COURT OF APPEALS DIV 1
STATE OF WASHINGTON

VERELLEN, C.J. — A jury convicted Aaron Trotter of assault with a deadly weapon in the second degree. Trotter seeks reversal of his conviction, arguing that the jury instruction provided at his trial unconstitutionally defined “reasonable doubt.” The trial court instructed the jury using the Washington pattern jury instruction on reasonable doubt, WPIC 4.01, stating in part,

A reasonable doubt is one for which a reason exists and may arise from the evidence or lack of evidence. It is such a doubt as would exist in the mind of a reasonable person after fully, fairly, and carefully considering all of the evidence or lack of evidence. If, from such consideration, you have an abiding belief in the truth of the charge, you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt.^[1]

Trotter claims that defining a reasonable doubt as “one for which a reason exists” erroneously tells jurors that they must be able to articulate a reason for any doubt. He thus argues WPIC 4.01 unconstitutionally undermines the presumption of innocence and shifts the burden of proof to the defendant.

Our Supreme Court has mandated that an instruction in the words of WPIC 4.01 be given in all cases² and recently reaffirmed the constitutionality of the challenged instruction.³ We have recognized this controlling authority.⁴ The trial court did not err by doing the same.

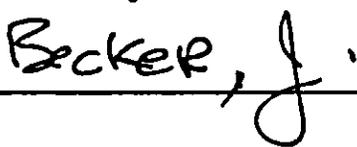

In any event, WPIC 4.01 does not require jurors to articulate a reason. “[A] doubt for which a reason exists” is not the same as “a doubt for which a reason can be given.”⁵ None of Trotter’s arguments are persuasive.

We affirm.⁶
