My child is taking a basic sociology class at the University of Washington. The professor asked "Why do we need laws?" As we discussed some possible answers, my child concluded that the answer is, laws are needed so people know what are the right (and wrong) things to do. Without laws, we humans, we Americans, we Washingtonians, don't all agree as to what is right and wrong.

So why then do we need lawyers? Lawyers serve people, untrained in law, who believe they have been wronged when someone else broke the law. This can happen to anyone and all people should have access to affordable legal services.

The Limited Legal License Technical program is one way to help people gain access to legal services. Please continue to support and promote the Limited Legal License Technical program.
