Dear Ms. Faulk,

I have a comment about

* Doing away with a three-month grace period for lawyers to become compliant with their MCLE requirements after the end of their actual reporting period.

It seems like there will always be attorneys who get behind on CLE and forget they're behind, until they get their bar dues notice at the end of the year, which they may not read as soon as received anyway. I'm just wondering whether a "late fee" would provide the appropriate amount of discouragement to be late, while less punitive.

Thank you,
Ann Galbraith
