A. ARGUMENT RE: STATE v. JOHNSON

1. THE STATE DOES NOT DISTINGUISH JOHNSON OR DEMONSTRATE WHY IT DOES NOT CONTROL THIS CASE.

The State in no way distinguishes this case from the facts of State v. Johnson, ___ Wn. App. ___, 289 P.3d 662 (2012). It acknowledges the instruction defining recklessness was the same as that given and found erroneous in Johnson, State v. Harris, 164 Wn. App. 377, 263 P.3d 1276 (2011), and State v. Peters, 163 Wn. App. 836, 261 P.3d 199 (2011). Supp'l Br. of Resp. at 9.

Instead, the State argues the Court of Appeals was "in error" in its Johnson opinion; and Division Two was equally in error in State v. Harris.

While the State provides a painstaking analysis, it candidly acknowledges that the Johnson Court considered and rejected its argument. Johnson, 289 P.3d at 672. However, it did not reject it "out of hand." Supp'l Br. of Resp. at 7. It explained quite patiently why it made a different decision in Johnson than in State v. Holzkecht, 157 Wn. App. 754, 238 P.3d 1233 (2010), review denied, 170 Wn.2d 1029 (2011). The Court thus gave the argument and analysis its considered attention before rejecting it. Its reasoned distinction from Holzkecht applies equally to this case. See Reply Brief of Appellant at 7-8.

The State has filed a Motion for Reconsideration in Johnson. However, that motion addresses an issue regarding the unlawful imprisonment conviction, not the assault conviction. The State did not challenge the Court's opinion on the issue of the recklessness instruction.

There being no distinction, Johnson controls the issue in this case.

2. STATUTORY LANGUAGE DOES NOT SAVE THE INSTRUCTION IN THIS CONTEXT.

The State quotes many cases on the general rule that statutory language in instructions is an accurate statement of law. Many cases, however, have turned on specific facts requiring more specific language than the statute to instruct the jury completely and accurately. See Reply Brief of Appellant at 4-6.

Johnson, Harris, and Peters all stem from State v. Gamble, 154 Wn.2d 457, 467-68, 114 P.3d 646 (2005). There the Supreme Court held the definition of recklessness in a manslaughter case must specify the mental state required to prove the crime: knowing of and disregarding the specific risk of death.

The Committee that prepares the Washington Pattern Instructions - Criminal recognized the effect of Gamble. It modified the instruction on recklessness and alerted the bar to consider the specific legal issue. 11 Wash. Prac., WPIC 10.03, Comment (3d Ed.). Reply Brief of Appellant at 5-6. If the Committee perceived the issue, as well as Divisions One and Two of this Court, Johnson cannot be all wrong.

B. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, in the Brief of Appellant, and in the Reply Brief of Appellant, this Court should reverse this conviction.

DATED this 12th day of February, 2013.

Respectfully submitted,
