

THE SUPREME COURT OF WASHINGTON

IN THE MATTER OF THE ADOPTION OF NEW APR 28—LIMITED PRACTICE RULE FOR LIMITED LICENSE LEGAL TECHNICIANS

ORDER

NO. 25700-A-1005

The Practice of Law Board having recommended the adoption of New APR 28—Limited Practice Rule for Limited License Legal Technicians, and the Court having considered the revised rule and comments submitted thereto, and having determined by majority that the rule will aid in the prompt and orderly administration of justice;

Now, therefore, it is hereby

ORDERED:

That we adopt APR 28, the Limited Practice Rule for Limited License Legal Technicians. It is time. Since this rule was submitted to the Court by the Practice of Law Board in 2008, and revised in 2012, we have reviewed many comments both in support and in opposition to the proposal to establish a limited form of legal practitioner. During this time, we have also witnessed the wide and ever-growing gap in necessary legal and law related services for low and moderate income persons.

We commend the Practice of Law Board for reaching out to a wide spectrum of affected organizations and interests and for revising the rule to address meritorious concerns and suggestions. We also thank the many individuals and organizations whose suggestions to the language of the rule have improved it. The Limited License Legal Technician Rule that we adopt today is narrowly tailored to accomplish its stated objectives, includes appropriate training, financial responsibility, regulatory oversight and accountability systems, and incorporates ethical and other requirements designed to ensure competency within the narrow spectrum of the services that Limited License Legal Technicians will be allowed to provide. In adopting this rule we are acutely aware of the unregulated activities of many untrained, unsupervised legal practitioners who daily do harm to “clients” and to the public’s interest in having high quality civil legal services provided by qualified practitioners.

The practice of law is a professional calling that requires competence, experience, accountability and oversight. Legal License Legal Technicians are not lawyers. They are prohibited from engaging in most activities that lawyers have been trained to provide. They are, under the rule adopted today, authorized to engage in very discrete, limited scope and limited function activities. Many individuals will need far more help than the limited scope of law related activities that a limited license legal technician will be able to offer. These people must still seek help from an attorney. But there are people who need only limited levels of assistance that can be provided by non-lawyers trained and overseen within the framework of the regulatory system developed by the Practice of Law Board. This assistance should be available and affordable. Our system of justice requires it.

I. The Rule

Consistent with GR 25 (the Supreme Court rule establishing the Practice of Law Board),¹ the rule² establishes a framework for the licensing and regulation of non-attorneys to engage in discrete activities that currently fall within the definition of the “practice of law” (as defined by GR 24)³ and which are currently subject to exclusive regulation and oversight by this Court. The rule itself authorizes no one to practice. It simply establishes the regulatory framework for the consideration of proposals to allow non-attorneys to practice. As required by GR 25, the rule establishes certification requirements (age, education, experience, pro bono service, examination, etc.),⁴ defines the specific types of activities that a limited license legal technician would be authorized to engage in,⁵ the circumstances under which the limited license legal technician would be allowed to engage in authorized activities (office location, personal services required, contract for services with appropriate disclosures, prohibitions on serving individuals who require services beyond the scope of authority of the limited license legal technician to perform),⁶ a detailed list of prohibitions,⁷ and continuing certification and financial responsibility requirements.⁸

In addition to the rule, we are today acting on the Practice of Law Board's proposal to establish a Limited License Legal Technician Board.⁹ This Board will have responsibility for considering and making recommendations to the Supreme Court with respect to specific proposals for the authorization of limited license legal technicians to engage in some or all of the activities authorized under the Limited License Legal Technician Rule, and authority to oversee the activities of and discipline certified limited license legal technicians in the same way the Washington State Bar Association does with respect to attorneys. The Board is authorized to recommend that limited license legal technicians be authorized to engage in specific activities within the framework of – and limited to – those set forth in the rule itself. We reserve the responsibility to review and approve any proposal to authorize limited license legal technicians to engage in specific activities within specific substantive areas of legal and law related practice, and our review is guided by the criteria outlined in GR 25.

Today we adopt that portion of the Practice of Law Board's proposal which authorizes limited license legal technicians who meet the education, application and other requirements of the rule be authorized to provide limited legal and law related services to members of the public as authorized by this rule.¹⁰

II. The Need for a Limited License Legal Technician Rule

Our adversarial civil legal system is complex. It is unaffordable not only to low income people but, as the 2003 Civil Legal Needs Study documented, moderate income people as well (defined as families with incomes between 200% and 400% of the Federal Poverty Level).¹¹ One example of the need for this rule is in the area of family relations which are governed by a myriad of statutes. Decisions relating to changes in family status (divorce, child residential placement, child support, etc.) fall within the exclusive province of our court system. Legal practice is required to conform to specific statewide and local procedures, and practitioners are required to use standard forms developed at both the statewide and local levels. Every day across this state, thousands of unrepresented (pro se) individuals seek to resolve important legal matters in our courts. Many of these are low income people who seek but cannot obtain help from an overtaxed, underfunded civil legal aid system. Many others are moderate income people for whom existing market rates for legal services are cost-prohibitive and who, unfortunately, must search for alternatives in the unregulated marketplace.

Recognizing the difficulties that a ballooning population of unrepresented litigants has created, court managers, legal aid programs and others have embraced a range of strategies to provide greater levels of assistance to these unrepresented litigants. Innovations include the establishment of courthouse facilitators in most counties, establishment of courthouse-based self-help resource centers in some counties, establishment of neighborhood legal clinics and other volunteer-based advice and consultation programs, and the creation of a statewide legal aid self-help website. As reflected most recently in a study conducted by the Washington Center for Court Research,¹² some of these innovations – most particularly the creation of courthouse facilitators – have provided some level of increased meaningful support for pro se litigants.

But there are significant limitations in these services and large gaps in the type of services for pro se litigants. Courthouse facilitators serve the courts, not individual litigants. They may not provide individualized legal advice to family law litigants. They are not subject to confidentiality requirements essential to the practitioner/client relationship. They are strictly limited to engaging in “basic services” defined by GR 27.¹³ They have no specific educational/certification requirements, and often find themselves providing assistance to two sides in contested cases. Web-based self-help materials are useful to a point, but many litigants require additional one-on-one help to understand their specific legal rights and prerogatives and make decisions that are best for them under the circumstances.

From the perspective of pro se litigants, the gap places many of these litigants at a substantial legal disadvantage and, for increasing numbers, forces them to seek help from unregulated, untrained, unsupervised “practitioners.” We have a duty to ensure that the public can access affordable legal and law related services, and that they are not left to fall prey to the perils of the unregulated market place.

III. Specific Concerns and Responses

A number of specific issues that have been raised both in support of and in opposition to this rule deserve additional discussion and response.

Proponents have suggested that the establishment and licensing of limited license legal technicians should be a primary strategy to close the Justice Gap for low and moderate income people with family related legal problems. While there will be some benefit to pro se litigants in need of limited levels of legal help, we must be careful not to create expectations that adoption of this rule is not intended to achieve.

By design, limited license legal technicians authorized to engage in discrete legal and law related activities will not be able to meet that portion of the public's need for help in family law matters that requires the provision of individualized legal representation in complex, contested family law matters. Such representation requires the informed professional assistance of attorneys who have met the educational and related requirements necessary to practice law in Washington. Limited purpose practitioners, no matter how well trained within a discrete subject matter, will not have the breadth of substantive legal knowledge or requisite practice skills to apply professional judgment in a manner that can be consistently counted upon to meet the public's need for competent and skilled legal representation in complex legal cases.

On the other hand, and depending upon how it is implemented, the authorization for limited license legal technicians to engage in certain limited legal and law related activities holds promise to help reduce the level of unmet need for low and moderate income people who have relatively uncomplicated family related legal problems and for whom some level of individualized advice, support and guidance would facilitate a timely and effective outcome.

Some opposing the rule believe that limited licensing legal technicians to engage in certain family related legal and law related activities poses a threat to the practicing family law bar.

First, the basis of any regulatory scheme, including our exercise of the exclusive authority to determine who can practice law in this state and under what circumstances, must start and end with the public interest; and any regulatory scheme must be designed to ensure that those who provide legal and law related services have the education, knowledge, skills and abilities to do so. Protecting the monopoly status of attorneys in any practice area is not a legitimate objective.

It is important to observe that members of the family law bar provide high levels of public and pro bono service. In fact, it is fair to say that the demands of pro bono have fallen disproportionately on members of the family law bar. As pointed out in the comments to the Practice of Law Board's proposal, young lawyers and others have been working for years to develop strategies to provide reduced fee services to moderate income clients who cannot afford market-rate legal help. Over the past year, these efforts have been transformed into the Washington State Bar Association's newly established Moderate Means program,¹⁴ an initiative which holds substantial promise to deliver greater access to legal representation for greater numbers of individuals between 200% and 400% of the federal poverty guideline being provided services at affordable rates.

In considering the impact that the limited licensing of legal technicians might have on the practicing family law bar it is important to push past the rhetoric and focus on what limited license legal technicians will be allowed to do, and what they cannot do under the rule. With limited exception,¹⁵ few private attorneys make a living exclusively providing technical legal help to persons in simple family law matters. Most family law attorneys represent clients on matters that require extended levels of personalized legal counsel, advice and representation – including, where necessary, appearing in court – in cases that involve children and/or property.

Stand-alone limited license legal technicians are just what they are described to be – persons who have been trained and authorized to provide technical help (selecting and completing forms, informing clients of applicable procedures and timelines, reviewing and explaining pleadings, identifying additional documents that may be needed, etc.) to clients with fairly simple legal law matters. Under the rule we adopt today, limited license legal technicians would not be able to represent clients in court or contact and negotiate with opposing parties on a client's behalf. For these reasons, the limited licensing of legal technicians is unlikely to have any appreciable impact on attorney practice.

The Practice of Law Board and other proponents argue that the limited licensing of legal technicians will provide a substantially more affordable product than that which is available from attorneys, and that this will make legal help more accessible to the public. Opponents argue that it will be economically impossible for limited license legal technicians to deliver services at less cost than attorneys and thus, there is no market advantage to be achieved by creating this form of limited practitioner.

No one has a crystal ball. It may be that stand-alone limited license legal technicians will not find the practice lucrative and that the cost of establishing and maintaining a practice under this rule will require them to charge rates close to those of attorneys. On the other hand, it may be that economies can be achieved that will allow these very limited services to be offered at a market rate substantially below those of attorneys. There is simply no way to know the answer to this question without trying it.

That said, if market economies can be achieved, the public will have a source of relatively affordable technical legal help with uncomplicated legal matters. This may reduce some of the demand on our state's civil legal aid and pro bono systems and should lead to an increase in the quality and consistency of paperwork presented by pro se litigants.

Further, it may be that non-profit organizations that provide social services with a family law component (e.g., domestic violence shelters; pro bono programs; specialized legal aid programs) will elect to add limited license legal technicians onto their staffs. The cost would be much less than adding an attorney and could enable these programs to add a dimension to their services that will allow for the limited provision of individualized legal help on many cases — especially those involving domestic violence. Relationships might be extended with traditional legal aid programs or private pro bono attorneys so that there might be sufficient attorney supervision of the activities of the limited license legal technicians to enable them to engage in those activities for which “direct and active” attorney supervision is required under the rule.

Some have suggested that there is no need for this rule at all, and that the WSBA's Moderate Means Program will solve the problem that the limited licensing of legal technicians is intended to address. This is highly unlikely. First, there are large rural areas throughout the state where there are few attorneys. In these areas, many attorneys are barely able to scrape by. Doing reduced fee work through the Moderate Means program (like doing pro bono work) will not be a high priority.

Second, limited licensing of legal technicians complements, rather than competes with, the efforts WSBA is undertaking through the Moderate Means program. We know that there is a huge need for representation in contested cases where court appearances are required. We know further that pro se litigants are at a decided disadvantage in such cases, especially when the adverse party is represented.¹⁶ Limited license legal technicians are not permitted to provide this level of assistance; they are limited to performing mostly ministerial technical/legal functions. Given the spectrum of unmet legal needs out there, Moderate Means attorneys will be asked to focus their energy on providing the help that is needed most – representing low and moderate income people who cannot secure necessary representation in contested, often complex legal proceedings.

Opponents of the rule argue that the limited licensing of legal technicians presents a threat to clients and the public. To the contrary, the authorization to establish, regulate and oversee the limited practice of legal technicians within the framework of the rule adopted today will serve the public interest and protect the public. The threat of consumer abuse already exists and is, unfortunately, widespread. There are far too many unlicensed, unregulated and unscrupulous “practitioners” preying on those who need legal help but cannot afford an attorney. Establishing a rule for the application, regulation, oversight and discipline of non-attorney practitioners establishes a regulatory framework that reduces the risk that members of the public will fall victim to those who are currently filling the gap in affordable legal services.

Unlike those operating in the unregulated marketplace, limited license legal technicians will practice within a carefully crafted regulatory framework that incorporates a range of safeguards necessary to protect the public. The educational requirements are rigorous. Unlike attorneys, legal technicians are required to demonstrate financial responsibility in ways established by the Board. There is a testing requirement to demonstrate professional competency to practice, contracting and disclosure requirements are significant, and there will be a robust oversight and disciplinary process. This rule protects the public.

Another concern that has been raised is that attorneys will be called upon to underwrite the costs of regulating non-attorney limited license legal technicians against whom they are now in competition for market share. This will not happen. GR 25 requires that any recommendation to authorize the limited practice of law by non-attorneys demonstrate that “[t]he costs of regulation, if any, can be effectively underwritten within the context of the proposed regulatory regime.” The Practice of Law Board’s rule expressly provides that the ongoing cost of regulation will be borne by the limited license legal technicians themselves, and will be collected through licensing and examination fees. Experience with the Limited Practice Board demonstrates that a self-sustaining system of regulation can be created and sustained. The Court is confident that the WSBA and the Practice of Law Board, in consultation with this Court, will be able to develop a fee-based system that ensures that the licensing and ongoing regulation of limited license legal technicians will be cost-neutral to the WSBA and its membership.

IV. Conclusion

Today’s adoption of APR 28 is a good start. The licensing of limited license legal technicians will not close the Justice Gap identified in the 2003 Civil Legal Needs Study. Nor will it solve the access to justice crisis for moderate income individuals with legal needs. But it is a limited, narrowly tailored strategy designed to expand the provision of legal and law related services to members of the public in need of individualized legal assistance with non-complex legal problems.

The Limited License Legal Technician Rule is thoughtful and measured. It offers ample protection for members of the public who will purchase or receive services from limited license legal technicians. It offers a sound opportunity to determine whether and, if so, to what degree the involvement of effectively trained, licensed and regulated non-attorneys may help expand access to necessary legal help in ways that serve the justice system and protect the public.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED:

- (1) That a new rule, APR 28, as attached hereto is adopted.
- (2) That the new rule will be published in the Washington Reports and will become effective September 1, 2012.

No. 25700-A-
DISSENT TO ORDER

OWENS, J. (dissenting)—During my years on the Washington Supreme Court, I have not once authored a dissent to an administrative order of this court. I depart from that custom today because I have very strong feelings that our court's decision to adopt the new Admission to Practice Rule, APR 28, is ill-considered, incorrect, and most of all extremely unfair to the members of the Washington State Bar Association (WSBA).

Let me quickly add that by expressing disagreement with the court's approval of this new rule, I am not suggesting that the legal needs of all persons in this state are currently being met. Like my judicial colleagues, I know that there is a great unmet need for legal services and we in the judiciary and the legal profession have an obligation to look for appropriate ways to expand the availability of legal assistance to the public.

My opposition to the board's work product should, therefore, not be considered disagreement with the goal the Practice of Law Board was seeking to achieve—expanding the availability of legal services to individuals who are confronted with legal problems. Rather, my opposition to the rule is based on the fact this rule and its attendant regulations impose an obligation on the members of the WSBA to underwrite the considerable cost of establishing and maintaining what can only be characterized as a mini bar association within the present WSBA. Assuming our court has the inherent authority to create this new profession of legal technicians, I do not believe that we possess the authority to tax the lawyers of this state to pay "all of the expenses reasonably and necessarily incurred" by the Non-Lawyer Practice Commission, a body which comes into being pursuant to the rule and regulations. See Regulation 3(G). Pertinent to this point, I note that it is generally acknowledged that it will likely cost several hundred thousand dollars to set up the commission that will oversee this new profession of legal technicians. We have not been informed that the WSBA presently has sufficient money within its treasury to underwrite this considerable expense and I have significant doubts that it has an abundance of cash on hand. In fact, in light of the dues rollback, the opposite is true. Although I recognize that this court's order delays implementation of the new rule until January 1, 2013, I think it is unrealistic to assume that the WSBA will realize any large windfall of funds in 2013. Consequently, the only way the WSBA will be able to fulfill the considerable financial obligation this court has imposed upon it is to either reduce the amount it budgets for the programs and services it presently supports or increase the yearly dues of its members. Either way you look at it, this court is imposing a tax on lawyers.

The APR 28 regulations suggest that the APR 28 program will eventually support itself through certification fees. In that regard, we have been advised that something in the order of $200,000 may eventually be generated by these fees. In this day and age, $200,000 does not go very far and it is hard for me to see how this APR 28 program with its testing, certification, continuing education, and discipline provisions can be accommodated with a yearly budget of that amount. The hoped for self-sufficiency of the program will, in my view, depend to a large extent on the numbers of persons achieving legal technician status under the rule. Although this court was earlier led to believe that initially there would be certification of legal technicians only in family law matters, the rule and regulations this court has approved provide the Practice of Law Board with unbridled discretion to recommend to the Supreme Court the areas, within the full range of practice areas encompassed by the GR 24 definition of the practice of law, in which legal technicians can practice.¹ I sense that the Practice of Law Board realized that there is uncertainty about whether the certification fees will produce sufficient funds to underwrite the annual cost of the legal technician program and, thus, provided that funding for the commission will be generated by certification fees “as well as commitments from the WSBA.” Regulation 3(G).²

The unfairness of imposing what seems beyond doubt a significant obligation on the lawyers of this state is made all the more manifest by the fact that in recent years, the WSBA has undertaken, with the encouragement of this court, a number of efforts designed to address the very problems the new APR 28 purports to mitigate. I am speaking of (1) increased encouragement for Washington lawyers to provide pro-bono service and the provision of free and low cost training for lawyers who wish to provide such service; (2) the highly successful home foreclosure legal aid project, which helps low and moderate income persons deal with the threat of home foreclosure; (3) a major

¹The court’s order contains a statement that “we adopt the portion of the Practice of Law Board’s proposal which authorizes legal technicians . . . to provide limited legal and law related services to members of the public in certain defined family law related areas. It is noteworthy that the proposed rule, APR 28, and regulations do not contain the words “family law.”

²The court’s order expresses confidence that the fee based system will be “cost neutral.” Perhaps it will be self-sufficient someday, but this conclusion does not address the significant start up costs which the court order requires the WSBA to pay.

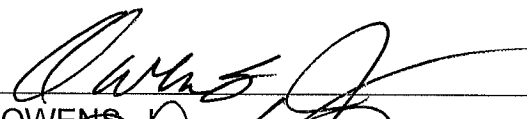

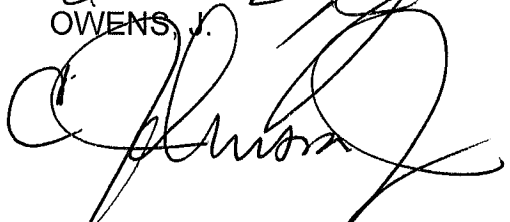

one-time contribution by the WSBA of cash to the Legal Foundation of Washington in order to offset the impact of reduced Interest on Lawyers Trust Accounts revenues coming to the foundation, a contribution which leveraged a $3 million donation from the Gates Foundation to the Legal Foundation of Washington; (4) the statewide moderate means program, which is designed to assist individuals who need the assistance of a lawyer to obtain those services at a reduced cost; and (5) a check off on the annual license fee for lawyers, suggesting an annual contribution of at least $50 by lawyers to the Campaign for Equal Justice to help ensure equal access to justice for all Washingtonians regardless of financial standing.

The WSBA is not required to undertake any of the aforementioned initiatives but it has done so voluntarily with great zeal and enthusiasm endeavoring to address the public's legal needs. Furthermore, all of this was done at great expense to the WSBA. Indeed the WSBA's contribution of $1.5 million to the Legal Foundation of Washington in 2009 was a truly heroic gesture but one which made a major dent in the cash reserves the WSBA had built up over the years. Whether the obligation this court is now imposing on the WSBA will result in eliminating or curtailing any of these programs and initiatives, no one knows for certain. If, however, that is the result of our action, it would be a sad day for the WSBA and the many persons positively affected by the bar's considerable efforts.

Finally, I wish to observe that an impartial observer might wonder why the Supreme Court does not assume responsibility for funding implementation of APR 28. After all, the fact that the legal needs of the public are not being met is a problem that affects the entire community, not just a segment of our state's population like its attorneys at law. Such a question would not be farfetched because in a number of states the expense associated with the admission and disciplining of lawyers is subsumed within the budget of the highest court in those states. I suspect, though, that if this court had been asked to assume financial responsibility for establishing and administering this major program for certification of legal technicians, with the vague promise that the program may someday be self-supporting, we would have concluded that we presently do not have sufficient funds within our budget with which to undertake this responsibility. Is it fair or equitable for this court to eschew assuming financial responsibility for the program in this time of economic distress, and instead impose the obligation on all of the state's lawyers, many of whom are feeling adverse affects of the current downturn of the economy? I say no. Because the majority by its order says yes, I dissent from the order.

DATED at Olympia, Washington this ^{4th} ~~14~~ day of ~~June~~ 2012.
