This is my comment to keep the current rule.

The majority of clients in the court system are indigent and h to go to court a lot would make it hard for people to go to work or school or care for children or others who need their help. For many of these clients transportation is a huge issue and having to go to court a lot would be hard for people without cars or money for taxis.

If people have to go to court a lot, there will be more arrest warrants for missing court potentially over crowding jails and court calendars when attorneys are in good contact with their clients they just have difficulties appearing so frequently.

Sincerely,

Dominique Crisp
