Subject: Legal Technicians

To Whom It May Concern:

Lawyers are lawyers. They alone are entitled to practice law. All others doing so are engaging in UPL (Unauthorized Practice of Law). Letting "legal technicians" practice even on a limited basis creates havoc by opening Pandora's Box for people looking to cast doubt on the "technician's" ability. I understand the need that appears to be met by allowing "legal technicians", but the cost in the future does not outweigh their benefit. I have been practicing for over 20 years. People look to lawyers to practice law. Simple, Straightforward and Concise.

My comments would be against "legal technicians" in all aspects.

Sincerely,

Matthew R. Kamula
