1958) (plurality opinion). Emmund v. Florida, 458 U.S. 782 (1982).

Although the Court has determined that the death penalty is not inherently cruel in violation of the Eighth Amendment, Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, it has recognized the extraordinary nature of the punishment:

[E]very Member of this Court has written or joined at least one opinion endorsing the proposition that because of its severity and irrevocability, the death penalty is qualitatively different from any other punishment, and hence must be accompanied by unique safeguards to ensure that it is a justified response to a given offense.

Spaziano v. Florida, 468 U.S. 447 (1984) (Stevens, Brennan and Marshall, JJ., concurring in part and dissenting in part) (collecting cases); see also California v. Ramos, 463 U.S. 992, 998-99 at n.9 (1983) (collecting cases). Indeed, [d]eath, in its finality, differs more from life imprisonment than a 100-year prison term differs from one of only a year or two. Because of that qualitative difference, there is a corresponding difference in the need for reliability in the determination that death is the appropriate punishment in a specific case.

Woodson v. North Carolina, 428 U.S. 280, 305 (1976) (plurality opinion) (footnote omitted).

The question raised herein is whether death is ever an appropriate punishment for a youthful offender, an issue that was raised but left unresolved in Edlings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. 104 (1982). The answer to this question must be no. The fundamental differences between adolescence and adulthood, distinctions universally recognized by the medical and social sciences, as well as the law, make this irrevocable form of punishment both excessive as applied to youths and offensive to contemporary standards of decency.

Execution is disproportionate because adolescents tend to lack that which adults are presumed to possess: the ability to make sound judgments on their own behalf. Moreover, adolescents who commit capital offenses typically suffer from a variety of natural and environmental disabilities which further diminish their culpability for their acts. The penalty of death is too severe a punishment for persons who have not yet lived long enough to learn how to control their impulses, appreciate fully the consequences of their offensive acts, or come to understand how to contend with a hostile environment.

In addition, the death penalty, as applied to adolescents, makes no contribution to acceptable goals of punishment. In Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. at 183, this Court recognized that the death penalty serves "two principal social purposes: retribution and deterrence of capital crimes by prospective offenders." Whatever the deterrent effect of capital punishment on adults, the impulsiveness of youth, coupled with an adolescent's general lack of appreciation for the finality of death, seriously undermines whatever deterrent effect the death penalty might have on them. Retribution is objectionable because adolescent offenders are not as responsible as adults for their acts. Retribution is also contrary to the legitimate purposes of punishing the young. Unlike adults, for whom punishment is primarily a punitive sanction, punishment of youthful offenders is intended to be rehabilitative.

In light of all that is known about adolescent development generally and the abnormal development of homicidal adolescents in particular, inflicting the death penalty on young offenders is also offensive to "contemporary standards of decency." Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 103 (1976). Executing adolescents—who lack the cognitive ability, judgment and fully formed character of adults—falls to accord with "the dignity of man" which is the "basic concept underlying the Eighth Amendment," Trop v. Dulles, 358 U.S. at 100.

A. Capital Punishment Is Excessive As Applied to Adolescents Because It Is Disproportionate

A form of punishment is disproportionate, hence excessive under the Eighth Amendment, if it is greater than the offender deserves. Coker v. Georgia, 433 U.S. at 592. In determining whether the death penalty is disproportionate as applied to adolescents, this Court must consider whether adolescents should be equated with adults with respect to their eligibility for this ultimate sanction. Because adolescents are not expected to conform their behavior to adult standards, it is inappropriate to inflict on them a form of punishment intended only for society's most serious and incorrigible offenders.³⁹

The fact that a separate system of criminal justice has evolved for adolescents is ample evidence that the death penalty, as applied to adolescents, is disproportionate.

The very existence of a dual criminal justice system is evidence of a two-fold societal judgment that children do not bear the same degree of responsibility for their antisocial behavior as adults and therefore should not be subject to the harsh penalties of criminal trial and penal incarceration; and juvenile delinquents are, by virtue of their youth, responsive to rehabilitative treatment.⁴⁰

Inherent in the law are the basic beliefs that (i) youths should not be punished as severely as adults because they are not as culpable as adults for their offenses; and (ii) youths by nature are receptive to treatment and rehabilitation.

The disparate treatment of youth in the law is amply supported by the clinical evidence about adolescent development. As described in Point I, adolescents are still growing socially and psychologically.

³⁹ Thus, even though adolescents may be legitimately convicted and punished for homicidal acts in appropriate circumstances, their incomplete development should preclude them from eligibility for punishment by death. See Ermund v. Florida, 458 U.S. 782 (propriety of death penalty dependent upon degree of culpability of offender).

⁴⁰ S. Fox, The Juvenile Court: Its Context, Problems and Opportunities 11-13 (1967).

[A]dolescents, particularly in the early and middle teen years, are more vulnerable, more impulsive, and less self-disciplined than adults. Crimes committed by youths may be just as harmful to victims as those committed by older persons, but they deserve less punishment because adolescents have less capacity to control their conduct and to think in long-range terms than adults.¹¹

Thus, execution must be regarded as a disproportionate form of punishment as applied to adolescents. Their diminished responsibility for their acts justifies the added measure of tolerance that exists in the law. Their ability to adjust and improve as they mature further demonstrates the inappropriateness of inflicting on adolescents the ultimate punitive sanction of death.

B. Capital Punishment Is Excessive As Applied to Adolescents Because It Serves No Legitimate Penological Purpose

The death penalty per se is not constitutionally excessive because it is thought to make a measurable contribution to two acceptable goals of punishment: deterrence and retribution. Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. at 183. Because neither goal can be achieved by inflicting the death penalty on youthful offenders, its application to them is excessive.

1. The Death Penalty Does Not Deter Adolescents From Committing Capital Offenses

In commenting upon the lack of empirical evidence to support or rebut the theory that capital punishment has a deterrent effect, Justice Stewart observed:

We may nevertheless assume safely that there are murderers, such as those who act in passion, for whom the threat of death has little or no deterrent effect. But for many others, the death penalty undoubtedly is a significant deterrent. There are carefully contemplated murders, such as murder for hire, where the possible penalty of death may well enter into the cold calculus that precedes the decision to act.

¹¹ Twentieth Century Fund Task Force on Sentencing Policy Toward Young Offenders, Confronting Youth Crime 47 (1978). ("Task Force").

Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. at 185-86 (Stewart, J. plurality opinion). In light of what is known today about adolescent development generally and the development of adolescents who commit homicide in particular, adolescents are unlikely to engage in a meaningful "cold calculus that precedes the decision" to commit a capital offense in which "the possible penalty of death" enters into their decision-making process.

As described above, adolescents generally are more impulsive and less able to appreciate the consequences of their acts than adults. Adolescents also tend to lack a fully developed appreciation of death and its finality. Moreover, while adolescents may be capable of rational decision-making in some areas with the guidance and support of adults, this capacity is significantly lessened when they are placed under highly stressful circumstances.¹²

Such circumstances are abundant with respect to homicidal adolescents. These adolescents typically grow up in a chaotic family environment, are exposed to violence and abuse throughout their childhood, and tend to be impeded in their natural development by the adults upon whom they must rely for protection and support. They also suffer from cognitive limitations which further impair their ability to make sound judgments. These factors are particularly damaging during adolescence because it is at this stage of development that human beings are especially vulnerable and awkward. While adolescents may look like and possess many of the physical attributes of adults, they do not yet think or behave like adults. The violent nature of adolescents

¹¹ In sum, although some youths' involvement in delinquency may be related to cost-benefit decisions and to a rational process, other explanations better explain the delinquent behavior of most youths. With the vast majority of youngsters, delinquent behavior arises without much forethought as they interact with their environment. With still other youths, compulsive behavior, the influence of alcohol or drugs, or intense emotional reaction to a situation seem to lead them to bypass any rational process.

¹² Bartollas, Juvenile Delinquency 102 (1985); see also P. Hahn, The Juvenile Offender and the Law 40-57 (2d ed. 1978) (free will and rational choice not among various behavioral theories explaining the causes of delinquency).

who kill is a predictable consequence of the combination of (i) their incomplete human development which has been further hindered by an unstable and violent childhood, and (ii) the rapid physical changes which they are undergoing.

It is thus demonstrably wrong to conclude that the death penalty deters adolescents who commit capital offenses. Adolescents generally do not to engage in any "cold calculus" that would factor in the possibility of a death sentence before they act homicidally. Emotionality, coupled with a pronounced inability to appreciate or be affected by the knowledge of the consequences of their actions, lead adolescents to commit capital offenses. Free will and rational calculation are generally absent in these circumstances.

2. Retribution Is Not a Legitimate Penological Purpose With Respect to Adolescents

The penological goal of retribution has two components: (1) the desire that offenders suffer the punishment they deserve, and (2) the desire for vengeance. See Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. at 183-184. Whether these concerns are satisfied is contingent upon the degree of the offender's responsibility for the offense. In Enmund v. Florida, 458 U.S. 782, this Court observed:

As for retribution as a justification for executing Enmund, we think this very much depends on the degree of Enmund's culpability — what Enmund's intentions, expectations, and actions were. American criminal law has long considered a defendant's intention — and therefore his moral guilt — to be critical to "the degree of [his] criminal culpability."

Id. at 800 (citations omitted). Thus, "[t]he heart of the retribution rationale is that a criminal sentence must be directly related to the personal culpability of the criminal offender." Tison v. Arizona, 55 U.S.L.W. 4498, 4499 (U.S. April 21, 1987).

Adolescents, like adults, should pay for their crimes. However, "[t]he juvenile justice system, while holding minors responsible for their misconduct . . . acknowledges that the level of juvenile responsibility is lower than for adults."⁴³ It is thus excessive to inflict the penalty of death on adolescents.

Neither of the concerns of retribution is satisfied by executing youthful offenders. The punishment of death is too severe because adolescents are not as responsible as adults. In addition, the disparate legal treatment of adolescents is ample evidence that society is less vengeful with respect to youthful offenders.

Retribution is also contrary to the principal legitimate purpose of punishing the young: rehabilitation. Traditional methods of punishing youthful offenders are based upon a presumption that young persons are more amenable to positive change than adults. In fact, this presumption is well-documented. Consequently, the finality and irrevocability of the death penalty makes such punishment manifestly inappropriate for adolescents.

a. Adolescents Are Less Responsible Than Adults For Their Offensive Acts

Adolescents are developmentally different from adults in ways that diminish their level of responsibility for their actions. Point I documents the inexperience, impulsiveness and emotionality of youth. Adolescents have a greater tendency than adults to act in disregard of the potentially serious and harmful consequences of their acts. Even when they are aware of such consequences, adolescents are more prone than adults to act in spite of them.

[T]he American adolescent, struggling with the biological and psychological pressures of youth, seeks status and reassurance in the company of his peers. Rebellion against parental authority and restrictions is combined with pressure to conform to the expectations of other adolescents. The teen years are a period of experiment, risk taking and bravado. Some criminal activity is part of the patterns of almost all youth subcultures.⁴⁴

⁴³ Task Force at 47.

⁴⁴ Id. at 3.

This Court has taken note of these developmental distinctions, observing that "minors often lack the experience, perspective, and judgment to recognize and avoid choices that could be detrimental to them." Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. at 635. See Gallegos v. Colorado, 370 U.S. 49, 54 (1962). This fundamental concept of youth forms the basis for state laws which commonly prohibit minors from possessing alcohol in public, from voting, from sitting on a jury, and from marrying without parental consent.⁴⁵

[T]he experience of mankind, as well as the long history of our law, recogniz[es] that there are differences which must be accommodated in determining the rights and duties of children as compared with those of adults. Examples of this distinction abound in our law: in contracts, in torts, in criminal law and procedure, in criminal sanctions and rehabilitation, and in the right to vote and to hold office.

Goss v. Lopez, 419 U.S. 565, 590-91 (1975) (Powell, J., dissenting) (emphasis in original). It also justifies disparate treatment for adolescents under the First,⁴⁶ Fourth,⁴⁷ and Fourteenth⁴⁸ Amendments.

⁴⁵ For example, in Oklahoma, minors — defined as persons under the age of 18 unless otherwise provided by statute, Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 15, § 13 (West 1983) — are barred from engaging in any of these activities. See respectively, Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 21, § 1215 (West 1983) (21 years of age); U.S. Const. amend. XXVI (18 years of age); Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 39, § 28 (West Supp. 1987) (18 years of age); Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 43, § 3 (West 1983) (18 years of age).

⁴⁶ E.g., Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S. 629, 638 (1968) (state law forbidding sale of sexually explicit but non-obscene material to persons under 17 years of age does not violate First Amendment because "even where there is an invasion of protected freedoms 'the power of the state to control the conduct of children extends beyond the scope of its authority over adults,'" (quoting Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 170. (1944)).

⁴⁷ E.g., New Jersey v. T.L.O., 469 U.S. 325 (1985) (schoolchild's Fourth Amendment right against unreasonable search and seizure and his legitimate expectation of privacy must give way to school's legitimate need to maintain appropriate educational environment).

This same concept of youth also warrants less severe punishment. See supra at 19-20.

Furthermore, as shown in Point II, adolescents who commit capital offenses are even less responsible for their acts than adolescents generally. Such adolescents tend to lack the support and protection ordinarily provided youths by parents and other family members. In addition, their families are frequently violent and abusive. These factors are further aggravated by psychiatric problems from which homicidal adolescents frequently suffer.

As a result of these factors, the natural maturation process is seriously inhibited. The emotional growth and development of adolescents who are homicidal is, in effect, stunted. The Study appended hereto confirms this general understanding.

The death penalty is thus too severe a punishment for adolescent offenders. Because an adolescent has not yet fully developed emotionally and psychologically, and because an adolescent who commits a capital offense tends to be even more developmentally limited, the execution of such an individual is by definition a greater punishment than he deserves.

b. Vengeance Is Antithetical to the Lawful Treatment of Adolescents Society's moral obligation to protect its young is indisputable. As Justice Frankfurter observed in May v. Anderson, 345 U.S.

although juveniles' liberty interest is strong under Fourteenth Amendment, juveniles, unlike adults, require some form of custody).

Notably, in Schall the Court observed:

Children, by definition, are not assumed to have the capacity to take care of themselves. They are assumed to be subject to the control of their parents, and if parental control falters, the State must play its part as parens patriae. In this respect, the juvenile's liberty interest may, in appropriate circumstances, be subordinated to the State's "parens patriae" interest in preserving and promoting the welfare of the child."

Id., at 285, quoting Santosky v. Kramer, 455 U.S. 745, 766 (1982).

528, 536 (1953) (concurring opinion): "Children have a very special place in life which law should reflect. Legal theories . . . lead to fallacious reasoning if uncritically transferred to determination of a State's duty towards children." Youth and its inherent characteristics — immaturity, vulnerability, inexperience and dependency — place the concept of revenge at odds with the lawful treatment of the young. Thus,

[t]he spectacle of our society seeking legal vengeance through execution of a child raises fundamental questions about the nature of children's moral responsibility for their actions and about society's moral responsibility to protect and nurture children.⁴⁶

As described supra at 24, youths are defined as less responsible for their acts by state legislatures and the courts. In addition to a host of both legislatively and judicially imposed restraints on the rights and liberties of adolescents, both state and federal laws provide distinct rules and procedures for the prosecution of youths. Under both state and federal law, many acts which constitute crimes if committed by adults instead constitute acts of "juvenile delinquency" if committed by adolescents. See, e.g., State In Interest of D.B.S., 137 N.J. Super. 371, 349 A.2d 105 (1975).

Society's responsibility to protect and nurture the young is also well supported by legal precedent. This obligation is perhaps best reflected in the Court's long-standing recognition of the guiding role parents play in the upbringing of children.⁴⁷ In Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205 (1972), the Court held that although a state's interest in compulsory education for its children is indeed ⁴⁶ Steinb, Death Penalty for Children: The American Experience with Capital Punishment for Crimes Committed While Under Age Eighteen, 36 Okla. L. Rev. 613, 637 (1983).

⁴⁷ Constitutional interpretation has consistently recognized that the parents' claim to authority in their own household to direct the rearing of their children is basic in the structure of our society. "It is cardinal with us that the custody, care and nurture of the child reside first in the parents, whose primary function and freedom include preparation for obligations the state can neither supply nor hinder." Prince v. Massachusetts, supra, at 166.

strong, it must give way to parents' "traditional interest" in raising children. Id. at 214. Similarly, when it comes to deciding whether a child is to be committed to a state mental hospital, the Court has stated that it is up to the parents to decide, notwithstanding the child's clear "liberty interest" not to be confined without due process.

The law's concept of the family rests on a presumption that parents possess what a child lacks in maturity, experience, and capacity for judgment required for making life's difficult decisions . . . Most children, even in adolescence, simply are not able to make sound judgments concerning many decisions, including their need for medical care or treatment. Parents can and must make those judgments.

Parham v. J.R., 442 U.S. 584, 602-603 (1979) (emphasis supplied).

Vengeance cannot therefore serve as a legitimate penological goal with respect to adolescents — even adolescents who commit capital offenses. The diminished culpability of adolescents, coupled with society's obligation to protect the young, warrants a measure of constitutionally imposed tolerance sufficient to bar their execution.

c. Retribution Is Contrary to Rehabilitation, the Principal Legitimate Goal of Punishing Adolescents

Retribution is contrary to rehabilitation, which is the primary goal of punishing the young. E.g., In the Matter of the Appeal in Marticopa County, Juvenile Action No. J-84538-S, 126 Ariz. 546, 617 P.2d 54, 56 (1979) ("the most deeply rooted concept in juvenile court philosophy is that the purpose of the system is to rehabilitate and not to punish"); Rust v. Alaska, 582 P.2d 134 (Alaska 1978) (express purpose of juvenile jurisdiction is rehabilitation rather than punishment). The reason for this objective is not hard to discern: "[I]ncorrigibility is inconsistent with youth . . . it is impossible to make a judgment that a fourteen-year-old youth, no matter how bad, will remain incorrigible for the rest of his life." Workman v. Commonwealth, 429 S.W.2d 374, 378 (Ky. 1968).

The existence of a juvenile justice system under both state and federal law which treats youthful offenders more leniently than adults demonstrates the importance society places on the goal of rehabilitation with respect to adolescents.¹¹ For example, the purpose of the Federal Juvenile Delinquency Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 5031-5042 (West 1985), "is to be helpful and rehabilitative rather than punitive. . . ." United States v. Hill, 538 F.2d 1072, 1074 (4th Cir. 1976). Under the Act, "a juvenile is accorded preferential and protective handling not available to adults accused of committing crimes." United States v. Frasquillo-Zomosa, 628 F.2d 99, 101 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 987 (1980).

Greater tolerance respecting youthful offenders is justified by reason of their heightened capacity for behavior modification. As described supra at 7, adolescents are generally more receptive and responsive to rehabilitative treatment. More specifically, "juvenile murderers tend to be model prisoners and exhibit a very low rate of recidivism when released."¹² Putting adolescents to death is therefore without any legitimate penological justification.

C. The Execution of Adolescents Is Unconstitutional in Light of Contemporary Human Knowledge About Adolescents Generally and Adolescents Who Commit Capital Offenses in Particular

Eighth Amendment analysis is dynamic. Whether the infliction of a particular punishment is inherently cruel is subject to periodic review, which must give due consideration to "contemporary human knowledge." Robinson v. California, 370 U.S. 660, 666 (1962). Contemporary human knowledge respecting adolescent development generally and the nature of adolescents who commit capital offenses in particular indicates that the ultimate sanction of death is an inappropriate form of punishment for such persons for the reasons described herein.

¹¹ See generally A. Platt, The Child Saviors: The Invention of Delinquency (2d ed. 1977); For, Juvenile Justice Reform: An Historical Perspective, 22 Stan. L. Rev. 1187 (1970); Mack, The Juvenile Court, 23 Harv. L. Rev. 104 (1909).
¹² Streib, The Eighth Amendment and Capital Punishment of Juveniles, 34 Cleve. St. L. Rev. 383, 395 (1987) (citing Vitello, Constitutional Safeguards for Juvenile Transfer Procedure: The Ten Years Since Kent v. United States, 28 De Paul L. Rev. 23, 32-34 (1976)); D. Hamparian, R. Schuster, S. Dinitz & J. Conrad, The Violent Few 52 (1978); T. Sellin, The Penalty of Death 102-20 (1980).

The developmental differences between adolescents and adults are alone sufficient to justify a constitutional ban on the execution of youths. It is offensive to "contemporary standards of decency" to commit to death individuals who, because of their lack of maturity, exist in the law as persons who are incapable of making legally binding decisions in certain matters and who are often accorded disparate treatment for acts which would be regarded as criminal if they were adults. The reason for these distinctions is clear: Youths "cannot be judged by the more exacting standards of maturity." Haley v. Ohio, 332 U.S. 596, 599 (1948). These same distinctions justify a degree of leniency in the manner in which adolescents who commit capital offenses are punished. The ultimate punitive sanction of death is just too harsh.

However, the analysis need not end there. As shown in Point II, youths who commit capital offenses typically suffer from a variety of serious natural and environmental disabilities. In addition to exhibiting all of the attributes which make youths vulnerable by nature, adolescents who kill are deficient intellectually, emotionally, psychologically and frequently neurologically. Their impairment is aggravated by parents or legal guardians who fail to provide much needed support at a critical stage in their lives, and indeed, who typically provide negative influences. *The Individuals on death row who were minors when they committed capital offenses exhibit these deficiencies.*¹³ Indeed, petitioner Wayne Thompson is typical of the group.

The execution of persons who commit homicide in their youth is therefore far more offensive as actually applied than it is in the abstract as applied to the universe of adolescents. The commission of a homicide by an adolescent is a reflection of a multitude of serious and complex problems from which the adolescent suffers. Such youths almost invariably have been deprived of a stable, healthy environment in which to develop. Nor could they rely upon adults to exercise rational judgment on their behalf. Most significantly, however, the law has provided them little practical recourse. Adolescents who commit homicide are legally subject to the will of and reliant upon adults who typically contribute substantially to the adolescents' impairment.

The most fundamental concepts of fairness are thus implicated by the execution of persons who have committed homicide in their adolescence. They lack not only the maturity necessary to be accorded the full panoply of civil rights and liberties afforded adults, but also the protective support and guidance from responsible adults who are legally authorized to impose their will upon them. The death penalty should not therefore be inflicted on adolescents because it is both offensive and excessive as applied to them.

CONCLUSION

The execution of adolescents is inherently cruel and unusual in violation of the Eighth Amendment, and consequently, petitioner's death sentence should be vacated.

The purpose of this paper is twofold: 1) to describe the biosychosocial characteristics of 14 juveniles sentenced to death in the United States, and 2) to explore the implications of these findings for imposition of the death penalty on juveniles.

THE LITERATURE

The execution of juveniles in America dates back to the 17th century when, in 1642, a child was executed for the crime of bestiality (1). Since then, there have been a total of 272 juveniles executed in the United States (2). These include 3 executions in 1985-1986 of boys condemned as juveniles but executed after they reached majority. Thus, the recent tendency has been to execute young adults for crimes committed as juveniles, thereby avoiding the actual execution of children. During the time of the evaluations conducted for this study, the number of juveniles awaiting death rose from 33 to 37.

United States law permitting the execution of juveniles is based on English common law. Although the death penalty for juveniles was abolished in England in 1908, histories of English law recount numerous cases from 1708 onward of children condemned to death (3, 4, 5). According to a 19th century account of the history of the town of Lynn, "In 1708 . . . two children were hanged here for felony, one eleven, and the other but seven years of age; which, if true, must indicate very early and shocking depravity in the sufferers, as well as unusual and excessive rigour on the parts of the magistrates in the infliction of capital punishment." (6) There is evidence to suggest, however, that although many children were sentenced to death in England in the 19th century, most of these sentences were commuted (7). Nevertheless, children did hang, and for crimes far less serious than murder. Blackstone, in his Commentaries on the Laws of England (8), commented on the treatment of juveniles: "If it appear to the court and jury that he was doli capax, and could discern between good and evil, he may be convicted and suffer death." Blackstone went on to cite cases of boys 9 and 10 years old who had killed companions and were hanged because their behaviors indicated a sense of guilt. In the first instance, the child hid himself after the murder; in the second instance, the child hid the body of the victim. Thus, both children were considered to have been aware of the wrongfulness of their acts and therefore candidates for execution.

United States law regarding the responsibility of children has rested heavily on the commentaries of English jurists such as Blackstone. However, modifications based on case law have occurred. For example, in the case of State v. Doherty (9), where a child of approximately 13 years of age had killed her father, the judge instructed the jury to assume that a child under 14 years could not "discern between right and wrong unless it were proven otherwise." Similarly, in the case of State v. Aaron (10), in which an 11 year old slave was accused of murdering a younger child, the 11 year old's conviction and sentence of death were overturned by the Supreme Court of New Jersey. This decision was based on the grounds that the conviction was obtained by means of a pressured confession, and that the presumption of innocence had not been refuted by "strong and irresistible evidence that he had sufficient discernment to distinguish good from evil".

On the other hand, the outcome was quite different in the case of Godfrey v. State (11), in which a slave of approximately 11 years hacked a 4 year old to death, then, covered with blood, blamed the act on imaginary Indians. The child was sentenced to death. In spite of clear evidence of infatigable reasoning he was executed. A review of the 14 leading cases of criminal responsibility of children in the United States in the 19th century revealed that only 2 children, both slaves, were actually executed. (6) As for the recent past, to quote Streib, "79% (33/42) of the children executed since 1945 were black." (7)

Clearly, there is a tradition in this country of holding juveniles responsible for their acts and meting out punishments as though the children were adults. Above the age of 7 years, children have been assumed to be able to discern between good and evil, the basic legal criterion for adjudicating culpability. Modern concepts regarding the juvenile's cognitive development, his capacity to make mature judgments and his ability to maintain adequate impulse controls have not been major considerations in the establishment of United States law regarding the execution of juveniles.

In fact, to date, little or nothing is known about the mental condition and cognitive capacities of juveniles sentenced to death, except what can be gleaned from popular accounts in newspapers and trial transcripts. Thus, we do know only from newspaper accounts that of the 3 juveniles executed in the 1980's one was retarded and another had spent time in a mental hospital (13, 14). Given the dearth of information regarding the biosociological status of juveniles condemned to death, we welcomed the opportunity to conduct comprehensive psychiatric, neurological, neuropsychological, and educational assessments of approximately 40% of the juveniles currently awaiting execution in the United States.

METHOD

SUBJECTS

Our subjects were 14 boys, each of whom had been sentenced to death for capital offenses committed before reaching his 18th birthday. These 14 comprised all the juveniles sentenced to death in each of 4 different states in which the execution of minors is permissible by statute. Subjects were chosen because of their youth and not because of any known psychopathology, and can be presumed to be representative of the juvenile death row population. Ages at the time of their offenses ranged from 15 years 10 months to 17 years 10 months (mean 16 years 6 months). Their ages at the time of evaluation ranged from 17 years 10 months to 29 years 2 months (mean 22 years 3 months). There were 6 Black subjects, 7 White subjects and 1 Hispanic subject.

DIAGNOSTIC EVALUATION

The diagnostic evaluation consisted of psychiatric, neurological, psychological, neuropsychological, educational and electroencephalographic examinations.

The psychiatric examination consisted of a semistructured interview based on an expanded version of the Bellevue Adolescent Interview Schedule (B.A.I.S.). This schedule, consisting of 160 questions, was devised because no existing diagnostic instrument for children or adults dealt adequately with topics such as medical history, history of neuropsychiatric symptoms (e.g., lapses, headaches, memory impairment, metamorphopsias, deja vu), characteristics of temper, or history of physical abuse. A pretesting of this instrument prior to its use in this study revealed that data obtained was appreciably more comprehensive than that obtained after a routine 2 week evaluation on an adolescent inpatient teaching service. In this study, the psychiatric evaluation was conducted by a psychiatrist and required from 4 to 6 hours to administer.

Although a detailed description of B.A.I.S. is beyond the scope of this report, suffice it to note that in addition to exploring psychodynamic factors and performing careful mental status evaluations, the psychiatrist obtained detailed medical, family and social histories. Detailed neurological histories were obtained by the psychiatrist and the neurologist including histories of perinatal difficulties, head injury, illnesses or drug overdoses known to affect the CNS, loss of consciousness, fainting, blackouts or other lapses, seizures, and psychomotor epileptic symptoms. Whenever histories of CNS insults were obtained, attempts were made to corroborate them through physical examination (e.g. scars, neurological signs), record reviews, and specialized tests (e.g., EEG).

Standard neurological examinations were performed on 12 of the 14 subjects (in 2 cases, scheduling precluded a neurological examination). The neurological examination consisted of measurement of head circumference; evaluation of cranial nerves; and tests of motor, sensory and reflex functions. Tests of coordination included quantification of numbers of alternating palm strikes in 10 seconds and numbers of finger taps in 10 seconds. Presence or absence of choreiform movements were determined by having the subject extend his arms and fingers in front of him and above his head for 5 seconds. All subjects were asked to skip after the examiner demonstrated the required pattern of movement. The neurologist also performed a mental status examination which included tests of orientation, and memory for digits forward and backward. Calculation skills were assessed by four serial subtractions of 7s starting from 100. Because of its importance in previous studies (15), and because of the subjectivity of the assessment of this particular symptom, both clinicians assessed the presence or absence of paranoid ideation. In only 1 case did their ratings differ, and, in that case, the subject was coded as not having paranoid symptoms.

Certain other issues were covered by both the psychiatrist and the neurologist independently. For instance, both tried to ascertain whether a child had been the victim of abuse or had been witness to extreme family violence. A subject was considered to have been physically abused if he had been punched, beaten with a stick, board, pipe, or belt buckle; or had been beaten with a belt or a switch other than on the buttocks. A subject was also considered to have been physically abused if he had been deliberately cut, burned, or thrown down stairs or across a room. A subject was not considered to have been physically abused if he had been struck only with an open hand or beaten with the leather part of a belt or with a switch only on the buttocks.

A subject was considered to have been sexually abused if, as a child, older persons had fondled his genitals or penetrated his anus. Sexual abuse was also considered to have occurred if the child had been forced to perform sexual acts on an older person of either sex.

In addition to the neurological examination, all subjects had a neurometric quantitative electroencephalogram (QEEG) performed. Unfortunately, in 4 cases interference from metal structures and electronic equipment within the prisons distorted the data. However, QEEG data on 10 of the 14 subjects was obtained. For purposes of this phase of the study, 2 minutes of artifact free QEEG data were analyzed visually in order to determine the existence of sharp waves and/or actual seizure activity. More detailed analysis of the data will be reported subsequently.

Psychological testing consisted of the administration of the Wechsler Adult Intelligence Scale-Revised (16), the Bender-Gestalt Test (17), and Rorschach Test (18), the Draw-A-Person Test (19), and the Halstead-Reitan Battery of Neuropsychological Tests (20).

Educational testing consisted of the administration of the Woodcock-Johnson Psycho-Educational Battery (21) and the "Mini-Screen" subtest from the Test of Adolescent Language (22), the "Story" subtest from the Test of Written Language (23), and a speech screening test.

FINDINGS

To provide the reader with a sense of the types of crimes committed by these subjects, Table 1 presents a list of offenses for which each subject was convicted.

Table 2 presents evidence of central nervous system trauma. All of the 14 subjects suffered head injuries during childhood, 9 of which were severe enough to result in hospitalization, indentation of the cranium and/or loss of consciousness. For example, one subject was hit by a truck at age 14 years that fractured his skull, and he was hospitalized for 11 months. Another fell off the roof of a house and lost consciousness at age 10, had a serious motorcycle accident at age 15, and had palpable scars bilaterally in the occipital region.

Still another subject was hit by a car at age 8 and hospitalized for approximately 6 months, and subsequently fell from a roof onto his chin in later childhood. These head injuries were confirmed by scars in the occipital region and on the chin. Thus, significant injury to the central nervous system was prevalent in this group of condemned juveniles.

Table 3 illustrates the neurological and electroencephalographic findings. In 9 cases serious neurological abnormalities were documented including evidence of focal brain injury (subjects 1, 13), major neurological abnormalities such as abnormal head circumference or a positive Babinski sign (subjects 5, 10, 12), a history of grand mal seizures (subject 6), and symptoms or electroencephalographic findings strongly suggestive of a previously undiagnosed seizure disorder (subjects 2, 7, 8).

Table 4 illustrates the severe psychopathology characteristic of the 14 juveniles. As can be seen, 7 of the subjects were psychotic at the time of their evaluations and/or had been so diagnosed in earlier childhood (subjects 1, 2, 3, 6, 9, 12, 14). An additional 4 subjects had histories consistent with diagnoses of severe mood disorders (subjects 5, 7, 10, 11). The 3 remaining subjects experienced periodic paranoid ideation at which times they often assaulted their perceived enemies. It is noteworthy that 7 of the subjects suffered from psychiatric disturbances that were first manifested in early or middle childhood. For example, one was so behaviorally disturbed he required special classes since 1st grade; another had multiple psychiatric evaluations and was treated with a variety of medications since age 6; and another attempted suicide at 11 years of age.

Table 5 presents data from selected subtests of the psychoeducational test batteries. This table illustrates that only 2 subjects had I.Q. scores above 90. One subject scored in the 60's, 5 in the 70's, and the remaining 6 in the 80's. Of particular importance was the finding that 9 subjects made more than 50 errors on the categories subtest of the Halstead-Reitan Battery of Neuropsychological Tests, which is a test of the ability to formulate abstract concepts. A score of more than 50 errors is considered to be indicative of brain dysfunction. Within this group of 9, 7 subjects also scored within the impaired range on the tactile performance test, another indicator of significant brain dysfunction.

Examination of the reading comprehension subtest scores of the Woodcock-Johnson Psycho-Educational Battery indicates that only 3 juveniles were reading at grade level and 9 were reading 4 or more years below their expected grade for their age. In fact, 3 subjects did not learn to read until their incarceration on Death Row. Another indication of deficits in abstract reasoning was their scores on the concept formation subtest of the Woodcock-Johnson. Indeed, 7 of the 14 scored below the fifth grade level on this test, and of these, 4 were functioning at a first or second grade level. Thus, several measures indicated that the majority of subjects in this sample had severe deficiencies in abstract reasoning and were functioning far below the expected levels for their ages.

As shown in Table 6, 12 of the subjects had been brutally physically abused, often by more than one family member. In addition, 5 more of the subjects had been sodomized by older male relatives, 3 for extended periods of time during childhood. In fact, 4 of these children had been sodomized by more than 1 individual. Therefore, not only did older family members, parents in particular, fail to protect these adolescents, but they also often used the subjects to vent their rages and to satisfy their sexual appetites. Alcoholism, drug abuse, psychiatric treatment, and psychiatric hospitalization were prevalent in the histories of the parents of these subjects.

Of note, in only 5 cases were pretrial psychiatric or psychological examinations of any kind performed. These tended to be brief and perfunctory and only once reported the existence of significant neuropsychiatric impairment. In that case the boy was diagnosed by one psychiatrist as schizophrenic and by another as suffering from an organic psychosis.

DISCUSSION

Our data indicate that juveniles condemned to death in the United States are multiply handicapped. They tend to have suffered serious injuries to the central nervous system, to have suffered since early childhood from a multiplicity of psychotic symptoms, and to have been physically and sexually abused. In 6 cases alcohol or drugs definitely contributed to uncontrolled behaviors and in 2 other cases alcohol and drugs were probable contributors.

In what ways do these factors contribute to their violent behavior? First, the kind of diffuse central nervous system injury that they sustain contributes to their emotional lability, impulsivity, and difficulty in controlling aggressive behaviors. Such brain injured youngsters are also especially vulnerable to the disorganizing effects of alcohol and drugs.

The most prevalent psychotic symptom experienced by these youngsters is episodic paranoid ideation. This symptom is probably a result of the combination of brain injury, violent parental behavior, and at times, the genetic vulnerability inherent in being the child of one or two psychotic parents. Whatever the causes, these youngsters, as a result of paranoid misperceptions and a pervasive sense of being endangered, lash out readily at real and imagined threats. In this way, offenses that start out as simple robberies or burglaries escalate into homicidal acts.

The severe cognitive impairment characteristic of these juveniles further compromises their ability to make mature judgments and act in accordance with them. These juveniles are, rather, bound by immediate stimuli and tend to act before they think. They are also easily influenced by those around them and sometimes take literally statements that are intended simply as expressions of exasperation (e.g., "Somebody ought to kill that guy"). It is not unusual for such children to act out the conscious or unconscious homicidal wishes of parental figures, older siblings, or older peers (24).

Physical and sexual abuse contribute to these juveniles' violence in several ways. First, the abuse itself is frequently characterized by multiple batterings to the child's head. These children are thrown to the floor, slammed against walls, thrown down stairs, and even kicked in the head. Thus, the impulsivity secondary to brain injury may often be the direct result of these batterings. Second, parental violence functions as a model for behavior. Whether one describes this phenomenon as "identification with the aggressor" or as modeling is irrelevant. Children imitate what they see. Finally, the kind of irrational brutality to which they have been exposed and subjected engenders rage, rage that is rarely expressed toward the child's battering parents or caretakers. More often, it is displaced onto other individuals in the child's environment.

It is likely that some of the very vulnerabilities that contributed to the condemned juveniles' violence also contributed indirectly to the harshness of the sentences they received. Theoretically, all of the vulnerabilities described, neurological impairment, psychiatric illness, cognitive deficits, and parental abusiveness are mitigating factors that, coupled with the juveniles' age, would argue against the imposition of the death sentence. Unfortunately, such cognitively handicapped juveniles have no idea of the existence of these vulnerabilities, much less of their relevance to issues of mitigation. In fact, they almost uniformly try to hide evidence of cognitive deficits and psychotic symptomatology. They would prefer to be considered bad to being considered sick or retarded. They frequently tell examiners "I'm not crazy" or "I'm not a retard."

Similarly, these juveniles are ashamed of their parents' brutality toward them and try to conceal it or minimize it. Only painstaking, lengthy interviews, inquiring in detail about injuries, inquiring about the origin of visible scars, and asking about "scars I can't see" are likely to reveal the extent to which these juveniles themselves have been victimized. Even the most harsh abuse is often interpreted by the juvenile as punishment that was deserved and therefore to be hidden. Suffice it to say that a history of sexual abuse is even more likely to be concealed. Thus, these juveniles systematically conceal those factors in their lives most likely to mitigate against a sentence of death. It is, therefore, up to the adults in their families to make sure that factors relevant to the juveniles' defense are introduced at sentencing. Unfortunately, in the case of homicidal children, the very adults who should be assisting in their children's defense are not only inadequate to this task by virtue of their own psychopathology, but also have a vested interest in concealing the parental misconduct that would constitute mitigating circumstances. In fact, we have found that in several capital cases family members have cooperated with the prosecution, have testified against their own children, or have urged the judge to impose a death sentence.

Conceivably, the juveniles' lawyers might be relied upon to unearth and make use of the kinds of clinical data described in this paper. Such was not the case. The time and expertise required to document this quality of clinical information was not available.

Indeed, of these 14 subjects only 5 received pretrial evaluations of any kind. These 5 evaluations tended to be perfunctory and gave inaccurate and inadequate portrayals of the adolescents' neuropsychiatric and cognitive status.

Furthermore, the attorneys' alliances were often divided between the juveniles and their families. In fact, on several occasions, our clinical team was requested by attorneys to conceal or minimize information regarding parental physical and sexual abuse in order to spare the family any embarrassment. Thus, some of the very factors that led to the juveniles' aggression in the first place also contributed to an inadequate defense during the sentencing portion of their trials.

In short, factors such as brain damage, paranoid ideation, physical abuse and sexual abuse, all of which would have been relevant to issues of mitigation, were overlooked or deliberately concealed in the cases of these 14 condemned juveniles.

Adolescence is well recognized to be a time of great physiological and psychological stresses. Normal adolescents are distinguished from adults by their intensity and volatility of feelings, their poor tolerance of anxiety, their lack of awareness of the effects of their actions, their failure of self-criticism, and their difficulty appreciating the feelings of others (25). Our data indicate that, above and beyond these maturational stresses, homicidal adolescents must cope with brain dysfunctions, cognitive limitations, and severe psychopathology. Moreover, they must function in families that are not merely non-supportive but also violent and brutally abusive. These findings raise questions about the American tradition of considering adolescents to be as responsible as adults for their offenses and of sentencing them to death.

DEATH PENALTY FOR CHILDREN: THE AMERICAN EXPERIENCE WITH CAPITAL PUNISHMENT FOR CRIMES COMMITTED WHILE UNDER AGE EIGHTEEN

Victor L. Streib*

Within the seamless web of the law and the empirical reality of capital punishment, what role does the youth of the offender play? If it is assumed that "children have a very special place in life which law should reflect," does it necessarily follow that "civilized societies will not tolerate the spectacle of execution of children?"¹

Fueled by eight recent executions² and by the presence of more than twelve hundred persons on death row awaiting execution,³ the debate about capital punishment continues with renewed vigor. The debate embraces such issues as the historical evolution of capital punishment, the legal process involved, the characteristics of the executed offenders, the nature of their offenses, and the criminological purposes served by "a punishment . . . unique in its severity and irrevocability."⁴ This article examines these issues as applied to very young offenders lawfully executed in the United States for crimes they committed while under age eighteen.

In the early 1980s, capital punishment of children is reemerging as an issue of great national importance,⁵ sufficient even to capture the

6. For the purpose of this article, the term "children" means all persons under the age of eighteen. Capital punishment of children refers to sentencing to death or executing a person for a crime committed by that person at an age of less than eighteen years. It is beyond the scope of this article to explore the various ages at which persons are considered children or adults for purposes of voting, drinking, consorting, working, etc. For particularly insightful analysis of some of these issues, see F. Zaretsko, THE CAUSATION LEGAL WORLD OF ADOLESCENCE (1982);

attention of the United States Supreme Court and the American Bar Association.⁷ The reappearance of capital punishment for crimes committed by persons under age eighteen is primarily the product of two trends. One trend is an increasing willingness to subject persons under the maximum juvenile court jurisdictional age limit to criminal prosecution, either through direct prosecution of the child in criminal court⁸ or through initial juvenile court jurisdiction being transferred in waiver proceedings to criminal court.⁹ The other trend is the return to reliance upon capital punishment in the criminal justice system.¹⁰ The combined effect of these trends is an increased exposure of children to the possibility of capital punishment for their misdeeds.

Historical Background of Capital Punishment for Children

The United States inherited the bulk of its criminal law, including the tradition of capital punishment, primarily from England but also from other European countries. A fundamental premise of this criminal jurisprudence was then and is now that persons under age seven were conclusively presumed to be incapable of entertaining criminal intent and thus could not have criminal liability imposed upon them.¹¹ For persons from age seven to age fourteen, the presumption of inability to entertain criminal intent was rebuttable, and if rebutted, such a person could be convicted of a crime and be sentenced to death.¹² No such presumption applied to persons age fourteen or over. This view of children's liability in the criminal justice system was accepted by the United States Supreme Court in In re Gault:¹³ "At common law, children under seven were considered incapable of possessing criminal intent. Beyond that age, they were subjected to arrest, trial, and in theory to punishment like adult offenders."¹⁴

Considerable debate has centered on the issue of whether children were actually executed after being sentenced to death. Much of the debate seems to be confused by the use of relatively vague terms such as "children" and "adolescents," and by infrequent reporting of the age of the offender on the date of the crime or the execution. The term "adolescent" has rarely been used in a legal sense even though it is a regular part of the vocabulary of the social sciences.¹⁵ Despite this confusing "linguistic discontinuity,"¹⁶ the conventional historical view is that in England "[a]dolescents as well as children could be—and actually were—sentenced to death and even executed."¹⁷

As for the younger members of this group, the English law's bark was apparently much worse than its bite. Knell studied the official records for the years 1801 to 1836 for the Old Bailey,¹⁸ a major criminal court in London. In 103 cases, children under age fourteen were sentenced to death but none were ever executed.

The same dichotomy between sentencing and execution carried over to colonial America and the early United States. In the early nineteenth century, "courts were extremely hesitant to sentence a child under fourteen to death."¹⁹ As for actually carrying out the death sentence, Platt and Diamond²⁰ found: "[O]nly two children under fourteen were judicially executed between the years 1806 and 1882. In both cases, the defendants were Negro slaves and, in one case, the victim was the son of a white property owner."²¹ At least some trial courts were convinced that the reluctance to execute younger children was universal. A criminal trial judge observed in 1823: "The lowest period, that judgment of death has been inflicted upon an infant in the United States, has never extended below sixteen years, or at least after a careful search none could be found, and it is presumed none can be found."²² Courts that sentenced younger offenders to death apparently believed that commutation of their sentences was likely.²³

Recent research suggests that these scholars and courts were seriously misinformed.²⁴ Seven children were executed prior to 1800 and 95 prior to 1900, the youngest aged ten years. It is likely that courts today are no better informed.

Impact of the Juvenile Justice System, 1899 to 1930

During this period in the United States, the juvenile justice system began to emerge.²⁵ The United States Supreme Court provided the conventional explanation:

The early reformers were appalled by adult procedures and penalties, and by the fact that children could be given long prison sentences and mixed in jails with hardened criminals. . . . The apparent rigidities, technicalities, and harshness which they observed in both substantive and procedural criminal law were therefore to be discarded. The idea of crime and punishment was to be abandoned. The child was to be "treated" and "rehabilitated" and the procedures, from apprehension through institutionalization, were to be "clinical" rather than punitive.²⁶

Mid-nineteenth-century reformers focused primarily upon modifying the harshness of the correctional phase of the criminal justice system.²⁷ The best-known reforms were the houses of refuge established in various cities by reformers anxious to separate youthful offenders from adult criminals.²⁸ The success of these reforms was limited by the continuing criminal court jurisdiction over those youthful offenders. This led reformers to believe that a separate legal system for juveniles was needed. Following Illinois' lead in 1899, a number of states enacted juvenile court legislation patterned on the statutes of Illinois and other pioneer states. By 1925 almost all states had such legislation,²⁹ the federal government joined the trend in 1938.³⁰ The appearance of the juvenile justice system can be seen as a codification of the previous unofficial and implicit policy of giving special treatment to young offenders.³¹ For the purpose of this article, the premise is accepted that a juvenile justice system should not punish the juvenile offender but must treat and rehabilitate him.³² Adoption of this premise requires rejection of the death penalty for juvenile offenders. During the early era of juvenile justice (1800-1930), however, seventy-seven persons were executed for crimes committed while under age eighteen.³³ None were sentenced to death directly by juvenile courts but were condemned by adult criminal courts.

Prosecution of Children in Criminal Court

In most jurisdictions today, delinquent acts are defined as acts in violation of state or federal law, local ordinance, or an order of the juvenile court.³⁴ Generally, this definition encompasses acts that would be crimes if committed by an adult. This broad category includes murder and other capital crimes unless they are specifically excluded from the jurisdiction of the juvenile court. The essentially criminal nature of these delinquent acts means that the cases could fall within the jurisdiction of criminal court, as has been recognized by the Supreme Court in Gault:

[T]he fact of the matter is that there is little or no assurance . . . that a juvenile apprehended and interrogated by the police or even by the Juvenile Court itself will remain outside of the reach of adult courts as a consequence of the offense for which he has been taken into custody. In Arizona, as in other States, provision is made for Juvenile Courts to relinquish or waive jurisdiction to the ordinary criminal courts.³⁵

In 1975 the Supreme Court noted in passing that "an overwhelming majority of jurisdictions permits transfer in certain instances."³⁶ issues, in Kent v. United States in 1966,³⁷ was a review of the procedures by which a juvenile court could and should waive jurisdiction over a juvenile offender in order to transfer the case to adult criminal court. The significance of such transfer is apparent from the facts in Kent: 16-year-old Morris A. Kent, Jr., was transferred from juvenile to criminal court, convicted of six felonies, and sentenced to a total of thirty to ninety years in prison.³⁸ For many jurisdictions, the transfer from juvenile to criminal court can trigger the possibility of the death penalty.³⁹

A person under the age limit for juvenile court jurisdiction will nevertheless be tried in criminal court if the offense charged has been expressly excluded from the jurisdiction of juvenile court.⁴⁰ Typically, only the most serious crimes such as murder, rape, and robbery are excluded. Some states expressly exclude capital offenses from juvenile court jurisdiction,⁴¹ leaving only criminal court jurisdiction over such offenses.

Finally, some states give the prosecuting attorney discretion to decide in which court the case should be filed.⁴² If the prosecutor files a juvenile petition, the case proceeds in juvenile court; if a criminal information is filed or a grand jury indictment is obtained, the case proceeds in criminal court.

Each of these three alternatives lodges the choice of court in a different primary decision-maker. The traditional court waiver alternative leaves the decision up to the judiciary—specifically the juvenile court judge. In the second alternative, the legislature has made the original and preemptive decision to place certain cases exclusively in criminal court. The prosecutor is the decision-maker as to the choice of court in the third alternative. Whichever means is followed, an offender under the juvenile court age limit is subjected to the full authority of the criminal court, typically including the power to impose capital punishment for certain crimes.

In some jurisdictions, the question of whether a 16-year-old accused of murder will stay in juvenile court, or be tried in the criminal courts for a capital crime, will depend on an individual judge assessing whether that 16-year-old is "mature" and "sophisticated." If he is found to be "sophisticated," his reward can be slightly for the electric chair.

The first such execution was in 1642 in Massachusetts; the most recent was in 1964 in Texas.⁴⁵

Table 1 indicates the age of these executed children at the time of the offense as accurately as can be determined from the available information. The youngest were age ten at the time of the offense, with a total of thirty-nine children executed for committing crimes while age fifteen or younger. The two 10-year-olds were an unnamed black

University of Alabama School of Law. Letter with data from Walt Esby to Viktor Strub (Apr. 29, 1983). Esby has verified these 14,029 executions through newspaper reports, official documents, and other sources over his many years of research on this project.

The other primary source of data was Teeters & Zibulka, Executions Under State Authority—An Inventory, in W. Bowers, Executions in America 200 (1974). For some of the older cases, on capital punishment for young offenders, however, this is clearly the most complete and accurate data available.

Sauer, "Killing Kids for Justice: Capital Punishment for Young Offenders" (Nov. 1982) (Annual Meeting of the American Society of Criminology, Toronto, Ontario, Canada); Strub, "Capital Punishment for Juveniles in the Criminal Justice System" (June 1982) (Annual Meeting of the Law and Society Association, Toronto, Ontario, Canada); Strub, "Death Penalty for Children: State Execution for Crimes Committed Before Under Age Eighteen" (Mar. 1982) (Annual Meeting of the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences, Louisville, Kentucky) (all available from the author).

Executions of children have been much more common in some regions of the United States than in others,⁵³ as is illustrated by Table 4. The South region has accounted for 62% of the total (178/287), with the South-Atlantic division of that region providing about two-thirds of those 178. The other three regions have executed from 8% to 16%, respectively, of the total nationwide.

Tables 5, 6, 7, and 8 provide the state-by-state breakdown of these 287 executions. Within the Northeast region, New York accounts for one-half of the total (22/45) for this nine-state region. In the six New England states, only thirteen children have been executed. Certain states have also provided the bulk of the cases for the North-Central region. For example, Ohio is responsible for 79% (19/24) of the executions of children within the five-state East North-Central division. Missouri's total of seven is 64% of the eleven within the seven-state West North-Central division. Table 7 reveals the same pattern, with Arizona and California far outpacing their sister states within the two divisions of the West region.

DEATH PENALTY FOR CHILDREN

This pattern of single-state dominance of the divisions is not as strong for the South region. Although Georgia leads the South region (as well as all jurisdictions nationwide) with forty executions, it accounts for only 36% of the total for the nine-state South-Atlantic division. This is because other states also have executed many children, such as nineteen in Virginia, eighteen in North Carolina, and twelve in Florida. Within the four-state East South-Central division, the leaders are Tennessee with thirteen and Alabama with twelve. Texas with seventeen leads the four-state West South-Central division.

The regional theme is important within the categories of the race of the offender and the crime involved. Nationwide, 62% of the children executed have been black; outside of the South region, 24% have been black. Within the seventeen-state South region, 85% have been black; within the South region's South-Atlantic division (nine states), 93% have been black. For four of these states, 100% of the children executed have been black.⁵⁴

The South region has been more willing than other regions to impose capital punishment for crimes other than murder. Nationwide, 80% of the executions have been for the crime of murder. Within the South region, the figure is 72%; outside, 92%. One striking example is that all forty-two of the child executions for rape or attempted rape have occurred in the South region.

Table 9 presents these data broken down by the decade in which the execution occurred. The peak periods for executions of children were the 1930s and 1940s. Almost half of all of the post-1900 executions took place during those twenty years.

For a variety of reasons, all executions ceased in the 1960s and did not begin again until 1977. No children have been executed since 1964, but approximately twenty persons have been sentenced to death and await execution for crimes committed while under age eighteen. Included are Todd Ice of Kentucky, who was only fifteen years old at the time his crime was committed, and Tina Canada of Mississippi, who was only sixteen at the time of her crime.

Recent Legal Developments: Capital Punishment of Children

More than three-fourths of the nations of the world (73 of 93 reporting countries) have set age eighteen as the minimum age for execution.⁵⁵ The United Nations endorsed this position in 1976.⁵⁶ Another indication of the present global attitude is the recent condemnation of the death penalty by Pope John Paul II.⁵⁷ Contrast this benevolent international attitude with the current "get tough" attitude toward violent juvenile offenders that seems to be sweeping legislatures and the judiciary in the United States.⁵⁸ As for public acceptance of the death penalty as an appropriate legal reaction to serious crime, polls in the United States indicate that about two-thirds of those questioned favor the death penalty.⁵⁹

The primary constitutional barrier to imposition of the death penalty has been the eighth amendment to the United States Constitution, which provides: "Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted."⁶⁰ The general

60. In addition to the eighth amendment of peripheral interest is that the twenty-sixth amendment to the United States Constitution sets age eighteen as the dividing line for adult voting rights. Also, it should be noted that the Supreme Court has never regarded age as a suspect class under the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution.

purposes of the cruel and unusual punishment clauses were set forth by the Supreme Court in 1977:

First, it limits the kinds of punishment that can be imposed on those convicted of crimes second, it proscribes punishment grossly disproportionate to the severity of the crime; and third, it imposes substantive limits on what can be made criminal and punished as such. We have recognized the last limitation as one to be applied sparingly.⁶² [Citations omitted.]

The constitutionality of the death penalty seems to have been presumed by the United States Supreme Court for a century.⁶³ Welcomed by some⁶⁴ and harshly criticized by others⁶⁵ is the Court's apparent willingness in the past decade to reevaluate this premise of constitutionality. In 1972 the Court held in *Furman v. Georgia*⁶⁶ that the death penalty was unconstitutional as applied in those particular cases, but it did not decide whether it is unconstitutional for all crimes and under all circumstances. This lingering question was answered by the Court in 1976 in *Gregg v. Georgia*⁶⁷ in which a majority found that the death penalty does not per se violate the eighth amendment. In 1976⁶⁸ and 1977,⁶⁹ the Court struck down statutes incorporating mandatory death sentences, and the Court rejected the death penalty for rape cases in 1977.⁷⁰ The next year in Lockett v. Ohio,⁷¹ the Court expressly required that all aspects of the offender's character and record be considered before imposing the death penalty. The meticulous treatment given these cases stems from the Court's unarguable premise that "death as a punishment is unique in its severity and irrevocability."⁷²

⁶⁴ The several concurring opinions acknowledged, as they must, that until today capital punishment was accepted and assumed as not unconstitutional per se under the Eighth Amendment or the Fourteenth Amendment. This is either the first or the simplest holding of a unanimous Court in Wilkey v.utin, 99 U.S. 150, 134-135, in 1879; of a usual nine Court in Aspen v. Kennerly, 135 U.S. 436, 447, in 1890; of the Court in Wheeler v. United States, 217 U.S. 349, in 1910; of all those members of the Court, a majority, who addressed the issue in Louisiana ex rel. Francis v. Resweber, 339 U.S. 459, 463-464, 471-472, in 1947; of Mr. Chief Justice Warren, speaking for himself and three other Justices (Black, Douglas, and Whitaker) in Wong v. Drake, 356 U.S. 86, 99, in 1958; in the denial of certiorari in Rodolph v. Alabama, 375 U.S. 839, in 1963 (where, however, Justices Douglas, Brennan, and Goldberger would have heard argument with respect to the imposition of the alternate penalty on a convicted rapist, who had "neither taken nor exchanged human life") and of Mr. Justice Black in *McCandless v. Perhaps enough has been said to demonstrate the wavering position that this Court has taken in opinions spanning the last quarter century. On virtually every occasion that any opinion has touched on the question of the constitutionality of the death penalty, it has been asserted affirmatively, or tacitly assumed, that the Constitution does not prohibit the penalty. No Justice of the court, until today, has dissented from this consistent reading of the Constitution.

It seems well-established in the 1980s that the sentencing decision must take into account the age of a particularly young offender: "[W]e conclude that the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments require that the sentence . . . not be precluded from considering, as a mitigating factor, any aspect of a defendant's character or record . . . that the defendant proffers as a basis for a sentence less than death."⁷³ In Lockett the Ohio death penalty statute was overturned partly because "consideration of defendant's . . . age, would generally not be permitted, as such, to affect the sentencing decision."⁷⁴ The youth of the offender as an appropriate mitigating factor was also mentioned in passing by the Supreme Court in Gregg v. Georgia,⁷⁵ Jurek v. Texas,⁷⁶ Roberts v. Louisiana,⁷⁷ and Bell v. Ohio.⁷⁸

The most recent Supreme Court consideration of this issue is Eddings v. Oklahoma.⁷⁹ The Court had granted certiorari⁸⁰ on only one question:

"Whether the infliction of the death penalty on a child who was sixteen at the time of the crime constitutes cruel and unusual punishment under the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments of the Constitution of the United States."⁸⁰ When the briefs were filed and the case argued before the Court, however, the petitioner inserted an additional question for the Court: "Whether the Court should address the plain error committed by the trial court when it refused to consider relevant mitigating evidence in violation of Lockert v. Ohio, 438 U.S. 586 (1978)."⁸¹ It was this second, "11th-hour" claim⁸² that garnered the five votes necessary for reversing the imposition of the death penalty on Monty Lee Babin, and remanding the case for sentencing consistent with Lockert.⁸³ Chief Justice Burger made passing reference to the original issue—the constitutionality of imposing the death penalty on children:

[O]ur only authority is to decide whether [sentences] are constitutional under the Eighth Amendment. The Court stops far short of suggesting that there is any constitutional proscription against imposition of the death penalty on a person who was under age 18 when the murder was committed. . . . Because the sentencing proceedings in this case were in no sense inconsistent with Lockert v. Ohio [citation omitted], I would decide the sole issue on which we granted certiorari, and affirm the judgment.⁸⁴

Thus, four members of the Court (Chief Justice Burger and Justices Blackmun, Rehnquist, and White) have indicated that they see no constitutional bar to the imposition of the death penalty on a person who committed murder when age sixteen.

The majority in Edwards left much more doubt as to where they stand, simply restating that the "chronological age of a minor is itself a relevant mitigating factor of great weight."⁸⁵ In her separate concurring opinion,⁸⁶ Justice O'Connor succinctly stated her view of the majority's holding: "I, however, do not read the Court's opinion either as aliening this Court's opinions establishing the constitutionality of the death penalty or as deciding the issue of whether the Constitution permits imposition of the death penalty on an individual who commits a murder at age 16."⁸⁷ The constitutional question is thus left in hand. Despite strong opposition,⁸⁸ the Court seems poised on the brink finding no constitutional prohibition to capital punishment for crimes committed by minors.

After Furman v. Georgia, the response of the state legislatures can be seen as "[t]he most marked indication of society's endorsement of the death penalty for murder."⁸⁹ Even though the Model Penal Code⁹⁰ expressly rejects the death penalty for offenders under eighteen, a strong majority of the states that have enacted new death penalty statutes would permit it. Of the thirty-nine presumptively valid death penalty statutes now in existence, only eight prohibit execution of offenders whose crimes were committed while under age sixteen,⁹¹ seventeen,⁹² or eighteen.⁹³ Nineteen other statutes have expressly designated the offender's youth as a mitigating factor.⁹⁴ The remainder do not specify particular mitigating circumstances but do not rule out the youth of the offender. The proposed federal statute would follow the majority by expressly requiring that the age of the offender be considered as a mitigating but not a prohibitive factor.⁹⁵

State appellate courts have necessarily faced this question with much more frequency than have federal courts. No clear pattern can be derived from these decisions; a substantial number of courts have come down on both sides of the issue, some approving the death penalty for young offenders,⁹⁶ and others rejecting or strongly criticizing it.⁹⁷ Note,

Criminological Purposes Served by Executing Children

From the foregoing discussion, it seems reasonable to conclude that capital punishment for children has been common enough during the past 340 years to warrant attention. Even though the youthfulness of offenders has probably always been considered, and now must be specifically taken into account as a mitigating factor, the choice must still be made between execution and a long term, usually life, in prison.¹⁰⁰ What factors unique to such cases should be considered?

A number of policies and presumptions underlie the continuing debate over the appropriateness of capital punishment for crimes by adults. Perhaps the most complete list has been provided by Justice Thurgood Marshall: "There are six purposes conceivably served by capital punishment: retribution, deterrence, prevention of repetitive criminal acts, encouragement of guilty pleas and confessions, eugenics, and economy."¹⁰¹ Each should be considered in the context of crime committed by persons under age eighteen.

- 1. The retributivist argument is often based upon the following points:
 - For petty criminal offenses, death is the only fitting and adequate punishment.
 - The death penalty acts as a deterrent.
 - Those who commit certain grave offenses must be put to death for the protection of society at large.
- 2. Among the main arguments put forward by the abolitionists are:
 - The death penalty is irreversible. Decided upon according to fallible processes of law by fallible human beings, it can be—and actually has been—inflicted upon people innocent of any crime.
 - There is lack of convincing evidence that the death penalty has any more power to deter than—say—a long period of imprisonment. Its deterrent effect on rational offenders is highly questionable. It is even more so in the case of offenders who are mentally ill, or who are impelled by violent political motives.

The goal of societal retribution or legal vengeance achieved through execution of a child seems difficult to justify. However, capital punishment can be characterized as an understandable expression of societal outrage at particular crimes.¹⁰² In this sense, Justice Stewart referred favorably to a retributive purpose in *Gregg v. Georgia*¹⁰³ and in Furman v. Georgia.¹⁰⁴ Chief Justice Burger has also approved this justification.¹⁰⁵ In contrast, Justice Marshall has argued persuasively that the eighth amendment precludes retribution for its own sake.¹⁰⁶

Even if the execution of an adult solely for revenge is constitutionally permissible, this justification of capital punishment is less appealing when the object of righteous vengeance is a child. The spectacle of our society seeking legal vengeance through execution of a child raises fundamental questions about the nature of children's moral responsibility for their actions and about society's moral responsibility to protect and nurture children.

Probably the most complex issue is whether capital punishment is more effective than life imprisonment as a deterrent to crime. This key issue has been the subject of extensive research,¹⁰⁷ but no consistent ¹⁰³ Id. On that score I would say only that I cannot agree that retribution is a constitutionally impermissible ingredient in the imposition of punishment. The instinct for retribution is part of the nature of man, and channeling that instinct in the administration of criminal justice serves an important purpose in promoting the stability of a society governed by law. When people begin to believe that organized society is unwilling or unable to impose upon criminal offenders the punishment they "deserve," then there are seen the seeds of anarchy—of self-help, vigilante justice, and lynch law.

¹⁰⁴ Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238, 308 (1972) (Stewart, J., concurring). Id. It is argued that retribution can be discounted because that, after all, is what the Eighth Amendment seeks to eliminate. There is no authority suggesting that the Eighth Amendment was intended to purge the law of its retributive elements, and the Court has consistently assumed that retribution is a legitimate dimension of the punishment of crimes. . . . It would be reading a great deal into the Eighth Amendment to hold that the punishments authorized by legislatures cannot constitutionally reflect a retributive purpose.

conclusions have been drawn by members of the Supreme Court."¹⁰⁷ When applied to children, the key issues are adolescents' perception of death and whether that perception acts as a more significant deterrent to criminal acts than life imprisonment.

Even less is known about death as a deterrent for adolescents than is known about death as a deterrent for adults. Many social scientists would agree that adolescents live for today with little thought of the future consequences of their actions.¹⁰⁸ The defiant attitudes and risk-taking behaviors of some adolescents are probably related to their "developmental stage of defiance about danger and death."¹⁰⁹ Some ¹⁰⁸ Compare the view of Justice Stewart:

Although some of the studies suggest that the death penalty may not function as a significantly greater deterrent than lesser penalties, there is no convincing statistical evidence either supporting or refuting this view. We may nevertheless assume safely that there are murderers, such as those who act in passion, for whom the threat of death has little or no deterrent effect. But for many others, the death penalty undoubtedly is a significant deterrent. There are carefully contemplated murders, such as murder for hire, where the possible penalty of death may well enter into the cold calculus that precedes the decision to act.

Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 183-86 (1976) with that of Justice Brennan:

In short, whatever the speculative validity of the assumption that the threat of death is a superior deterrent, there is no reason to believe that as currently administered the punishment of death is necessary to deter the commission of capital crimes. Whatever might be the case were all or substantially all eligible criminals quickly put to death, unverifiable possibilities are an insufficient basis upon which to conclude that the threat of death today has any greater deterrent efficacy than the threat of imprisonment.

Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238, 302 (1972) (Brennan, J., concurring), and with Justice Marshall's perspective:

Despite the fact that abolitionists have not proved nondeterrence beyond a reasonable doubt, they have succeeded in showing by clear and convincing evidence that capital punishment is not necessary as a deterrent to crime in our society. That is all that they must do. We would shirk our judicial responsibilities if we failed to accept the presently existing statistics and demanded more proof. It may be that we now possess all the proof that anyone could ever hope to assemble on the subject. . . .

In light of the massive amount of evidence before us, I see no alternative but to conclude that capital punishment cannot be justified on the basis of its deterrent effect.

adolescents may play games of chance with death from a feeling of omnipotence.¹¹⁰ They typically have not learned to accept the finality of death.¹¹¹ Adolescents tend to view death as a remote possibility; old people die, not teenagers. Consider, for example, teenagers' propensity to flirt with death through reckless driving, ingestion of dangerous drugs, and other similar "death-defying" behavior.

The meager research on this issue suggests the conclusion that threatening a child with death probably does not have the same impact as threatening an adult with death. Even if some percentage of adults are deterred by the death penalty, the deterrent effect tends to lose much of its power when imposed upon an adolescent.

No one can deny that execution of a child will prevent repetitive criminal acts by that particular child. The death penalty does, however, seem an unnecessarily harsh solution to the problem of recidivism. Not only are murderers "extremely unlikely to commit other crimes either in prison or upon their release,"¹¹² but irreversibly abandoning all hope of the reform of a child is squarely in opposition to the fundamental premises of juvenile justice and comparable socio-legal systems. While the specific deterrence argument may be somewhat persuasive in the case of the 45-year-old habitual criminal, it is singularly inappropriate and defeatist when applied to the 16-year-old child.

Using capital punishment as leverage to encourage guilty pleas and confessions seems not only a questionable justification for this ultimate reaction but also unnecessary in a child's case. The threat of life imprisonment for an adolescent who has fifty to sixty years yet to live is so overwhelming that it should provide whatever leverage the government might need.

The potential fifty to sixty years of life in prison also gives rise to an economic argument—that it is simply an enormous and unjustifiable financial burden on society to support life imprisonment instead of executing youthful offenders. Given the extraordinarily high cost of capital trials and appeals, as well as the cost of maintaining death row and of performing executions, it would seem reasonable to conclude that "there can be no doubt that it costs more to execute a man than to keep him in prison for life."¹¹³

Finally, the issue of using capital punishment for eugenic purposes or to improve the human race seems unworthy of serious consideration."¹¹⁴ In any event, the less severe alternatives of sterilization and life imprisonment would seem to be required by the Constitution. This brief consideration of the purposes served by capital punishment for children is inconclusive at best, as is such a consideration vis-à-vis adults. Most of the justifications for capital punishment of adults for whatever persuasiveness they have when applied to the case of an offender under age eighteen.

Conclusion

The 287 executions for crimes committed by persons under age eighteen comprise only 2% of the total of 14,029 executions in our history. The concept of capital punishment for children seems surprising in a country that so dotes upon its children. If early reforms of the criminal justice system were intended to benefit children by minimizing the harshness of criminal sentences, why is it that capital punishment of children was allowed to continue? How can the 192 executions of children since the inception of the socio-legal experiment in juvenile justice be explained?

If the phenomenon ended there, perhaps the execution of children would be cast aside as just another odd chapter in American history. But the reemergence of capital punishment in the past few years, complete with placing children on death row, makes it clear that the issue is of current as well as historical importance.

Few state capital punishment statutes prohibit executions of children and the Supreme Court has come perilously close to removing any supposed constitutional barriers. The present state of the law is the youth of the offender must be considered as a mitigating factor by the sentencing authority. That and other mitigating factors can be overcome by aggravating factors, though, resulting in capital punishment for a child even in the 1980s.

114. This Nation has never formally professed eugenic goals, and the history of the world does not look kindly on them. If eugenics is one of our purposes, then the legislatures should say so forthrightly and design procedures to serve this goal. Until such time, I can only conclude, as has virtually everyone else who has looked at the problem, that capital punishment cannot be defended on the basis of any eugenic purposes.

Id. at 357.

115. For example, even Chief Justice Burger has recognized that sentencing procedures should not create "the risk that the death penalty will be imposed in spite of factors which may not create 'the risk that the death penalty is between life and death, that risk is unacceptable for a less severe penalty. When the choice is between life and death, that risk is unacceptable and incompatible with the commands of the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments.'" Lockard v. Ohio, 438 U.S. 586, 605 (1978). Whether sterilization would be a constitutionally acceptable "less severe penalty" is in doubt. See Salinger v. Oklahoma, 316 U.S. 515 (1942).

The notion of a governmental agency imposing the death penalty upon a child through its judicial system raises the deepest questions about the demands of justice versus the special nature of childhood. A handful of states have formed a minority position that rejects capital punishment for children. Other jurisdictions will be considering new capital punishment statutes or amendments to present capital punishment statutes, and they should give strong consideration to this minority position. As the Supreme Court continues to review challenges to the constitutionality of capital punishment, the issue of the age of the offender should be given special considerate death as a punishment for amendment does not inherently proscribe the death as a punishment for particularly aggravated murder by mature adults, the unique legal, psychological, and social status of persons under age eighteen should be incorporated into this area of constitutional interpretation. The response to this article's opening question should be that the United States counts itself among "civilized societies [which] will not tolerate the spectacle of execution of children."¹¹⁶

Petitioner,
v.
STATE OF MISSOURI,
Respondent.

- PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF MISSOURI

Heath A. Wilkins, Petitioner herein, prays that a Writ of Certiorari issue to review the judgment of the Supreme Court of Missouri, in the case styled "State of Missouri v. Heath A. Wilkins, No. 68393".

LIST OF PARTIES

The petitioner, Heath A. Wilkins, appears through Lew A. Kollias, and Nancy A. McKerrow, Office of State Public Defender, 209B East Green Meadows Road, Columbia, Missouri 65203-3698.

Respondent, State of Missouri, appears by the Honorable William Webster, Attorney General of Missouri, P. O. Box 899, Jefferson City, Missouri 65102. Janet Thompson and Nancy A. McKerrow, Assistant Public Defenders, 209B East Green Meadows Road, Columbia, Missouri 65102, appeared in the proceedings before the Missouri Supreme Court, No. 68393.

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri, in the case styled "State of Missouri v. Heath A. Wilkins, No. 68393," the case for which certiorari is being sought, was filed on September 15, 1987, appears at 736 S.W.2d 409 (Mo. banc 1987).

and may be found in the Appendix at pages 1-13. Counsel for Petitioner timely filed a Motion for Rehearing, which was denied on October 13, 1987. Thereafter, on October 13, 1987, the Missouri Supreme Court set Petitioner's death penalty execution date at December 17, 1987 (App. 22).

JURISDICTION

On September 15, 1987, an opinion rendered by the Supreme Court of Missouri affirmed the Petitioner's judgment and conviction for Capital Murder and his sentence of death (App. 1-13). Counsel for Petitioner timely filed a Motion for Rehearing, which was denied on October 13, 1987 (App. 21). On October 13, 1987, the Missouri Supreme Court set petitioner's execution date for December 17, 1987 (App. 22). The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. Section 1257(3) (1987).

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

This case involves the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides, in pertinent part:

No person shall be . . . deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.

The Eighth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides:

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted;

and the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides, in pertinent part:

(N)or shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.

This case also involves the following provisions of the statutes of the State of Missouri, which are set forth in the Appendix: Mo. Rev. Stat. Sections 552.020, 552.030, and 565.020 (1986)

QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

1. Whether the infliction of the death penalty on a child who was sixteen at the time of the crime constitutes cruel and unusual punishment under the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States?

2. If a criminal defendant in a capital murder case is found competent to stand trial, does the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment require a separate determination or heightened test of competency before that criminal defendant may waive his constitutional rights to counsel and to a jury trial in order to seek the death penalty?

3. Whether the infliction of the death penalty on Petitioner Wilkins constitutes excessive and disproportionate punishment in violation of the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States in light of the overwhelming mitigating circumstances in his case?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On May 9, 1986, in the Circuit Court of Clay County, Missouri, appellant entered a plea of guilty to the charge of first degree murder, Mo. Rev. Stat. Section 565.020.1 (Cum. Supp. 1984). On June 27, 1986, appellant was sentenced to death.

Appellant was sixteen-years old on July 27, 1985 when, in the late evening hours, he and Patrick ("Bo") Stevens entered Linda's Liquors in Avondale, Clay County, Missouri, and robbed it. In the course of the robbery appellant stabbed the clerk, Nancy Allen, who died from her wounds. Appellant was arrested fourteen days later and, after being certified to stand trial as an adult, was charged by information with first degree murder.

Appellant initially pleaded not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect and he was ordered to undergo a psychiatric examination pursuant to Mo. Rev. Stat. Sections 552.020 and 552.030 (1986). Appellant was evaluated a second time, at the request of the defense.

A competency hearing was held on April 16, 1986 during which two witnesses, Drs. Mandracchia and Logan, testified. Steven Mandracchia is a clinical psychologist for the State of Missouri. He testified that based upon his evaluation of petitioner he did not believe that petitioner was suffering from any mental disease or defect as defined by Chapter 552 of the Revised Statutes of the State of Missouri. Mandracchia further opined that appellant was competent to proceed, and finally, that appellant was competent to make the decision to plead guilty and to seek the death penalty. When he interviewed petitioner in November, 1985, Mandracchia was unaware of petitioner's desire to plead guilty.

Dr. William S. Logan is a psychiatrist and director of law and psychiatry at the Menninger Foundation. Logan testified that he had not reached a definite conclusion as to petitioner's competence to proceed. According to Logan:

he (petitioner) has a fairly good cognitive and rational understanding of what court procedures are about, but there are some emotional things involved that could interfere with his decision making process at certain critical points.

Logan testified about petitioner's history of mental illness which began, according to Logan, "at the age of 3 or 6, if not before", and the kind of treatment necessary if any improvement in petitioner's mental health was to be made.

The trial court found petitioner competent "to proceed" and immediately thereafter petitioner informed the court that he wished to discharge his attorney and proceed pro se for the express purpose of seeking the death penalty.

On April 23, 1986, the trial court accepted petitioner's waiver of counsel, but ordered counsel to remain available for consultation. Petitioner then informed the court that he wanted to plead guilty. The trial court explained petitioner's rights to him, described death by lethal gas, and urged petitioner to change his mind.

On May 3, 1986 petitioner's guilty plea was accepted. Before accepting the plea the trial court stated that it had found petitioner competent on April 16, 1986 and then asked petitioner if he felt he was competent. Petitioner responded that he was.

On June 27, 1986 a sentencing hearing was held. After presentation of evidence, during which petitioner successfully objected to testimony which may have indicated the existence of mitigating factors, petitioner requested and received the death penalty.

Proceeding pro se, petitioner took none of the prescribed steps to appeal his guilty plea and death penalty. The Missouri Supreme Court requested the State Public Defender to enter the case as amicus curiae and to brief and argue the case.

After argument, the Court ordered petitioner examined by the Department of Mental Health of Missouri to determine his competency to waive counsel on appeal. Based upon the report it received from Dr. S.D. Parwatikar, which stated in pertinent part that petitioner "suffers from an impairment of reasoning which prevents him from imparting information without judging his actions, he is not competent to waive his constitutional rights and represent himself in front of the court," the Missouri Supreme Court set aside the submission and appointed counsel to represent petitioner.

On appeal, petitioner's appointed counsel raised four issues (Appendix 42-54).

In an opinion filed on September 15, 1987, the Missouri Supreme Court, in a 4-3 decision, rejected each of petitioner's claims of error and affirmed the death sentence.

REASONS TO GRANT THE WRIT

1. THE IMPOSITION OF A DEATH SENTENCE FOR AN OFFENSE COMMITTED BY A CHILD BELOW THE AGE OF EIGHTEEN CONSTITUTES CRUEL

AND UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT.

This Court has never directly decided whether it is unconstitutional to apply the death penalty to a juvenile offender.¹ In Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. 104, 102 S.Ct. 369, 71 L.Ed.2d 1 (1982), the Court granted certiorari to resolve that issue, but decided the case on other grounds and the juvenile issue was expressly not decided. Nonetheless, Justice Powell, writing for the Eddings court, recognized that:

Youth is more than a chronological fact. It is a time and condition in life when a person may be most susceptible to influence and to psychological damage. Our history is replete with law and judicial recognition that minors, especially in their earlier years, generally are less mature and responsible than adults.

455 U.S. at 115-116. Since minors lack the ability, through experience, perspective, and judgment to recognize and avoid choices and decisions detrimental to them, it has long been recognized that "juvenile offenders constitutionally may be treated differently from adults." Belotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622, 635, 99 S.Ct. 3035, 61 L.Ed.2d 797 (1979), reh'g. denied, 444 U.S. 827 (1979).

Reflecting the distinct attitude held by society toward the juvenile offender, every state now has a comprehensive juvenile court system, see, Kent v. United States, 383 U.S. 341, 544 n. 19, 86 S.Ct. 1045, 16 L.Ed.2d 34 (1966), and Missouri is no exception See: Mo. Rev. Stat. Chapters 210 and 211 (1986). Further, by enacting, in 1950, the Federal Youth Corrections Act, 18 U.S.C. Sections 5005-5026 (1982), the federal government recognized the need "to provide a better method of treating young offenders . . . in that vulnerable age bracket, to rehabilitate them and restore normal behavior patterns." Dorszynski v. United States, 418 U.S. 424, 432-33, 94 S.Ct. 3042, 41 L.Ed.2d 855 (1974). Reflecting this general attitude, the express purpose of the Missouri Juvenile Code is to facilitate the care, protection and discipline of children who come within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court. This chapter shall be liberally construed, therefore, to the end that each child coming within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court shall receive such care, guidance and control, preferably in his own home, as will conduce to the child's welfare and the best interests of the state and that when such child is removed from the control of his parents the court shall secure for him care as nearly as possible equivalent to that which should have been given him by them.

Mo. Rev. Stat. Section 211.011 (1986). Thus, the legislature has recognized that, in cases involving juvenile offenders, the emphasis must be placed on the welfare of the juvenile and not on traditional notions of punishment and retribution that are the hallmark of adult offender cases.

Contemporary legislation also reflects the societal perception that a juvenile offender presents a distinct case from an adult offender. Ten states which have capital punishment statutes expressly prohibit the application of those statutes to juveniles.² Six of these states³ set the minimum age for the imposition of the death penalty at 18; three⁴ use 17 as the minimum, and one⁵ sets 16 as the cutoff point.

Eleven other states, including Missouri, recognize the distinction between juvenile and adult offenders by giving exclusive original jurisdiction to the juvenile court, and they establish a minimum age at which juvenile court jurisdiction may be waived and the cause transferred to adult criminal court. Missouri, as in four other states,⁶ that age has been set at 14. Mo. Rev. Stat. Section 211.071 (1986). Further, in Missouri, as in many other states, the age of the offender is specifically designated as a mitigating circumstance in the capital punishment statute. Mo. Rev. Stat. Section 565.032 (1986).

Societal concern for the imposition of the death penalty on juvenile offenders and the concomitant recognition that the process involves extraordinary considerations is reflected in the decreasing numbers, over the last fifty years, of instances in which capital sentences are imposed and executed against juvenile offenders; see Teeters-Zibulka, "Executions Under State Authority: 1864-1967", R.W. Bowers, Legal Homicide (1984).⁷ Appendix 59-65, V. Streib, Death Penalty for Juveniles: Past, Present and Future (1985), and Appendix 66-71, V. Streib, Persons on Death Row as of December 1985 for Crimes Committed While Under Age Eighteen (1986). As the American Law Institute has stated, "civilized societies will not tolerate the spectacle of execution of children, and this opinion is confirmed by the American experience in punishing youthful offenders." ALI, Model Penal Code, Section 210.6 Comment, 133 (Official Draft & Revised Comments, 1980).

The state of Missouri has indicated, time and again, its paternalistic attitude toward juveniles. For example, one who is unmarried and sixteen years old, as was petitioner when he committed the offense, cannot vote, Mo. Rev. Stat. Section 115.133 (1986), cannot sit on a jury, Mo. Rev. Stat. Section 494.010 (1986), cannot buy or possess alcoholic beverages, Mo. Rev. Stat. Section 311.325 (1986), cannot enter into a contract, Mo. Rev. Stat. Section 431.055 (1986), and cannot sue or be sued, Mo. Rev. Stat. Section 507.110 (1986). It is thus not only incongruous but completely inconsistent that one who is treated as a minor and is protected in all other realms should be treated as an adult for this purpose alone and be executed as an adult.

Petitioner finally asserts that the imposition of the death penalty in this case, where petitioner was only sixteen-years old when the murder occurred, violates the fundamental precepts of international law

In Enmund v. Florida, 458 U.S. 782, 102 S.Ct. 3368, 73 L.Ed.2d 1140 (1982), this Court stressed, as it had in Coker v. Georgia, 433 U.S. 584, 97 S.Ct. 2361, 53 L.Ed.2d 982 (1977), in which the Court found the death penalty for the rape of an adult woman to be grossly disproportionate and excessive, that, to the greatest extent possible, all objective criteria is helpful and should be utilized in making the proportionality determination. 458 U.S. at 788. The Enmund court went on to note, "Accordingly, the court looked to the historical development of the punishment at issue, legislative judgment, international opinion, and the sentencing decisions juries have made before bringing its own judgment to bear on the matter." 458 U.S. at 786-789 (emphasis supplied). Further, "[t]he climate of international opinion concerning the acceptability of a particular punishment' is an additional consideration which is 'not irrelevant.'" 458 U.S. at 796 n. 22. Enmund and Coker, 433 U.S. at 596 n. 10.

Article I of the American Declaration for the Rights and Duties of Man, adopted at the Ninth International Conference of American States in 1948,⁸ guarantees all people the right to life; Article VII provides that protection, care, and aid be specially afforded to children, and Article XXVI prohibits the imposition of cruel, infamous, or unusual punishment upon an offender. These guarantees can be read to prohibit the imposition of the death penalty upon a juvenile.

Over 80 nations have either completely abolished the death penalty or have forbidden its application to certain offenses and to certain offenders, including juveniles. Hartman, "Unusual Punishment: The Domestic Effects of International Norms Restricting the Application of the Death Penalty", 52 U. of Cinn. L. Rev. 655, 666 n. 44 (1983). Recent data indicates that 41 nations which have retained the death penalty have statutory provisions exempting youth from its imposition, five of those countries being member states of the Organization of American States. Id. The available data indicates that "[T]he great majority of Member States [of the United Nations] report never condemning to death persons under 18 years of age." U.S. Economic & Social Council, Report of the Secretary General on Capital Punishment at 17. U.N. DOC. E/5242 (1973).

Notably, in the international community, at least three instruments regarding human rights prohibit the imposition of the death penalty on juvenile offenders. Article 4(5) of the American Convention on Human Rights, O.A.S. Official Records, OEA/Ser. L/XVI.1.1, DOC 65 Rev. 1 Corr.1 (1970), provides that "Capital punishment shall not be imposed upon persons who, at the time the crime was committed, were under 18 years of age" Article 6(5) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political ⁸ The Declaration is legally binding on the United States as a member of the Organization of American States. Case 2141 (1981), International Commission on Human Rights.

Rights, Annex to G.A. Res. 2200, 21 U.S. GAIR Res. Supp. (No. 16), at 53, U.S. DOC A/6316 (1966), states that "Sentence of death shall not be imposed for crimes committed by persons below eighteen years of age" Finally, the Geneva Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, Aug. 12, 1949, Art. 68, 6 U.S.T. 3516, T.I.A.S. No. 3365 Section 75 U.N.I.S. 287, provides, in part, that "In any case, the death penalty may not be pronounced on a protected person who was under eighteen years of age at the time of the offense."

Furthermore, in the United States itself, the American Law Institute, in the Model Penal Code, has recommended a bar to the execution of offenders who committed the subject crime while under 18 years of age. ALI Model Penal Code Section 210.6(1)(d) (Proposed Official Draft, 1962); Section 210.6, Comment, 133 (Official Draft & Revised Comments 1980). Finally, in 1983, the American Bar Association passed a resolution opposing the "imposition of capital punishment upon any person for any offense committed while under the age of 18". ABA Report No. 117A, approved August 1983.

Petitioner asserts that, under the "evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society" Trop v. Dulles, 356 U.S. 86, 101, 78 S.Ct. 590, 2 L.Ed.2d 630 (1958), the execution of one who was still a juvenile, here, sixteen years of age, when the offense was committed, constitutes cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. This Court should grant certiorari to the Missouri Supreme Court in order to review this issue, or hold this petition in abeyance pending resolution of this issue.

2. THE MISSOURI SUPREME COURT HAS DECIDED THAT THE FIFTH AND FOURTEENTH AMENDMENTS TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION DO NOT REQUIRE A SEPARATE DETERMINATION OR HEIGHTENED TEST OF

COMPETENCY BEFORE A CRIMINAL DEFENDANT MAY WAIVE HIS CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS TO COUNSEL AND TO A JURY TRIAL SO LONG AS THAT DEFENDANT HAS BEEN FOUND COMPETENT TO STAND TRIAL. THAT DECISION CONFLICTS WITH THE DECISIONS OF OTHER STATE COURTS OF LAST RESORT, FEDERAL COURTS OF APPEAL, AND THIS COURT'S DECISION IN WESTBROOK V. ARIZONA.

Petitioner submits that the Missouri Supreme Court's opinion, wherein it denies petitioner's assertion that "a heightened test of competency" was required in his case, conflicts with this Court's decision in Westbrook v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 150, 86 S.Ct. 1320, 16 L.Ed.2d 429 (1966) (per curiam), and decisions of other courts, both state and federal, which have decided this issue.

In denying this point, the Missouri Supreme Court held that:

Counsel urge that there should be a heightened test of competency in this case. Although an incompetent, as a juvenile, may be impaired by his limited cognitive and social capacities, [citation omitted] Judge McFarland could not have been more unbiased, reasonable and fair in his consideration of competency. Any finding of competency necessarily entails the ability to waive certain rights beginning with the very first strains of Miranda. Id. at 961 (juveniles may validly waive both self-incrimination and right to counsel privileges). Moreover, and analogous to the threshold question of competency to stand trial, Missouri law presumes competency, as all persons are presumed to be free of mental disease or defect which would exclude their responsibility for their conduct. Section 551.030.7, RSMo Supp. 1984. The point is denied.

Appendix at 6.

In Westbrook, this Court reversed a first degree murder conviction where the death penalty had been imposed because, although there had been a hearing on the issue of the defendant's competency to stand trial, there had been no hearing or inquiry into the issue of his "competence to waive his constitutional right to the assistance of counsel and proceed, as he did, to conduct his own defense." Id. 384 U.S. at 151. Lower courts have reached conflicting decisions on what the decision in Westbrook requires.

At least four courts have concluded that Westbrook indicates that the standard for competency to waive the right to counsel is higher than the standard for competency to stand trial. United States v. McDowell, 814 F.2d 245, 250 (6th Cir. (1987)); Pickens v. State, 292 N.W.2d 601 (Wis. 1980); United States ex rel. Konigsberg v. Vincent, 526 F.2d 131, 133 (2d Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 426 U.S. 937 (1976); State v. Kolocotronis, 73 Wash. 2d 92, 101, 436 P.2d 774 (1968). However, two courts have rejected such an interpretation finding either that formulating a separate, higher competency standard would prove unworkable, People v. Reason, 37 N.Y.2d 351, 354, 334 N.E.2d 572, 372 N.Y.S.2d 614 (1975), or, that a defendant's competence to act as his own lawyer is irrelevant so long as he has the mental capacity to realize the probable risks and consequences of self-representation. Curry v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. App. 3d 221, 226-227, 141 Cal. Rptr. 884, 887 (1977). One other court expressly declined to decide the issue but recognized that a separate hearing, based on a higher standard, may be required. Goode v. Wainwright, 704 F.2d 593, 597 (11th Cir. 1983), rev'd on other grounds, 464 U.S. 78 (1984).

Likewise, lower courts have split on the issue of whether Westbrook mandates a higher standard of competency in cases where the issue is the defendant's right to waive trial by jury and to plead guilty. In Sieling v. Eymann, 478 F.2d 211 (9th Cir. 1973), the Ninth Circuit, relying on Westbrook, held that a higher standard of competency is required to waive constitutional rights than is required to stand trial. Id. at 213. The Sieling court held that the standard used should "require a court to assess a defendant's competency with specific reference to the gravity of the decisions with which the defendant is faced." Id. at 215. One other circuit has expressly adopted the reasoning of the Sieling court. United States v. Masters, 539 F.2d 721 (D.C. Cir. 1976) ("the level of awareness and comprehension necessary for a valid waiver of constitutional rights differs from the level necessary to stand trial." Id. at 726 n. 30), as have two state courts. See, State v. Jones, 664 P.2d 1216, 1219 (Wash. 1983) (en banc); State v. Cameron, 704 P.2d 1355, 1357 (Ariz. App. 1985);

Other circuits have rejected Sieling, at least in cases where the defendant is represented by counsel. See e.g., United States v. Harlan, 480 F.2d 515 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1006 (1973); Malinauskas v. United States, 505 F.2d 649 (5th Cir. 1974); United States ex rel McGough v Hewitt, 528 F.2d 339, 342 n. 2 (3d Cir. 1975); Allard v. Helgemoe, 572 F.2d 1, 5 (1st Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 858 (1978); United States ex rel Herl v. Franzen, 667 F.2d 633 (7th Cir. 1981).

Petitioner would urge this Court to grant the petition in order to settle this question. Petitioner submits that the reasoning of the Ninth Circuit, that a higher standard of competency is required to waive constitutional rights than is necessary to stand trial, should be adopted.

Even if this Court rejects the Ninth Circuit's reasoning for most criminal defendants, petitioner contends that the separate determination and heightened standard of competency are required in those cases, such as this, where the State seeks to impose the ultimate punishment. In capital cases, the competency standard enunciated by this Court in Rees v. Peyton, 384 U.S. 312, 36 S.Ct. 1505, 16 L.Ed.2d 583 (1966) is appropriate and should be applied. Rees involved a defendant convicted of murder and sentenced to death. Although the defendant had cooperated with counsel during trial and appeal, after those efforts were unsuccessful he instructed his attorney to abandon the attempt for certiorari review and to forego further legal proceedings. Petitioner, like the defendant in Rees, is asserting his "right" to demand his own execution by foregoing legal proceedings. In essence, petitioner's decision to forego further proceedings was brought to fruition on April 29, 1986 when the trial court allowed him to waive counsel and proceed pro se. In Rees, it was established that, as a matter of due process, a prisoner cannot be permitted to refuse the assistance of counsel and terminate legal proceedings without an adequate hearing to determine his ability to rationally make such a choice. The standard enunciated in Rees is as follows:

Whether the defendant has capacity to appreciate his position and make a rational choice with respect to continuing or abandoning further litigation or whether he is suffering from mental disease, disorder or defect which may substantially affect his capacity in the premises.

Id., 784 U.S. at 314.

This Court has repeatedly recognized that the death penalty is unique in its finality, and therefore, enhanced due process protections are required. See, e.g., Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. 104, 102 S.Ct. 869, 71 L.Ed.2d 1, 117-118 (1982) (O'Connor, J. concurring); Beck v. Alabama, 447 U.S. 264, 272, 100 S.Ct. 2382, 65 L.Ed.2d 392 (1980); Lockett v. Ohio, 438 U.S. 586, 604-05, 98 S.Ct. 2954 57 L.Ed.2d 973 (1978); see also, State v. Bibb, 702 S.W.2d 462 (Mo. banc 1985); see generally: Radin, Cruel Punishment and Respect for Persons: Super Due Process for Death, 53 S.Cal.L.Rev. 1143 (1980).

An element of the procedural protections American jurisprudence provides those charged with crimes is the allocation of the risk of erroneous decisions. In cases involving the death penalty, the State imposes upon itself the "beyond a reasonable doubt standard" even at the punishment stage of the proceedings, Mo. Rev. Stat. Section 565.030 (1986), because when the State seeks to impose the ultimate punishment, it must be as certain as is humanly possible that no mistakes are made. Hullington v. Missouri, 451 U.S. 430, 441, 446, 101 S.Ct. 1352, 68 L.Ed.2d 270 (1981); Addington v. Texas, 441 U.S. 418, 423-24, 99 S.Ct. 1894, 60 L.Ed.2d 323 (1979). Such heightened due process is lacking in petitioner's case.

The trial court made no finding on the issue of petitioner's competence to waive his constitutional right to counsel and to a trial by jury. Neither the finding of competency to stand trial nor the guilty plea proceedings held in petitioner's case adequately resolved the question of his competency to waive his constitutional right to counsel or his right to a jury trial. His competency to make such waivers was not the issue at the April 16, 1987 competency hearing,⁹ and the trial court never made a finding on that issue. Further, the numerous colloquies preceding the acceptance of petitioner's waiver of counsel and guilty plea cannot suffice to resolve the issue since they consisted of no more than the usual inquiries concerning voluntariness, lack of coercion and understanding of the consequences, and did not extend into the area of petitioner's mental competency at all. Under Rees and Westbrook, it is simply not enough that petitioner was found competent to stand trial. The standard for finding a defendant competent to stand trial in Missouri is less rigorous than is required for a finding that a defendant possesses the mental/emotional ability to make a knowing and voluntary waiver of constitutional rights. Such a heightened standard is critically important here, where the State seeks to impose the ultimate punishment.

Petitioner asserts that the procedure used, and the evidence adduced, by the trial court to determine his competency in this case was inadequate to ensure against error. The finding of competency in this case was made without specific reference to the gravity of the decisions petitioner was making. When it became known to the trial court that more was at stake here than petitioner's "capacity to understand the proceedings against him or to assist in his own defense",¹⁰ a separate inquiry was necessary, and without it, the risk of error is simply too great to be countenanced. The risk that an erroneous decision may have been made in this case becomes clear when the information available to the trial court is set out:

- there were two mental evaluations performed, one based on a one and one half hour interview, the other on a five hour interview;

- one doctor offered his opinion that petitioner was competent not only to stand trial, but also to seek the death penalty, even though he was unaware that that was petitioner's intent at the time of the interview;

- the other doctor refused to state a definite opinion as to petitioner's competency;

- petitioner has a long history of mental illness including suicidal and homicidal tendencies, drug abuse, and a family history of mental illness; and finally,

- petitioner has consistently made determined efforts to guarantee himself the death penalty.

The trial court's action of permitting petitioner to waive his constitutional rights to counsel and his right to a jury trial without a separate determination of petitioner's competency to do so was a denial of petitioner's right to due process. The Missouri Supreme Court's opinion which ratifies that action is in conflict with this Court's decisions in Westbrook v. Arizona, supra and Rees v. Peyton, supra, and the decisions of other federal and state courts which have considered this issue.

The Missouri Supreme Court's disposition of this issue is particularly distressing in light of the findings of Dr. S.D. Parwatikar. Dr. Parwatikar evaluated petitioner pursuant to the Missouri Supreme Court's October 3, 1986 Order (Appendix at 24). According to Parwatikar's report of December 29, 1986 (Appendix 35-40), petitioner was evaluated to determine his competence to waive his right to counsel. Parwatikar concluded that petitioner is "not competent to waive his constitutional rights and represent himself in front of the court". Petitioner submits that it is anomalous for the Missouri Supreme Court to find that petitioner is currently incompetent to represent himself on appeal while at the same time finding that on April 23, 1986 petitioner was competent to waive his right to counsel and that on May 9, 1986 petitioner was competent to waive his right to a jury trial. This Court should grant certiorari to the Missouri Supreme Court in order to settle this issue.

3. THE INFLICTION OF THE DEATH PENALTY ON PETITIONER'S WILKINS WOULD CONSTITUTE EXCESSIVE AND DISPROPORTIONATE PUNISHMENT IN VIOLATION OF THE EIGHTH AND FOURTEENTH AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES IN LIGHT OF THE OVERWHELMING MITIGATING CIRCUMSTANCES IN HIS CASE.

The Eighth Amendment's prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment has long been recognized to include as "a precept of justice that punishment for crime should be graduated and proportioned to the offense." Weems v. United States, 217 U.S. 349, 367 (1910). The proportionality of a particular punishment may be considered not only in the abstract, for example, where the Court considered the propriety of the death penalty for the rape of an adult female, Coker v. Georgia, 433 U.S. 584, 97 S.Ct. 2861, 53 L.Ed.2d 982 (1977), but also in the particular where the Court is asked to determine the propriety of death as a penalty to be applied to a specific defendant for a specific crime. Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 96 S.Ct. 2909, 2925, 49 L.Ed.2d 859 (1975), reh'g denied, 429 U.S. 875 (1976). This Court has on several occasions entertained claims that a particular death sentence was excessive or disproportionate, see, e.g., Woodson v. North Carolina, 438 U.S. 680, 96 S.Ct. 2973, 2991 n. 40, 49 L.Ed.2d 244 (1978); Bell v. Ohio, 438 U.S. 637, 98 S.Ct. 2977, 2981 n. 37, 53 L.Ed.2d 1218 (1978); Lockett v. Ohio, 438 U.S. 586, 98 S.Ct. 2954, 2967 n. 16, 57 L.Ed.2d 973 (1978), but has never been required to decide those claims.

Petitioner presented uncontroverted evidence of at least three factors which, considered together, overwhelmingly mitigate his crime.

First, there is evidence in the record that petitioner has a long-term history of mental illness, which may be genetically based, and which impaired his ability to appreciate the wrongfulness of his conduct and his capacity to conform his conduct to the requirements of law.

Second, the murder was committed while petitioner, who has a history of drug and alcohol abuse, was under the influence of illicit drugs, specifically LSD, a known hallucinogen, which he had ingested at least three times on July 27, 1985, the last being within four hours of the murder. Petitioner had also ingested quantities of alcohol in the period immediately preceding the murder. Petitioner's ability to appreciate the wrongfulness of his conduct and his capacity to conform his conduct to the requirements of law was thus substantially impaired.

Finally, petitioner was only sixteen-years old when he committed the offense.

Petitioner has a long-term history of mental illness, which, according to Dr. Logan manifested itself at least by age five. Sherry Wilkins, petitioner's mother, was the daughter of an alcoholic father and she apparently physically abused petitioner when he was a child. Petitioner's only sibling, Jerrod, suffered severe emotional and mental problems and was ultimately diagnosed as schizophrenic. During petitioner's own psychiatric and psychological evaluations and treatment it was suggested, on at least one occasion, that petitioner's emotional and mental problems have some genetic basis.

Petitioner has been involved in the juvenile justice system since the age of eight. In 1979, he began a series of placements and psychiatric evaluations that continued until 1985. Among the institutions that dealt with petitioner are Tri-County Mental Health Center, Western Missouri Mental Health Center, Butterfield Youth Services, and the Crittenden Center. Petitioner's history as set forth in his records from these institutions shows that he has demonstrated extreme psychoses, manifested by a long-term pattern of suicide attempts. These suicide attempts, petitioner asserts, have culminated in this last, state-aided, attempt to commit suicide.¹¹ Dr. Logan stated that, on several occasions, anti-psychotic medication was prescribed for petitioner which he would not take. Petitioner himself, in the course of the evaluations by the doctor, described his mental state and resulting conduct on the night in question as "automatic" and like a "machine", thus raising the inference that his conscious, reasoning mind had ceased to function at the time of the occurrence. Dr. Logan further indicated that petitioner was a very disturbed boy on the night in question. Petitioner asserts that, because of his mental illness, he lacked the capacity to conform his conduct to the requirements of law.

Also in evidence and uncontested is petitioner's substantial history of drug and alcohol abuse, as well as his use, on the night in question, of both alcohol and LSD, a known hallucinogenic drug. It is uncontested that petitioner first began to use illicit drugs at approximately age five and that his drug and alcohol use increased practically unabated, extending from the use of marijuana to stronger hallucinogenic drugs such as LSD, which was his preferred drug. Petitioner has consistently maintained that, on July 27, 1985, he had had at least three "hits" of acid. Further, during that evening, he had been drinking fairly heavily and had again used LSD; taking the last "hit" of LSD within four hours of the murder. Petitioner asserts that, given his history of drug abuse and, more particularly, his abuse of both alcohol and LSD on the night of July 27, 1985, his ability to conform his conduct to the requirements of law was substantially impaired.

¹¹ Psychologists have recognized, as a typical response of one who wishes to commit suicide, the "suicide-homicide" phenomenon. Under this phenomenon, the desire to commit suicide is effectuated by means of the commission of a homicide that carries with it the likelihood that the death penalty will be imposed. See G. R. Straker, Volunteering for Execution: Competency, Volunteering, and the Possibility of Third Party Intervention, 74 J. of Crime Law & Criminology 800 (1983).

Finally, petitioner notes that, on July 27, 1985, he was a boy of only sixteen years of age. As an adolescent, he was more vulnerable, more impulsive, and less self-disciplined than adults. Crimes committed by youths may be just as harmful to victims as those committed by older persons, but they deserve less punishment because adolescents may have less capacity to control their conduct and to think in long-range terms than adults. Moreover, youth crime as such is not exclusively the offender's fault, offenses by the young also represent a failure of family, school, and the social system, which share responsibility for the development of America's youth.

Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. 104, 116 n. 11, 102 S.Ct. 869, 71 L.Ed.2d 1 (1982), quoting Twentieth Century Fund Task Force on Sentencing Policy Toward Young Offenders, Confronting Youth Crime 7 (1978). Furthermore, the ability of a boy of 16 years to think in moral terms and to engage in moral judgments has not yet fully developed, as it generally has in people of more advanced years. Rest, Davidson & Robbins, Age Trends in Judging Moral Issues, 49 Child Development 263 (1978); Kohlberg, Development of Moral Character and Moral Ideology, in Hoffman & Hoffman, Review of Child Development Research, 404-405 (1964). Petitioner thus asserts that the death penalty was inappropriately imposed and is disproportionate and excessive given petitioner's age and his concomitant lack of capacity to appreciate the wrongfulness of his conduct and to conform his conduct to the requirements of law.¹²

It should also be noted that the existence of these mitigating factors may not have been fully considered by the trial court in assessing death as the appropriate punishment in this case. At the sentencing hearing petitioner had no interest in presenting mitigating evidence and, in fact, objected to testimony which may have provided mitigating evidence. The trial court sustained each of petitioner's objections. This Court should grant certiorari to establish that the death penalty is disproportionate and excessive punishment considering petitioner's age, his cognitive-emotional disorder, and his extensive drug use.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth in the Petition, petitioner respectfully submits that the Court should issue a writ of certiorari to the Missouri Supreme Court in order to review the issues raised herein.

EXHIBIT C

Death sentences and actual executions of persons for crimes committed while under age eighteen are rare but persistent phenomena which have spanned 343 years of American history. They began in Plymouth Colony, Massachusetts, in 1642 and have continued through 1985. Our past practice of executing juveniles reveals surprising facts and policies. Our current practice is no less surprising, absent a presumption that attitudes and policies should have changed after three and one-half centuries. The future seems fairly promising and may provide one small victory for opponents of the death penalty in their dark and dreary war against killing human beings to achieve governmental goals of justice.

Past Executions of Juveniles:

The most current list of verified executions of persons for crimes committed while under age eighteen establishes the total at 271 such persons. The first was Thomas Graunger, age sixteen or seventeen, who was executed in 1642 in Plymouth Colony, Massachusetts, for buggery of cattle. The last, as of this writing, was Charles Rumbaugh, age seventeen at the time of his robbery and murder of a jeweler, executed at age twenty-eight in Huntsville, Texas, on September 11, 1985.

The range of ages at the time of their crimes is from age seventeen down to age ten. The youngest ever at the time of his crime was James Arcane, executed by the federal government in Arkansas on June 26, 1885, for a crime committed when he was only ten years old. In this century, credit for executing the youngest offenders seems to be a contest between Florida and South Carolina. On April 27, 1927, Florida executed Fortune Ferguson, Jr., for a crime he committed when he was only thirteen or fourteen although he had reached age sixteen before being executed. South Carolina executed George Junius Stinney, Jr., on June 16, 1944, for a crime he committed at age fourteen and he was still only fourteen when executed.

Only nine of these 271 executed juveniles were females. Their ages ranged from twelve through seventeen. Beginning in 1786, the last execution of a juvenile girl was in 1912. However, as the appended list indicates, a juvenile girl currently awaits her execution on Georgia's death row.

The races of the offenders and victims in these 271 cases are quite predictable. Of the 271 offenders, 70% were black and 24% were white. For the victims of their crimes, 7% were black and 90% were white. The crimes were primarily murder (81%) but 15% were executed for rape and even a few were executed for attempted rape and attempted robbery.

Present Death Sentences for Juveniles:

As of October 1, 1985, a total of 1,590 persons are under a sentence of death and are imprisoned on the death rows of thirty-two states. Of this total death row population, thirty-two persons are on the death rows of sixteen states for crimes committed while under the age of eighteen. Although under the typical age limit for juvenile court when they committed their crimes, some of them have been on death row for seven to ten years and are now in their mid-twenties. All thirty-two were convicted and sentenced to death for the crime of murder. The age, sex and race characteristics of these thirty-two persons are as follows:

Age at Time of Offense	Sex of Prisoner	Race of Prisoner
age 15 = 4	male = 31	white = 16
age 16 = 6	female = 1	black = 16
age 17 = 22	total = 32	total = 32
total = 32

For the names of the thirty-two presently condemned juveniles and some information about their crimes and sentences, see the list appended to this report.

Future Perspective on the Death Penalty for Juveniles:

The total of thirty-two persons now on death row for crimes committed while under age eighteen is lower than at any time in recent history. In December, 1983, thirty-seven of the 1,289 persons then on death row (2.9%) had been under age eighteen at the time of their crimes. In December, 1984, the number was thirty-three of the 1,464 persons then on death row (2.3%). In October, 1985, the number has fallen to thirty-two of the 1,590 persons now on death row (2.0%).

Thus, even though the total death row population continues to grow by about 175 persons each year, the juvenile death row population continues to shrink. In 1984, only three such juveniles were sentenced to death (Rushing in Louisiana, Brown in North Carolina and Thompson in Oklahoma). For the first ten months of 1985, only two juveniles have been sentenced to death (Ward in Arkansas and Morgan in Florida). Generally, this steady decline in juvenile death sentences stems from the reluctance of prosecutors to bring capital cases and of juries to return capital sentences against juveniles. A large majority of capital punishment states still legally authorize such juvenile death penalties but the system seems more and more unwilling to impose them.

The practice of actually executing such juveniles has similarly declined to almost nil. However, the execution in Texas of Charles Rumbaugh on September 11, 1985, reminds us that the practice has not yet disappeared. Rumbaugh had been only seventeen years old at the time of his crime but had reached the age of twenty-eight when he was finally executed, having spent almost ten years on death row in Texas.

Several state legislatures are being asked to amend their death penalty statutes to establish a minimum for age at time of the crime. The American Bar Association, a fairly conservative organization which has never opposed the death penalty per se, has adopted an official policy opposing the death penalty for crimes committed while under age eighteen. Public opinion surveys as to attitudes about the death penalty continue to find overwhelming support for it in general but majority opposition to the death penalty for crimes committed while under age eighteen.

Death penalty states are ripe for legislative lobbying and litigative argument opposing the death penalty for juveniles. The practice is disappearing even without changes in the law and the law makers can jump on the bandwagon. Even if the prospects are dismal for convincing them to stop killing our adult brothers and sisters in the name of justice, they seem willing to listen to reasons why they should stop killing our children.

overwhelming support for it in general but majority opposition to the death penalty for crimes committed while under age eighteen.

Death penalty states are ripe for legislative lobbying and litigative argument opposing the death penalty for juveniles. The practice is disappearing even without changes in the law and the law makers can jump on the bandwagon. Even if the prospects are dismal for convincing them to stop killing our adult brothers and sisters in the name of justice, they seem willing to listen to reasons why they should stop killing our children.

EXHIBIT D

As of December 20, 1985, a total of thirty-two persons are on death row for crimes committed while under age eighteen. This total of thirty-two condemned persons under the typical juvenile court age is less than at any time in recent history. In December, 1983, thirty-seven of the 1,289 persons then on death row (2.9%) had been under age eighteen at the time of their crimes. In December, 1984, the number was thirty-three of the 1,464 persons then on death row (2.3%). In December, 1985, the number has fallen to thirty-two of the 1,642 persons now on death row (1.9%).

Thus, even though the total death row population continues to grow by about 175 persons each year, the juvenile death row population continues to shrink. In 1984, only three such juveniles were sentenced to death (Rushing in Louisiana, Brown in North Carolina and Thompson in Oklahoma). Similarly, only three juveniles were sentenced to death in 1985 (Ward in Arkansas, and Livingston and Morgan in Florida). Generally, this steady decline in juvenile death sentences stems mostly from the reluctance of prosecutors to bring capital cases and of juries to return capital sentences against juveniles. A large majority of capital punishment states still legally authorize such juvenile death penalties but the criminal justice system seems more and more unwilling to impose them.

The practice of actually executing such juveniles has similarly declined to almost nil. However, the execution in Texas of Charles Rumbaugh on September 11, 1985, reminds us that the practice has not yet disappeared. Rumbaugh had been only seventeen years old at the time of his crime but had reached the age of twenty-eight when he was finally executed, having spent almost ten years on death row in Texas. South Carolina has scheduled the execution of James Terry Roach for January 10, 1986. Like Rumbaugh, Roach was only seventeen at the time of his crime.

As of December 20, 1985, a total of 1,642 persons are under a sentence of death and are imprisoned on the death rows of thirty-two states. Of this total death row population, thirty-two persons are on the death rows of sixteen states for crimes committed while under the age of eighteen. Although under the typical age limit for juvenile court when they committed their crimes, some of them have been on death row for seven to nine years and are now in their late twenties. All thirty-two were convicted and sentenced to death for the crime of murder. The age, sex and race characteristics of these thirty-two persons are as follows:

Age at Time of Offense	Sex of Prisoner	Race of Prisoner
age 15 = 4	male = 31	white = 16
age 16 = 5	female = 1	black = 16
age 17 = 23	total = 32	total = 32
total = 32

The 32 condemned juvenile offenders are as follows:

REVIEW GRANTED

On June 30, 1988, the court granted certiorari in the following 5000 Series cases:

87-5666 HIGH v. ZANT

Capital punishment — Age of accused.

Ruling below (High v. Kemp, CA 11, 819 F2d 988, 41 CrL 2221 (1987)):

Imposition of capital sentence under Georgia death penalty statute, which permits imposition of death penalty on defendants 17 years of age and older, on defendant who was 17 years old at time crime was committed does not violate Eighth and Fourteenth Amendment's prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment.

Question presented: Does execution of accused under age of 18 at time of offense violate evolving standards of decency, and is it cruel and unusual punishment under Eighth and Fourteenth Amendment?

Petition for certiorari filed 10/9/87, by Michael C. Garrett, of Augusta, Ga., and Bradley S. Stetler, of Burlington, Vt.

87-6026 WILKINS v. MISSOURI

Capital punishment — Age of accused.

Ruling below (Mo SupCt, 736 SW2d 409, 42 CrL 2033 (1987)):

Missouri death penalty statute does not violate Eighth and Fourteenth Amendment's prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment; record indicates that trial judge clearly considered all mitigating factors, including fact that defendant was 16 years old at time crime was committed, before he imposed death sentence.

Question presented: Does infliction of death penalty on person who is 16 at time crime was committed constitute cruel and unusual punishment prohibited by Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments?

Petition for certiorari filed 12/8/87, by Lew A. Kollias, of Columbia, Mo., and Nancy A. McKerrow.

The reason for this agreement is that it is possible that the disposition of this first set of motions will considerably effect the number and types of motions which are subsequently filed.

All parties therefore agree that the 3.5 hearing and the hearing on the motions concerning the constitutionality of the death penalty shall be conducted at the same time at the earliest convenience of the Court. The parties agree that the Defendant's

CHRISTOPHER TAIT, being first duly sworn upon oath,
deposes and states:

I am one of the co-counsel appointed to represent the above-named Defendant.

My co-counsel, Thomas A. Bothwell, is out of Yakima on vacation, and is not scheduled to return until the evening of June 6, 1988.

On Friday, May 27, 1988, the Prosecuting Attorney for Yakima County filed a notice which indicated his intent to seek the death penalty in this case, and also in the case of State v. Rice.

Until that date, none of the attorneys involved in this case knew whether we were actually involved in a death penalty case.
I met with Mr. Sullivan personally on Thursday, May 26, 1988, and he indicated to me at that time that he had not made a final decision regarding the death notice.

We now have 6 business days before the deadline set by the Court for filing of pre-trial motions. That is simply not enough time. My review of similar cases in this jurisdiction, and in other states, shows that the preparation and argument of pre-trial motions is one of the most important aspects of the case. Some authorities recommend filing as many as 55 motions before trial.
his will obviously necessitate continuing the pre-trial date of June 20, 1988.

It is therefore respectfully requested that the Court extend the trial date currently set on July 11, 1988.

The undersigned is one of the attorneys appointed to represent the above-named Defendant.

By separate motion, we are asking this Court to authorize the transportation of Defendant, Russell Duane McNeil, to Portland, Oregon, to enable the Defendant's evaluation by Dr. Henry H. Dixon, Jr.

Dr. Dixon's Curriculum Vitae are appended hereto.

The purposes of the requested examination by Dr. Dixon include evaluation of Defendant, and viability of defense of insanity, and assessment of "mitigating factors" to possibly present to the office of the prosecutor for consideration prior to the decision by the prosecution as to whether the death penalty will be requested, as well as preparing for possible "penalty phase" of trial.

RE: PRISONER: RUSSELL McNEIL

Dear Sgt. Couette:

I am offering this letter to you in order to confirm the arrangements which we have discussed, for transporting Mr. McNeil to Portland for an April 5 visit to the psychiatrist. Then, I am asking you to signify your approval and acknowledgment of receipt of this request for arrangements by initialling in the lower left-hand corner of the second page of this letter. Then I in turn will present the original of this letter, with your initialled approval, to the Honorable Judge F. James Gavin as part of my motion for an order approving the transportation of Mr. McNeil for said purpose.

Here are the arrangements which I have made with the doctor's office: Russell McNeil is scheduled to see Dr. Henry H. Dixon, Jr., commencing at approximately noon on Tuesday, April 5, 1988. The doctor's business office and telephone number are: 2250 N.W. Flanders Street, Suite #103, Portland, Oregon, 97210; telephone: (503) 227-1787. The doctor's office has requested that Mr. McNeil arrive by approximately 11:30 a.m. He will then have various tests administered and the psychiatrist expects to personally meet with Mr. McNeil from approximately 1:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. Therefore, we would expect Dr. Dixon to be done with Mr. McNeil, such that he may be returned to Yakima, probably at approximately 4:00 p.m. that day. Thus, for sure, your officers should count on having Mr. McNeil at the doctor's office from at least 11:45 a.m. through approximately 4:00 p.m. on Tuesday, April 5.

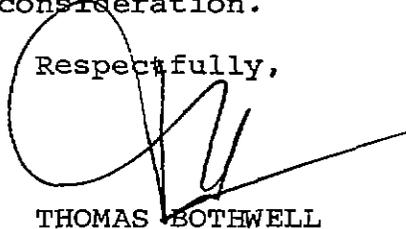

By separate note to you, I will give you the traffic directions to Dr. Dixon's office. The doctor's office has also invited your deputies to telephone his office in the event further directions are necessary.

In your and my telephone conversation, you indicated that with this amount of advance notice prior to April 5, you expected arrangements could and would be made to transport Mr. McNeil for this purpose. I am hereby asking you to confirm this now by initialling below, thereby signifying that arrangements to transport Mr. McNeil for this purpose and to the place and at the times specified will be made, assuming Judge Gavin so orders.

Thank you for your continued consideration.

RE: State of Washington vs. Herbert Rice & Russell McNeil
Yakima County Cause Nos. 88-1-00427-2/88-1-00428-1

Dear Counsel:

Mr. Tait and Ms. Hahn provided me with the documents requested in this morning's hearing for my in camera review. After reviewing those documents, I am convinced my earlier order concerning payment of experts (two for each defendant) was appropriate.

I see no reason to change my mind. The original of this letter will be filed in the Rice file and a copy in the McNeil file.

Very truly yours,

CHRISTOPHER TAIT, being first duly sworn upon oath,
deposes and states:

1. I am one of the attorneys appointed by the Court to represent Defendant Russell Duane McNeil.

2. Following a hearing conducted by the Yakima County
Juvenile Court, jurisdiction was declined in that Court and Mr.
McNeil was remanded to this Court, wherein he is charged with two (2) counts of aggravated murder in the first degree.

3. I have spoken with Prosecuting Attorney, Jeffrey C.
Sullivan, and it is apparent to me from those conversations that Mr. Sullivan is seriously considering requesting the death penalty in this case.

4. I have requested by motion that counsel be allowed to communicate with the Court, in camera and ex parte, concerning the expenditure of public funds to hire forensic experts. This request is being made to allow defense counsel to employ various strategies without revealing the same to the Prosecuting Attorney until we are required to do so by Court Rule or by Court Order. If we were retained Counsel in this matter, we would not be required to reveal our strategies, or the identity of our experts, until such time as those experts were identified as witnesses. This is true, not only according to long standing local custom, but also according to RCW 5.60.060 (2) and State vs. Jones, 99 Wn 2d, 735, 554 P. 2d 1216 (1983).

I, therefore, request that Mr. McNeil be afforded the same opportunities and advantages he would enjoy if his Counsel were retained.
