Dear Supreme Court,

It is my understanding that you are considering phasing out the LLLT.

LLLTs are like nurse practitioners are to medical doctors. As you know they are trained and experienced professionals and are prepared and authorized to competently handle a wide range of family law needs for people who act without lawyers; perhaps because they lack funds.

This is about whether children should be allocated in custody battles to the highest spender (or perhaps the lesser honest person).

As I see it, LLLTs help level the field for those who cannot afford more expensive counsel.

Please keep the LLLT designation strong.

With palms together,

Genjo
